Into Tomorrow

THIS January snow is like a lingering memory. It carries the marks of yesterday's traffic, the varied patterns of tires, the tracks of animals, the footprints of children walking home from school, the trail of a sled pulled crazily back and forth by happy boys.

The covered bridge is like a doorway opening into tomorrow. For a while the memories linger and we try to carry all our yesterdays with us into the new year. But sooner or later those images, like snow in the grip of a warm sun, melt away. And, however much we might like to carry the past year with us, we are bound to leave it behind when we take to the road. Though the sunlight melts, it also brings new life, new hope, new opportunities with each new day, new promises with each new year. And He who is our sun—Jesus Christ the same yesterday, today and forever—is the one who also calls us to "walk in newness of life."

READERS WRITE . . . to the editor

The Gospel Messenger welcomes letters commenting on editorials, articles and news. Letters should be brief and brotherly.

Alcohol Is the Cause

The article on "The Psychological Basis of Alcoholism," by DeForest L. Strunk has many excellent statements in it and I can approve those statements wholeheartedly. But when Mr. Strunk says, "Alcohol does not cause alcoholism," he is, I think, in grievous error. I have before me a book written by an M.D. for medical practictioners. In this book there is a chapter on "Intoxications" which lists a large number of diseases caused by poisons. In each case a certain definite poison is mentioned as a cause of that particular disease. Two of those diseases are alcoholism and lead poisoning. In brief, the author says the cause of alcoholism is alcohol and the cause of lead poisoning is lead. Stated in another way, if no lead gets into the system there can be no lead poisoning and also there can be no alcoholism if no alcohol gets into the system.

If a person is a habitual user of alcoholic beverages, even in small quantities, frustration or maladjustment may cause him or her to imbibe more alcohol and may even lead to a final stage of alcoholism. Recently I heard a reformed alcoholic state that he was a user of alcoholic beverages in moderate quantities before the depression. During the depression he saw his business going to pot and he said that caused him to increase his drinking until he became an alcoholic. In this case frustration was a contributing cause, but not the primal cause, of alcoholism as the man admitted.

Mr. Strunk has put the cart before the horse as he practically admits in a later statement where he says, "Many people with personality difficulties will turn to other artificial solutions for their problems such as drugs and overzealous organizations." In short, people who are habitual users of alcohol turn to alcohol for escape when they are frustrated but those who have not previously used alcohol quite often turn to other means of escape from frustrations but some may turn to alcohol. . . .

The sad part about all this emphasis on alcoholism and the attempt to blame inherent neurotic tendencies and frustrations for alcoholism is that people lose sight of the main problem which is to prevent the manufacture and sale of alcohol for beverage purposes. That, of course, is just what the brewers and distillers and the purveyors of the poison want. . . .

All attempts at salvage of alcoholics is to be commended but if the churches of the United States limit their work to salvage operations, drunkenness will continue to increase until the United States goes down to destruction and possibly takes our entire civilization along with it. It is time for the church to be up and doing with regard to preventing the use of alcoholic beverages as well as all other dangerous narcotics. It is time the ministers of the gospel lead out in this crusade. . . . I thoroughly approve of all Dr. Strickler said in his letter. — John Woodard, San Dimas, Calif.

Pray It Down

There has been a growing concern in my heart over the condition of the world for some time and I believe the answer lies in a real spiritual revival of the salvation of Jesus Christ. The only way to have such a revival is to pray it down. So for several weeks I have been spending some time each day in prayer for this revival. I try to make it between nine and ten o'clock each morning. Now I would like all fellow ministers and as many laymen as will to join me in this prayer. Let us pray first for ourselves that we might be what God wants us to be; then pray that God will send a revival that will shake the very pillars of this earth and let that revival begin in our own hearts.

If you will join me, please drop me a card. I would like to know how large our prayer circle will grow. — A. L. Dixon, R. 5, Goshen, Ind.

Alliance Urges Ban on "Sunday Politics"

The banning of Sunday politics was urged by the Lord's Day Alliance of the United States in letters to the chairman of the national committee of each political party. The letters were signed by Melvin M. Forney, general secretary of the Alliance. He said, "More and more political campaigns are ultilizing Sunday, the Lord's Day, as a time for political campaigning. We believe this practice to be detrimental to our political life and not in the best tradition of the American way."

God goes on season after season brushing our landscapes with the fresh whiteness of snow, the delicate colors of springtime, with summer's full-blown harvests and autumn's mellow richness--all the miracle of life about us.

WHY I BELIEVE IN GOD

Inez Long

SOME weeks ago a young person asked me, "Why do you believe in God?" My answer was simple. I believe in God because I need him. I need a relationship with a living spirit which makes me feel at home in life. I believe in God because I have found him to be, not so much a fact to be discovered, but a Person to be experienced.

Only people who need God will find him. Many people find satisfaction in a well-outlined, moral pattern of life, operating on the golden rule with its rewards of a fairly predictable nature. Many find poetry enough, poetry which speaks to the soul as one looks up into the blue of the high-pitched tent of night, pricked with a million self-lighting stars. But when I look at the deep unknown within my own life, waiting to be lighted with a wisdom and faith beyond my own, I need a Companion. And when I search for life fuller than I have known, then I need the God who beckons me with the words, "I have come that you might have life, and have it more abundantly. Seek and you shall find. Knock and it shall be opened to you."

I believe there is a God because I need someone to thank. One of the most satisfying skills of life, and one of its highest arts, is to be able to express appreciation. A word of appreciation is never out of place. Someone has said that the two ugliest words in the English language are of course. Just taking things for granted. A high school girl has clothes comparing favorably with those of the gang which means so much to her. A high school boy has the family car for use on week ends. Parents gave these, of course. Parents, being parents, just do things like that! A wife spends money for lovely things, money which her husband worked for her to have. Of course, he does. Husbands are just like that! A husband comes home for dinner in the evening, to find his wife a dainty and cheery hostess, lighting a table of loveliness and fine manners in the glow of the candlelight. Of course, she does! All of these small things we somehow take for granted. Yet in every case someone chose to do the generous thing, the kind thing, in order to spread happiness and to make life a finer and more splendid place in which to live.

When we consider that those around us are free to bring shame on us, to discredit us and to make life miserable for us, and yet do not do so, then we ought to give thanks. People with rich hearts are those who have learned that all of life is a gift. For if those around us are free to make our lives distraught and meaningless, how much more so is the all-powerful God. Yet he makes his rain to fall on the just and the unjust. He goes on, season after season, brushing our landscapes with the fresh whiteness of the virgin snow, the delicate pinks and greens of the wispy springtime, the brilliant reds of summer's full-blown harvests and the mellow golds of autumn's richness. Thus life goes on for us all, a free gift. The tang of air, the warmth of sun, the dew of heaven—all these breathe new life into us with each breath. And when I feel the miracle of life all about me, tingling at my very fingertips, then I know there is a God. I need someone to thank for life itself.

I believe in God also because I need someone to trust. Like a small child, dependent on someone who knows better than I the ways of life, I need One who is wise, just and loving. I need someone to trust when my own security falls away like a pretentious mask and I know myself to be a fragile sliver of life, blindly picking my way through a universe whose laws are still largely undefined by man because they are unknown to man. To live in such a house of mystery requires faith in a gracious and wise landlord. I need someone to trust.

I need someone whose wisdom I can trust. Thomas Edison said that no man knows more than the millionth part of anything. Scientists tell us that a star exploded in the sky twenty million years ago, and that the light from the star is just now reaching the earth. Traveling 186,000 miles per second, the light has just now penetrated to the lens of earth's telescopes! "Such knowledge is too much for me," cried the psalmist. He knew, as wise men have always known, that God is the beginning of wisdom, the source of all knowledge. I need a God whose wisdom I can trust, who knows the unknown and who will show me, through humility of mind, what I need to know about the laws of this universe and how we can use them for man's well-being.

I believe in God because I need someone who is just, in whom to lay my confidence. When the petty snarls of disappointments come to us, it is refreshing to believe with the Old Testament writer, "The Judge of the earth can do no wrong." The immediate injustices of one's own small world, the sufferings of the innocent and the escape of the guilty, the stupidity of the good and the shrewdness of the wicked, these can eat out a man's heart unless he has faith that God's judgment is final, not ours. The wheels of God grind slowly but they grind exceedingly fine.

When a man can say that about the injustices of the world in which he lives, then shame and trial are turned to personal victory. When one trusts in God that he is just, the old feeling, "Something must be done about it," is set at rest. This does not mean that red-blooded men of courage do not roll up their shirt sleeves and put the large muscles of moral force to work against injustice. But when an impasse is reached and nothing can be done without losing a personal, spiritual victory, it is better to stop trying to win the case and to leave the matter up to God. He will make even the wrath of men to praise him.

I believe in God, lastly, because I need someone who is loving. Now love has had many tawdry associations, from the flimsy, Hollywood type of emotional explosion to the self-sacrificing parental-child relationships which do not bring free and creative life at all. But to enjoy a relationship with someone who gives approval to a person, just as he is, bringing confidence to one who has not attained, so that he can stand without embarrassment in the presence of one who has, himself, completely attained—this is to know the high pleasures of experiencing a loving Person.

As a minister's wife I have discovered that sometimes neighbors and parishioners do not like for a minister to learn to know

THIS NEW-DAWNING YEAR

ORA W. GARBER

Will this new-dawning year be truly new,
Or shall we live the old year once again?
Shall we permit old attitudes, old fear
To hold us on the level of last year,
To keep us from the deeds that we should do,
And stay the progress God would grant to man?

Our world needs men whose hearts are strong and true,
Old wrongs to right, wide human chasms to span.
Before us bright horizons spread afar;
Will this new-dawning year be truly new,
Or shall we live the old year once again?

The Courage to Be Patient

PERHAPS it was just a coincidence. On the thirteenth anniversary of Pearl Harbor a newspaper column carried a quote that caught our attention. President Eisenhower had just told a press conference that Americans should not be goaded into warlike actions. It would have been easy, as the result of recent provocations, to beat the drums that encourage conflict. The Chinese Communists had sentenced thirteen Americans to prison as spies. American planes were shot down near Japan. An influential senator called for a blockade of Red China. But the President chose to face another direction. He said, "The hard way is to have the courage to be patient."

In our troubled world one hope of averting war rests in the patient but persistent attempts of leaders to find peaceful ways of settling disputes. The United Nations, with all its limitations, does provide a forum for public debate on issues and offers channels by which negotiation can proceed. The missing element, however, has often been the spirit of patience. Too many of our spokesmen have aired their own animosities openly and recklessly—and they have endangered the lives of millions around the world. This is no time to avoid difficult issues, to back down on principles, or to attempt to "appease" the Communist countries simply because they are powerful. But it is a time to explore peaceful methods of seeking justice and freedom for all men. It is especially encouraging to hear a man like President Eisenhower take his stand for patience.

One of our staff members wrote to the President in these words: "As a Christian and as a member of the Church of the Brethren, I appreciate and will continue to appreciate your attitudes and acts which place the welfare of the world first and humanity in general, even above the self-interest of the United States." Many of us find frequent occasions to criticize policies we cannot support. Likely we shall continue to do so. But would it not be well if we Christians spoke more often in appreciation of deeds and attitudes we do approve? Perhaps more leaders would have the "courage to be patient" if they knew that Christians pray for them and support them when they take an unpopular stand.—K.M.

At the Second Table

MOST of my thirty-three cousins can share the memory of Sunday dinners at Grandfather Bennett's. Almost every week during the summer months there would be twenty to thirty of us—uncles, aunts, cousins and friends—to be fed after church. In those days Grandfather was blind, but he recognized the voices of his grandchildren, just as he kept in touch with almost every one who came to church or a family reunion. There was plenty of help—and plenty of talk—in the kitchen, so that our grandparents could visit with their friends while dinner was prepared.

We cousins had a farm to roam over, but we stayed close by until dinner was served. Usually the table was enlarged to seat eight or ten persons. But the first table took care mostly of grandfather, any visiting ministers and their wives, and the men who were present. Often we boys had to wait for the second table, but our sacrifice was nothing compared to the cooks who sometimes waited until a third table could be set. Actually they seemed not to mind, for their chattering continued and there always appeared to be enough food.

Now that families are smaller and kitchens are so compact that there is room only for a breakfast counter, it seldom happens that so many relatives gather together at one time. Most of us, even the children, are served at the first table.

When it comes to sitting down to tables around the world today, we Americans have first choice. Our tables are well supplied and we waste far more than we care to admit. We are willing to share our surpluses with the second and third tables, but it is a little difficult to remember that our warmed-over bounty may not seem quite so tasty to those who go hungry while they wait for us to finish. Perhaps more of us, like those young people who live in German homes or those foreign workers who share the table of Asians and Africans, should take our turn at the second table.

There is one table, however, that should always be first. When we gather around the Lord's table in the communion service there should be no first and last. God's offering of the bread of life and the cup of blessing recognizes no prerogatives. Some Christians would like to limit their communion according to their own preferences, but God has no favorites. The Lord who instituted this holy supper made clear his own attitude toward distinctions of first and second, servants and guests, high and low. His table is always a first table, wherever and whenever it is observed. Why cannot all other tables—at home or church—be as free from class and creed distinctions? —K.M.

What Is Wrong With Parents?

Elmer I. Brumbaugh

I WAS walking down the street, going from my office to the juvenile court when I overheard two sixteen-year-old boys talking. One of them said, "I am lucky; I don't see my old man all week. When I come home from school in the afternoon he is at work. When I get up in the morning he is in bed still asleep." The second boy answered, "I am not so lucky as you. I have to put up with my old man every night."

A short time ago I had a typical experience. I interviewed a seventeen-year-old girl in the detention home who was there because she ran away from home and got married. She was an intelligent girl and a senior in high school. Her story to me was as follows: "My parents don't like the young man I married. They wouldn't let me date him; so we had to date secretly. He gave me a ring. My parents took me to court and made me give it back. The only objection they have to him is that he has to work for a living. He has a good job and I don't see why they should feel the way they do about him. Now he is in jail and I am here in the detention home because we ran away and were married. My parents want to have the marriage annulled."

This girl talked quite frankly. She said if she had had a chance to talk to a counselor before, she would not have run away to get married, at least not until she was through high school. When the counselor asked her why she did not sit down and talk frankly with her parents, she gave a very typical adolescent answer, "I couldn't."

I decided to ask some young persons why they cannot talk to their parents. I asked them to speak frankly, but in general terms. Here is what they said:

First boy—"Why don't our parents trust us? When I come in I am questioned on every little detail of where I have been, what I did and with whom I have been and if I am a little late getting in you should hear my Dad!"

First girl—"I would like to know what I can do about my Dad." Then she hesitated, while the crowd laughed. "What I mean is, Dad drives all my boy friends away. If my boy friend comes while I am upstairs getting dressed, Dad begins to ask him all kinds of questions: 'Where do you live? What does your father do?' So I hurry down as fast as I can and get him out of the house before Dad fixes it so he will never come back again."

I suggested that perhaps girls should talk to their parents about their dates. Another girl responded, "I don't mind talking to my parents about my dates but I do hate to have them pry into my affairs. When I do talk to them, well, what happens? A lecture: you shouldn't do that; don't you know better? on and on." "My Dad is a policeman," said another girl, "and every time I go out I get a thirty-minute lecture on the dangers of life and how careful I should be."

"My mother always acts," said another girl, "as though she thinks the worst of me. When I come in from a date she makes me feel as though I had forgotten all that she had ever taught me. She even accuses me sometimes of doing things which I had not done. I feel sometimes as though I will just give up and do the things she accuses me of."

"That's just the way I feel," said another. "When I come home from a date my father gives me the third degree. Sometimes I do things that I know my parents don't want me to do. I do not know why; I guess just to strike back at them."

At this point I tried to defend the parents. I started out by saying that I am a parent and I know a little bit how parents feel. When one of their children is out at night parents cannot sleep well until that child is home. I suggested that when young people find that they can not get home at the time their parents expect them they call them on the telephone. "What," said a boy from the back of the room, "and get the third degree over the telephone? That's what happens to me." Another boy said, "I would like to confide in my parents. I would like to have Dad do things with me but he is always too tired or too busy."

This is what our young people are saying, when they are given an opportunity, about their parents. It is a one-sided view and there is much the parents might have to say, but it certainly should make us do some serious thinking.

The Family Counselor

Naomi Will H. K. Zeller, Jr. Jesse Ziegler

The Family Counselor welcomes letters of inquiry. They may be addressed: Family Life Department, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Dear Counselor,

The question of "fun" comes up for discussion at our supper table quite often, and as puzzled but searching parents we appeal to you for counsel. Our children have a hard time believing that it is ever fun to work, while we, having grown up under the era of the "devil finds work for idle hands to do" keep trying to get them to feel that life isn't all play, that work can be recreation, and that fun is a word that has a good many different meanings. What light can you shed on our concern?

Puzzled but Searching Parents

Dear Friends:

You are facing a question that is more important than you may know. Fortunately it is also a question on which science has been gathering some data.

It is important that fun should be an important ingredient not only of the life of your children but of you as well. For the evidence seems to indicate that play is just as important as work, love and worship in contributing to a healthy and well-balanced personality. Authorities also believe now that play tends to make people live longer. Dr. David Fink says that most stress diseases would never develop if people balanced their lives with adequate recreation and play. Another authority flatly states that fun is the best thing ever invented for prolonging life.

All of this would seem to indicate that there is a sound urge within your children that causes them to argue for time to play. It would be best if they could convince their daddy and mother that it is just as important for them to play some as for the children.

It is true that fun may be found in many different ways. It may be experienced in dressing up and going out, in all sorts of games and amusements, in conversing and exchanging tidbits of gossip, in seeing ambition fulfilled, in social contacts with other people. All of these are potential sources of fun.

From the way you put the question, however, I am just a little suspicious that you yourselves do not permit yourselves to have fun. I suspect that you feel guilty when you take time out to have fun. And what cuts deepest with your youngsters, it sounds very much as though you are trying to convince them of something that they don't believe you really feel.

I would like to urge you to take some time to have some fun with your children. It is true that sometimes work can be fun. But do some things with them besides work. Play some games, go on some trips, go to some clean entertainment. There will be a new closeness between you, you will be healthier yourselves, and you probably will live longer. Good times to you.

Jesse H. Ziegler.

them too well. It is as though a "man of God" will not love them any more, once he knows about them. Once he knows they are human men and women, he will abandon them! What a mistaken notion about great "men of God" and most of all, about God himself. He is not One from whom to hide. Rather, he seeks to woo and win the companionship of his highest creation, faulty though men are. He knows all about us, but this fact does not bar him from loving. His love is never exhausted. He loves to the end of loving, an infinity beyond human comprehension, but an infinite quality of love which we can experience completely through faith.

God gives every man the right to make mistakes. He never rejects anyone because he is mortal, else God would cancel out the validity of his own creation. If God made man, knows him and loves him just as he is, then man has no need to fear, or to bolster up himself with false pretensions, or to abandon confidence in himself. The first word of the angels at the birth of Jesus, that magnificent hour when God stepped down to earth to show men what he truly is, was simply this, "Fear not!" Such a God, who came to banish fear from men who feared nothing so much as the fact that they were mortal men, is the God of all who have found freedom and radiance in life.

How much freedom do Christians have in a Communist-controlled country? Here is a straightforward answer from East Germany

A Christian Witness in East Germany

H. G. Jacob

HOW much real freedom is there for the life of churches today in East Germany? By East Germany we understand the land situated between the border of the zone and the Oder-Neisse line, and officially designated as the German People's Republic. To answer this question let us consider the life of our Evangelische Landeskirche (Evangelical Church) since, compared to this body, other churches like the Methodist and the Baptist represent very small minorities. The number of those still belonging organizationally to a Christian confession in our country may well be estimated at eighty per cent at least of the total population. We have to be content with estimates here.. For our authorities do not release official statistics concerning religious affiliation and the churches themselves are not allowed to work out statistical material for their own use.

We shall answer the question we have posed with only the recent situation in the summer of 1954 in mind. The different stages in the history of the strained relations between church and state since 1945 will, therefore, not be outlined here. This history was rich in dramatic conflicts culminating in the spring of 1953. The period in which the life of the churches was deeply scarred by harsh measures on the part of the state administration, by ideological propaganda in schools and universities, party courses and public meetings, and by a skilfully planned press campaign will not be dealt with here. This period came to an end when the "new line"was proclaimed. We gratefully acknowledge that the promises made at that time to the churches have been fulfilled up to now. That is why things are much easier for the churches under the new policy than they were even two years ago. It is important to stress this change. Press coverage of the campaign against the churches tended to persuade public opinion abroad that our existence as Christian churches was unbearably difficult. Truth requires that we oppose those erroneous statements under the present circumstances. The situation we live in is neither sensational nor dramatic.

General superintendent, Evangelical Church in Germany

However, we cannot confine our answer to the question about the possibilities for Christian witness in East Germany only to the practical life of our church communities at the present moment. Whatever be the outward manifestations of the confrontation of church and state, we must go to the heart of the matter. Our state does not intend to continue monopolizing the churches or giving them at least preferential treatment because of their cultural functions, as had been the case in the Germany up to 1914. Our state does not intend either to remain strictly neutral towards all religious and ideological groups or to be equally loyal and tolerant with them. Separation of church and state as practiced in East Germany does not imply that the state, as a religiously indifferent body, simply abolishes monopolies formerly held by the church. Nor does it imply that the state grants the church, within the framework of the law, all the privileges which any religious group may expect from a government that renounces in principle the supervision, if not the streamlining, of the ideological convictions of its citizens. In this sense our state is neither neutral nor objective.

Our state consciously embraces the Communist ideology. It has a clear-cut program and a definite goal: to establish step by step the Communist social order. It is common knowledge that the Communist ideology does not hold the place of a personal viewpoint of a few citizens; it does appear as a dogma which cannot bear any opposition voiced by people of a different conviction. Adherents to the Communist dogma must therefore be intolerant of anybody who does acknowledge its absolute relevance in matters of life and death. They must be particularly intolerant of us Christians who are bound in faith to God the Father, God the Son and God the Holy Spirit and can never approve of the Communist dogma, if we do not want to betray our Christian faith.

The Communist dogma is faith in mankind's self-redemption through definite social progress and hope for the ultimate this-worldly paradise called the classless society and achieved by the proletariat as the redeemer of mankind. The Christian dogma is faith in Jesus Christ, the redeemer of the world, who was crucified for us and rose from the dead, and hope for the consumation of his Kingdom on the day of his second coming. It is impossible to believe in both our Christian dogma and in the Communist dogma which reduces God to a product of a primitive mankind's anxieties and Jesus Christ at best to a revolutionary who tragically failed. It is an either-or proposition for any single-minded person. The adherents to the Communist dogma themselves recognize the incompatability and we as Christians cannot but be grateful for their awareness. The gulf cannot be bridged. There can be no synthesis between the Communist ideology that developed into a fanatical religion and our Christian faith.

We must keep in mind the tension which each Christian church must withstand under a regime whose only motivation for political, economic and cultural action is the fulfillment of the Communist program in all realms of life. Such a regime will accept in Christianity merely a summary of individual religious convictions to be permitted in the realm of the intimately private life. According to official statements the government has no intention of attacking those individual religious convictions, provided the believers accept the Communist practice and refrain from stirring up public opinion by their confession of faith and their behavior. The state does not want to take any administrative measure against the Christian churches. The Communists be-

Blessed Are the Meek

Kirby Page

IN THE beatitudes we are told that the meek shall inherit the earth. Not the arrogant and aggressive for their own interests, but the humble-minded before God shall possess the land. The Greek word means "goodwill toward men and reverent obedience toward God."

Meekness is right relationship, and right relationship provides God with opportunity and God never misses an opportunity. Meekness is not inaction and escape; it is commitment and allegiance to the will of God. Meekness is not timidity and apprehension; it is daring and persistent devotion to God. Meekness is an essential element in Christlikeness and our Lord is himself the best definition and illustration of it.

The really significant thing about meekness is found in what it enables God to do. The spirit of goodwill toward men and reverent obedience to God opens doors and windows for the Eternal and presents him with access to human faculties. He is able to quicken thought, direct emotion, make sensitive the means of distinction between right and wrong, increase his determination to walk in the divine light, sustain faith and courage.

Happy is the man who is thus invaded and permeated. That of God is awakened and turned homeward. When a man seeks to save his own life, he loses it; when he is reverently obedient to God and demonstrates goodwill to men, he finds life indeed. This is the radicalism of Jesus that goes to the taproot of God's truth. Here is a standard which looms in sharpest contrast to the assumptions of materialism and secularism: blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth.

January

MARY McDOWELL

And now, it's January!
The fields so deep with snow
Are wrapped in winter's blanket
All warm and snug below.

Oh, yes, it's January,
And fence posts near my door
Are wearing fluffy night caps
They hadn't donned before.

In scenic January
A sleet storm may come through Transforming all the countryside
To polished diamond hue!

We all love January
In spite of bitter cold;
It has a kind of beauty rare
No other month can hold.

lieve the existence of the Christian religion to be so entangled with certain stages of sociological evolution that education out of those backward stages by gradual scientific and ideological propaganda will necessarily eliminate the basis of existence of the Christian churches. This explains why the real conflict between church and state breaks out over the problem of catechism and Christian education.

What has been said makes it clear that the soil on which the Christian communities live is volcanic soil. However, there are not always volcanic eruptions. There are also periods of relative stability during which the state postpones attaining a goal on tactical grounds and stops a necessary development from pragmatic considerations. It is at this point that the church has great opportunities for which she is grateful. On the one hand, the church can never deny her Christian confession and her missionary task; she can never water down the Christian faith to a pious feeling effective only when the individual withdraws into his "closet," or to a nice embellishment of family life. On the other hand, the church will be careful not to start on her own conflicts with the state and to seek martyrdom.

Our church knows all too well that the adherents to the Communist party challenge the vitality of her faith, the power of her love, the authenticity of her hope and her readiness to suffer. As Christians we know very well that we have to interpret such a challenge as coming from the living God, the Lord of history, questioning us about the authenticity of our Christian life. Such challenge cannot be met by moral indignation and political action, crusading and tenacious defense of questionable Christian positions. Such a challenge forces the Christian community to go the way of spiritual renewal, beginning with the foundations of the Christian faith. Christian fellow travelers of all shades are doomed to abandon the course. The threadbare decoration of a once fashionable traditional Christianity that accompanied a bourgeois education breaks down under such a challenge.

In the last analysis our Christian church has no reason for complaint or accusation, but it has plenty of reason for thankfulness to the Lord who summons his flock out of drowsiness. We are allowed to tell about the blessing which a church withstanding such a tension may be bestowed with when it accepts the call to total loyalty to the Lord and to unconditional and longsuffering service to men.

Luther said somewhere that times of temptation are times of blessing for the church of Jesus Christ. It is with this insight in mind that the experience of a witnessing church in her confrontation with the governmental, political and cultural power of the Communist ideology must be interpreted. It then becomes evident that our way through the dark is illuminated by the light signals of divine promise. It may also be understood then when we say that the Christian community in the East, weak though its spiritual power may be, is in many respects more mature than the Christian community in those countries where it enjoys, in a friendly atmosphere, an undisputed existence safeguarded by habit and tradition.

We cannot ultimately answer the question as to the possibilities for, and limits to, Christian witness in East Germany, without mentioning the difficulties which are particularly acute today. They are the following:

1. The state schools which all children without exception must attend are explicitly based on the Communist creed. In particular, natural history, biology, past and present history are taught according to the materialistic ideology. Each teacher is bound to manifest himself as a functionary in the service of the powerful workers' and peasants' class. The students applying for examination must present a curriculum vitae of their own, proving their social activities, i.e., their activities within the Communist youth organization. Under these circumstances all children who have been brought up at home in the Christian faith have constantly to face deep inner conflicts at school. A proposal by the church to have its own school was dismissed. The church may organize, on its own account, extracurricular religious instruction for the children of Christian families, but it is evident that such a limited instruction is incapable of shaping the total life of the children through the teaching of the gospel. Imagine a child who learns in his religious instruction class that God is the creator of the world whereas at school he is assured of the scientific knowledge that the world is material and as such without beginning or end.

2. The possibilities for missionary service in public are very limited. Official regulations deprive the church of the possibility of carrying out her missionary task as she is requested to do, and of utilizing theater, movies, press and meeting places not owned by the church, factories, and literature on a free book market. This means that we are actually reduced to work within the walls of the church and through the few church weeklies of a small circulation. It must be taken into regard that in former times the church was never obliged to secure assembly halls of her own besides the sanctuaries because she had free access to public buildings. Now, when halls were necessary, construction of such buildings is, of course, most difficult in a war- and poverty-stricken country.

3. Professional life is largely dependent on governmental offices, not only for officials, teachers and members of the police force, but also for workers and peasants, for shopkeepers and doctors, artisans, technicians and artists. The church members are thus under heavy ideological attack. This is particularly true for young people. You will understand that many people who would like to be Christians are driven into a conflict which they cannot ultimately sustain. This is why there are some church members, mostly young ones, who change allegiance one day. There are also those who dissociate themselves from the church because they do not wish to draw attention upon them. These are desertions which we, humanly speaking, certainly understand.

Difficulties of this kind remind the church of the emergency situation in which we live. Under these circumstances it is a great help to experience intercession. It is the same service the primitive church in Jerusalem did to the apostles when she prayed: "Grant to thy servants to speak thy word with all boldness" (Acts 4:29).

One Holy Catholic Apostolic Church. Conrad Bergendoff. Augustana Book Concern, 1954. 99 pages. $1.75.

This book contains a series of four lectures given in 1953 on the William Henry Hoover Lectureship on Christian Unity at the Disciples Divinity House, University of Chicago.

It is Dr. Bergendoff's contention that the unity of the church of Christ is a qualitative matter, not merely one of geography and numbers. For a simple and authentic definition of the character of the church, he takes the statement in the Nicene Creed, "One, holy, catholic and apostolic church." In four illuminating chapters, he discusses the four qualifying adjectives: the apostolic church, the holiness of the church, the catholic Church and the unity of the church. The author shows great insight at many points and the reader will be impressed by his broad sympathies and incisive clarity. He points out that there has never been a united church "in the sense of one all embracing organization in which each part has functioned in a right relationship to the whole or to the other parts." The substance of what denominations stand for is more important than the imposition of a universal organizational form. Our hope for unity "lies in each one adding a new dimension to the scope of his faith." We must learn from each other. Love is an important element in unity. Since the church's unity is in Christ, as we draw nearer to him, we shall draw nearer to each other. — C. Ernest Davis.

The Altar Fire. Olive Wyon. Westminister Press, 1954. 128 pages. $2.00

Miss Wyon has performed a distinct service to us all in bringing together this collection of reflections on the Lord's Supper. Written in beautiful and spirit-filled style, they should find a responsive chord in many hearts. Particularly will they be useful for the minister or other leader of communion as preparation for a rich interpretation of the service to his communicants. The average Brethren reader will only regret that the author's meditations were not broadened out to include both the feetwashing and the supper experiences along with that of the eucharist so well treated in this book. — *Chalmer S. News and Comment From Around the World

Religious News Service

Mrs. Eugene V. Pugh, a prominent member of the Disciples of Christ, receives the "layman of the year" award of the Washington Federation of Churches from Rev. N. Gordon Crosby, chairman of the award committee. Looking on is Rev. Carl Kopf, president of the federation. Mrs. Pugh is the third laywoman to be honored in the fifteen years the award has been given. She is a former president of the Washington Council of Church Women.

Authoritarian Sunday-school Teacher on the Way Out

The authoritarian Sunday-school teacher is rapidly becoming a thing of the past, according to Thomas H. West, president of the Adult Education Council of Greater Chicago. The layman, who is a prominent religious educator, said that the modern approach to group discussions recognizes every person as a potential leader, unlike the old-fashioned Sunday school where the teacher was the only leader.

Churches Support Japan Centers for G.I.'s

U. S. Protestant churches are joining forces with the Japan National Christian Council and U.S. armed forces chaplains in promoting a wholesome environment for American troops stationed in Japan. Spokesmen for the two groups point out that during the occupation of Japan the Western nations had authority to prohibit the establishment and operation of vice rings in the vicinity of military installations. Now all such restrictions have been removed. Off-base centers sponsored by churches will provide a Christian environment for both Americans and Japanese and give them a chance to learn something of each other's background and culture.

Communists Modify Anti-Religious Propaganda Drive

The Central Committee of the Soviet Communist Party has ordered Russian antireligious workers to stop interfering with church activities and insulting the feelings of clergymen and churchgoers. A decree to this effect was published in Pravda, official party organ. It came unexpectedly after more than three months of intensified anti-religious propaganda in the Soviet press and radio. The wording of the decree made it clear that although acts of interference with the churches were to cease, the regime intended no change in its policy of trying to educate Russians to the "evils" of religion.

Recently the Budapest radio, in an unusual action, announced that religious rites were held over the grave of a well-known Hungarian Communist worker in the presence of leading Red officials. In the past, Communist press and radio organs have been forbidden to make any mention of religious ceremonies performed over the graves of party members. Such rites have been discouraged by Communist authorities as "cowardice."

Food Parcels Distributed in Yugoslavia

Nearly $2,000,000 worth of food parcels for distribution to needy persons in Yugoslavia were sent to Belgrade during the first ten months of this year by the World Council of Churches and Lutheran World Relief. The parcels are being distributed through the Yugoslav Red Cross, according to an arrangement by which twenty per cent of them will be given to Serbian Orthodox clergymen and five per cent to Protestant ministers.

Presbyterians Adopt $6,362,468 Mission Budget

A budget of more than $6,300,000 has been adopted by the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian church in the U.S.A. for work in thirty-four countries during 1955. Dr. Charles Leber, general secretary of the board, said that work in Asia, Africa, Europe and Latin America will include evangelism, Christian education, medical work, stewardship, broadcasting and films, literacy and literature, youth and student work, and Christian social education.

Adventists Plan Anti-Cigaret Education Campaign

Seventh-day Adventist leaders have decided to launch a far-reaching educational program to discourage cigaret smoking. They will undertake widespread distribution of a film being produced at the Ochsner Clinic in New Orleans which presents in graphic form the relation between cigaret smoking and lung cancer. Included in the movie will be close-ups in color of a surgical operation that removed an affected lung.

World Council to Aid in Distribution of Surplus Foods

The World Council of Churches will co-operate in the distribution of 27,000 tons of American surplus foods in Europe in 1955. Similar quantities of food, which would include butter, cheese, milk, shortening and cottonseed oil, will be shipped during the two following years. The proposed three-year surplus program will be carried out on a church-to-church basis within an ecumenical framework. John Metzler, former director of CROP and Brethren minister, has been added to the staff of the Division of Inter-Church Aid and service to refugees for supervision of the European program.

Disciples Express Opposition to UMT

More than 8,500 registered delegates attended the 105th annual assembly of the International Convention of the Disciples of Christ in Miami, Fla. They represented some 8,000 United States and Canadian congregations. The delegates expressed concern over the threat to American freedom arising from certain methods of Congressional committees. They affirmed their confidence in the United Nations and its specialized agencies. They endorsed the action of the World Council of Churches in proposing that a just basis for defining the rights of conscientious objectors be sought, and they called on Christian churches to proclaim their "continued resistance to the extension of the war psychology" and expressed opposition to universal military training in any form.

Rural Church Leaders Meet at Salina, Kansas

The close connection between social and economic problems and the program of the church was a keynote of the eleventh National Convocation on the Church in Town and Country at Salina, Kansas. Rep. Clifford R. Hope from Kansas, chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture, said "The strength of the rural church and the good it has done and can do is tied directly to the land. No man can be careful of his soul and at the same time be careless of his land." A thousand of nearly twenty denominations attended the convocation. Dr. Richard O. Comfort, town and country church director for the Presbyterian Synod of Missouri, told a closing session that laymen want and need the thought behind theological language. He said that Christian theology would be better understood if it was put into terms that rural people could understand.

A "comradeship of compassion" so that the world will enjoy the real purpose of the farm was urged by M. R. Zigler. He said, "We need objectives and methods to share and to receive until all the peoples of the earth know that the Christian people are interested in them and are making every effort possible to relieve human suffering in the name of Christ everywhere."

Two Brethren farmers in Kansas were honored at this meeting along with representatives of other denominations: the Royal Yoders of Conway and C. Frank McGonigle of Nickerson. They were given certificates of recognition in a colorful service when the speaker was Bishop William C. Martin, president of the National Council of Churches.

Citations for this group of laymen were read by the Rev. Don F. Pielstick, secretary of the Department of Town and Country Church, National Council of Churches. In making the presentation of certificates, Mr. Pielstick spoke on the contribution of laymen in the rural churches, as follows:

"Remembering the church life of my parents, it is a particular privilege to try to state briefly why the department wishes to recognize the laity. . . .

"Jesus said he came that people might have life and have it in abundance. If people are to have life in abundance their rural living and farming must be carried forward in keeping with the purpose and plans of the Creator. So great a task as this is the responsibility of our rural churches. To express in their lives the way of the Master, the churches have the responsibility of bringing all scientific knowledge about agriculture and rural living, all the moral standards and ethical values into a coordinated harmonious way of living.

"A great deal of such living has been achieved in rural America. I believe it has been achieved because the gospel has found its way into the lives of some rural people. These who have been selected have tried to bear witness to the power of the Gospel. Their lives have been a witness for righteousness throughout their communities. The loyal support of their churches is a proud testimony to their commitment of Jesus Christ. . . .

"Royal F. Yoder and wife, both graduates of McPherson College, four children, are champions of the family-sized farm and the rural community — honored in 1953 by Kansas State College and State Chamber of Commerce for excellence in Farm and Family Living. . . They seem always to have time and money to support the good things at home, church and in the community.

"C. Frank McGonigle. Entire life in Salem community where he tills the soil and raises cattle. Enjoys greatly supporting his church, Brethren Service, Heifers for Relief and church college. His hired man lives in one of the most beautiful modern houses in the community. Three foster children have been raised, trained and established in their life work."

KINGDOM GLEANINGS

The Springfield church in Southern Ohio will hold a special home-coming service Jan. 9, beginning at 9:15 a.m. The speaker will be Raymond Peters.

A position as financial secretary is available in one of our colleges. The position offers permanent employment and good salary to a man of some experience and reasonable training. Apply to C. Ernest Davis, Christian Education Commission, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Mary Spessard of McPherson, Kansas, has accepted the call of the General Brotherhood Board to become Director of Children's Work succeeding Dessie R. Miller who is leaving the employ of the Board on March 1, 1955 to be married. Miss Spessard will begin her new duties following the close of the current school year.

Brother Bonsack, the new Brethren biography by H. Spenser Minnich, has been selling rapidly since publication date on December 9. Within one week after publication, more than 800 copies had been shipped from the Publishing House. Readers who have not yet ordered their copies of this biography of a beloved leader are urged to do so at once.

Brethren in Florida are interested in beginning church services in the vicinity of Pompano Beach and Ft. Louderdale, Fla. There are now quite a number of members who reside in these communities. Information concerning others who live there or near by should be sent either to Ward Guthrie, Box 1327 Pompano Beach, Fla., or to Irwin R. Pletcher, 503 S. Orange St., Sebring, Fla.

Religious programs now are being beamed to Communist-held North Korea as well as to the whole of South Korea over station HLKY, "The Radio Voice of Christian Korea." The nation's first privately-operated radio station, it is a joint project of the National Christian Council of Korea and cooperating U. S. missionary bodies. Prior to its opening, the Korean government network had been the sole broadcasting facility in that country.

Persons registering for the Youth Seminar are urged to get their registrations in early, if possible not later than January 16. Registrations should be sent to the Youth Department, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill. Particular attention is called to the registration form which omitted the reservation for lodging, Wednesday evening, February 2. In requesting lodging from Mr. David Miles, Plaza Hotel, First and D Streets, N.E., Washington 2, D. C., be sure to include the additional night of lodging for Wednesday, February 2. Persons traveling to the Seminar will be covered by the regular Conference Health and Accident Plan included in their registration fee. The Seminar promises to be extremely valuable because of critical issues coming before the present congress, including the extension of the present draft act and a combined Universal Military Training bill. Pastors, youth counselors and youth leaders are urged to accompany their young people to the Seminar as leaders and participants.

An Adult Seminar has been planned to be held on a similar basis Feb. 28 to March 4. For detailed information write to the Brethren Service Commission, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Horst Lobe, a German volunteer, sailed on December 13 after spending approximately fifteen months in the United States. Most of that time Horst spent assisting in the church architect's office in Elgin, Illinois.

Martha Cocanower returned to her home in Pioneer, Ohio, on December 19 after spending a term of six years with the Castañer, Puerto Rico unit. Churches are urged to contact Martha directly in regard to speaking engagements.

A vocational seminar on The Christian Farmer and His Government, will be held in Washington, D. C., February 8-10, 1955. It is open to laymen and women, rural pastors, and other interested persons. No advance registration, or registration fees. For information about program and arrangements, write Edward K. Ziegler, 22 South State Street, Elgin, Illinois.

A special packet of materials is available for churches planning a youth emphasis during National Youth Week, January 30 to February 6. Denominational youth emphasis comes on Sunday, January 30, and interdenominational meetings on February 6. The Youth Packet contains information and material covering both of these emphases and would prove valuable in the planning of such programs. The Youth Packet may be ordered from the Youth Department, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill., for 50 cents. Quantity orders of individual items can be secured by writing the United Christian Youth Movement, 79 E. Adams St., Chicago 3, Ill.

R. Truman Northup, pastor of the church at Irricana, Alberta, attended the annual meeting of the Canadian Council of Churches as a consultant for the Church of the Brethren. Meetings were held in the Hall of St. George's Cathedral in Kingston, Ont. One of the featured speakers was Dr. John A. Mackay of Princeton Theological Seminary. Concerning the Council's sessions, Brother Northup wrote: "Many hours were spent in receiving the reports of the work done and discussing the future policy of the Council. It is amazing to see that in social service, evangelism, stewardship, Christian education—teacher training, club work, literature service—foreign missions, chaplaincy service to the armed forces, and other areas, the Council is doing noteworthy service that could not be done by any denomination acting alone."

Leland S. Brubaker and Norman Baugher, members of a deputation to our mission in Northern Nigeria, tell about special groundbreaking services for a church at Dzonggola on November 29. "Dzonggola is a rather small village of Kilba people located about twenty-three miles from Garkida. About five or six years ago a class of religious instruction was begun there. They built their school room chapel themselves. From the class came forty-two baptized members. Their church was duly organized in May. They now have a regular primary school with a total of fifty to sixty pupils. There must have been about seventy-five of their people there for the ceremony. Charles Lunkley and Ira Petre directed the service. Three visitors from America brought greetings and congratulations. One could not help but think that this is an example where the seed fell on good ground. The new church will stand on a little hill close by the village and will be a good house of worship."

Brotherhood Theme: Seek First His Kingdom

According to two professors in Cornell University's medical college, unhappy, ineffective and upset persons make up about one third of the population of the United States. This third fills the divorce courts, crowds the hospitals, overloads the welfare agencies and burdens industry with a staggering cost in accidents and absenteeism. The professors based their conclusions on a study of the health records of 2,824 workers.

Officials of the World Council of Churches are worried about the fate of forty-two churchmen, twelve of them American, who were working in Protestant missions in China when last heard from. Council spokesmen refused to disclose the names of the church workers for fear of reprisals against them. But they said that they had had no word of their status for four years. The men worked in Shanghai and Peiping for Anglican, Church of Christ, Baptist and Congregational church bodies.

Bishop Sandor Agoston of the Christian Reformed Church of Yugoslavia says that his church is thankful to the Yugoslav government for three events that have taken place in recent months. These are the new law regulating relationships of the churches and the State; the acceptance of pastors with the social insurance program; and the Hungarian Bibles that are now for sale at normal prices through the British and Foreign Bible Society bookroom in Belgrade.

A revival of religious interest in Chile has resulted in crowded evangelistic meetings in large halls and open-air stadiums, and in the sale by the Bible Society there of over 4,000 Bibles in one week. These facts were reported in an address by the secretary in Chile representing the British and Foreign Bible Society and the American Bible Society. He reported that circulation of the Scriptures in Chile is free and unimpeded. Scriptures have been sold in twenty tongues, with Spanish taking the lead.

La Verne College

Four La Verne students were named in the 1954-55 edition of Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges: Stanley Brooks, president of the student body, of Chino; Jeaneen Christ, student body treasurer, from Wenatchee, Washington; Hutzel Mooneyham, editor of Lambda, from Lindsay; and Bertha Thomas, publications commissioner, whose home is in Modesto.

La Verne was a co-sponsor with ten other Southern California colleges of a Danforth Foundation Conference on college teaching as a Christian vocation over the week end of December 4 and 5. Student and faculty representatives of some fifteen colleges gathered at the Presbyterian Conference grounds in Pacific Palisades to participate in sessions aimed at recruiting Christian college teachers from among the most capable students. Eight students attended from La Verne.

The second annual Recreation Laboratory, sponsored by the Pacific Coast Regional officers and La Verne College, was held at the College during the last week of December under the leadership of Dwight Hanawalt, director of physical education and recreation and dean of men at the College.

The 1955 New Era banquet will be held in the college gymnasium on Friday evening, March 18. Reservations may be made through contributions to the College's annual funds by contacting the President's office.

The Anniversary Dinner, formerly scheduled on December 2, was postponed because of the serious illness of the speaker, Dr. George Scott, until Thursday, January 6. Rev. Robert "Bob" Richards will be the speaker at the new date.

The Brethren Student Conference at Elizabethtown College was attended by the following students from La Verne: Ellen Stroup, Bertha Thomas, Marilyn Dickerson, Raylene Harmon, Dick Canton, and Esther Williams. Professor Daniel Long, director of religious activities, accompanied the delegation.

Campus Student Publications received national ratings for their 1953-54 issues. First Class honors were bestowed upon the Campus Times, student newspaper, by the Associated Collegiate Press which praised the coverage, content and physical properties. The Lambda, yearbook of the College, also received a first class rating by the same association. This is the first time in the college's history that either publication has received such a high rating.

WHEN a young person applies to work with the Brethren Service Commission as a volunteer, he can look forward to one or two years of many new and varied experiences. Many young people have volunteered a year of their life to work for their fellow man, the community and our Lord, in the hope that more love and understanding can be brought about and the brotherhood of man strengthened. Projects in which volunteers work, include the following: home missions, attendants in state and national health and penal institutions, community service, teaching, work with migrant families, processing of relief goods, international work camps, student exchange program, heifer project and numerous others. As volunteers, we do not receive a salary, but are maintained by the Brethren Service Commission and receive a small amount of pocket money.

I became a volunteer on Sept. 1, 1951, and went to New Windsor, Md., for two months of intensive training. After this I was sent to Fresno, Calif., to work in the community service program there. After having completed almost a year at this project, I became interested in the work in Europe and was approved to go to Kassel, Germany. This work in Europe was to be my alternative service to military duty. On July 26, 1952, I landed in Germany with many opinions about what the people and country would be like. I was sure that most Germans must hate Americans, but in the many contacts I made there, I never saw dislike or disapproval from anyone. In Kassel, I helped in building the new Brethren House. After three months in this work, I received a fractured arm in an accident, and was shifted to the job of distributing relief materials. Here is where I had my first contact with the refugees.

In the meantime, the call came for a volunteer to work with the World's Y.M.C.A.-Y.W.C.A. in Austria. I was selected for this job and was sent to Linz. My first work was clerical. As I worked, I learned the language, which up to this time had eluded me.

In July and August 1953, I worked in a children's summer camp where we had approximately 350 children in the eight-week period. It was wonderful to see a new group of children come into the camp and it was amazing to hear their first remarks. Some children were thrilled at the thought of having a bed to themselves; others were surprised that they would have a clothes closet all alone as well as a small night stand by the bed.

It is a pleasure to see these same children sit down to a meal of nourishing food and eat until they could hold no more. By the end of a three-week camp period, most children had discovered that it was nice to take two hours' sleep after dinner. The summer camp was very enjoyable for me because here were children who really appreciated everything that was done for them. But it was tragic to hear children say they wanted to stay on in camp because they had enough to eat there, or because the group leader was so good to them. It was disheartening to think of the camp conditions that these children would go home to. They did not return to the neat house that an American child would call home. They do not know what it is to have a room of their own, for they are used to living in one room with their parents and two or three brothers and sisters.

They do not know what it is like to eat plenty of meat, vegetables and fruits. They have gotten used to the draft that blows continually through a barrack in winter, or the cold damp masonry of an old military kaserne. These people have gotten used to wearing the second-hand clothing that comes from a voluntary agency. But they are still without a land—a people who have been driven from their homes, or fled, perhaps to escape death. They cannot go back—yet cannot go further. What will become of these people? It is too late to blame anyone for the predicament in which these thousands find themselves. Will they be left alone to find a place in the world or will we as individuals, as Christian organizations and as government, join together to give these people a new and decent life?

In Austria, there is a group of refugees known as escapees. These are people who have fled from the Eastern block countries and sought asylum in the West since Jan. 1, 1948. Since Austria is a border country many of the escapees have come there from Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Rumania and Bulgaria. The U. S. government has a program which is to care for these people. Voluntary agencies are hired to give courses in technical training, language and other projects which will help to orient the people for life in the West. In September of 1953, the World's Y.M.C.A. contracted to do orientation work in Wels, Upper Austria, and recreation, language training and orientation near Salzburg. I was asked to supervise this work. Upon my insistance that I was not qualified for this job, my employer assured me that if I would do what came each day, I could handle the job. With much help from all sides, I worked in this position for eight months before returning to Kassel, Germany, and the Brethren Service Commission.

New volunteers arrive with enthusiasm and freshness. Volunteers who have served their term have gained the knowledge that comes with experience. Both are needed. The more people work in an international situation, the closer we shall be to peace for our world.

Brethren Youth Washington-United Nations Seminar, Jan. 30—Feb.4.

Registration begins Sunday, Jan. 30 at 4:00 p. m., Washington City Church of the Brethren. Program begins Monday, Jan. 31 at 9:30 a. m. Seminar concludes Friday, Feb. 4 at 6:00 p. m. Purpose of the seminar is to acquaint Brethren youth with their government at work and the United Nations. Registration fee, $4.00 for both phases. Costs kept at a minimum. Visit to United Nations is an important part of seminar. Costs kept at a minimum. For further information or advance information write: General Brotherhood Board, Brethren Service Commission, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Brethren Tour Values

There are many returns of value in travel when it is done purposefully. "Seeing Europe with a Purpose" has meaning for those who are able to have the experience.

Of course the greatest value will come to those who go.

1. They see our relief work in action in Austria and Germany.

2. They secure a sense of the needs yet to be met and the awful waste of war in life and property.

3. Many acquaintances are formed abroad. Friendships may be built in England, Holland, Germany, France, Switzerland, Italy and Austria.

4. Pleasurable visits are made to spots with historic, religious and literary associations.

5. The fellowship of the group (under twenty-five) in a personally conducted tour is very valuable.

Then there is value to those individuals who may be contacted.

1. Our relief workers and staffs in Europe heartily welcome folks from the homeland to visit them.

2. It is a happy experience to meet and visit with some of our German exchange students in their homes or as they come to meet the party along the way.

3. Friendly visits to homes in many lands help to build goodwill and lasting ties across national boundaries. Tours may be agents to promote peace and goodwill.

4. It does our workers good to demonstrate and describe the work that they do to meet human need.

Finally, there is the value to the home church and community.

1. Many reports are made on conditions abroad as observed first hand by members of the tours. These are given in addresses, in writing, or in conversation.

2. Pictures and slides will make clear many of the scenes observed.

3. A renewed and greater interest in the work of the church should result. One sister said, "Now I want to give to the work of the church more than ever before."

Brethren tours are personally conducted. Tour members pay fees that cover minimum expense of the tour. All details are cared for in advance and each member of the party finds joy in not being responsible for plans and arrangements. Chartered buses are used in England and on the continent. In Palestine buses also may be had.

Here are a few reactions from tour members:

"The tour was wonderful—it seems now like a glorious dream. I feel confident now in the work of Brethren Service since seeing the needs in Europe." Owen Price, Bourbon, Ind.

"All I can do is to jump from one mountaintop experience to another —from picturesque England, clean Switzerland, the crowded cities, a glimpse into the art galleries, and our visit with our exchange student, Walter Zimmerman." Mrs. Ellen Vore, Lima, Ohio.

"The tour was truly a rich experience. I recommend it." Eli H. Stoltzfus, Phoenixville, Pa.

Retrospect Is Essential for Growth

Evaluation Session

THERE came to my desk this week a golden jubilee anniversary booklet which was published by a church enjoying the completion of fifty years of work in a community. This booklet was interestingly prepared in a yearly diary style. It covered the church's history by snatches from council meeting minutes, short paragraphs of narrative history, pictures and pen sketches of various people and events, reproductions of newspaper clippings and letters, tables and graphs of statistics and was bound in an attractive red and gold cover. The membership of this church grew from twenty-seven to over four hundred in the fifty years.

The chairman of the Golden Anniversary Committee wrote in a letter which was printed near the close of the book the following paragraph: It is the hope of the committee that the celebration of the first fifty years in the life of our church will not only present an occasion for pleasant reflection but also serve as a time for acquiring perspective and setting goals for the next half century. Let us take from the past "its fire but not its ashes," and dedicate ourselves to the difficult but thrilling years ahead.

It seems that on the first day of a new year the church leaders of each congregation would do well to look back over the past 365 days and do the same thorough review work that the committee did in preparing its anniversary booklet for the church mentioned above.

Evaluation of the Education program

For an evaluation of the educational program of the church, the board of Christian education should consider such questions: (1) Have enough workers' conferences been held during the year to carry the total program of Christian education forward effectively?

(2) Have the workers' conferences dealt with matters that were really important in the life of a church or were they merely social affairs? (See the excellent standards on the next page that one church group developed for itself after a series of workers' conferences devoted to the matter.)

(3) Were there social occasions planned for the total church membership through which the bond of Christian fellowship is strengthened and deepened?

(4) Is there a genuine warmth of friendship within the church fellowship?

(5) Have the teachers of the church school classes participated in any leadership training classes?

(6) Does the church library provide an adequate number of books and magazines to stimulate teachers and others to grow through reading?

(7) Have the teachers of the children's classes enrolled in the brotherhood Fellowship of Growth In-Service plan?

(8) Is the equipment in each class and department adequate?

(9) Is the equipment the best the church could provide?

(10) Has the church really made an attempt to reach out into the community and bring within its fellowship those who claimed no church home?

(11) Has the church school enrollment and church membership grown during the year?

(12) Have any persons dropped out unnoticed?

(13) Are careful records kept on all church school pupils — from the youngest baby to the oldest grandparent?

(14) Is special attention given to the junior-high age group? to the youth?

(15) Are young people and newcomers encouraged to participate actively in the total church program?

(16) Has the church felt its responsibility in the total church program of the Brotherhood?

(17) Where has the program in the local church been the weakest?

(18) To what causes can these weaknesses be attributed?

(19) Is there real concern about the effectiveness of the church school? about the church program?

(20) Has the spirituality of the church fellowship been deepened during 1954?

(21) Does the church experience the joys of an active service program?

Is there a genuine warmth of friendship in your fellowship?

Planning Ahead

In the light of these self-searching questions, the board needs to lay plans for 1955 which will correct the errors and strengthen the weaknesses.

Each church ought to plan regular workers' conferences to be held monthly, bimonthly or quarterly. When church workers feel the importance of their work, they work harder at their tasks and more accomplishments are achieved.

Teachers and parents of the children's classes could profitably meet once or twice a year, so there is a mutual understanding of what the church school is doing for the children. Co-operation of the church and home is essential in the life of an active growing church.

Some definite plans should be crystallized so that an effective program of evangelism can be carried on. A group of concerned members could meet together with the minister and develop a vital program of visitation evangelism. Many church groups do not recognize the impact that genuine friendliness can make in its evangelistic efforts.

The local church leaders should plan annually for a period of leadership training or in-service training for the various types of work encompassed in the church program. For example, young people who are desirous of serving as choristers and organists or pianists should receive some instruction that will enable them to serve efficiently and in a spirit of reverence. Church musicians are so important to the worshipful atmosphere of the church services that the church dare not be unconcerned about their training.

Each church needs to look ahead and establish future plans in the light of previous attainments. Big and well-defined goals for 1955 can bring about great achievement in the total program of the church.

Our Sunday-school Teacher's Standard

1. I will aim to attend Sunday School every Sunday when I am physically able.
2. I will aim to come before my class every Sunday well prepared.
3. I will aim to come to Sunday school early enough each Sunday to greet my pupils as they arrive and have my work well planned.
4. I will make every effort possible to become personally acquainted with my pupils. I will plan to do some home visitation.
5. I will encourage and attend regular class meetings for fellowship, inspiration and attending to the necessary business details.
6. I will aim to live an exemplary life, helping my pupils to find Christ in daily living.
7. I will seek to strengthen my teaching by attending training schools, by taking special Bible courses when offered and by attending conferences.
8. I will interpret the Bible in light of the Spirit and teachings of Christ and in harmony with my church.
9. I will seek to be patient and practice self-control in relation with my pupils, loving each one as a child of God.
10. I will support and participate in the hour of church worship following Sunday school each Sunday when able.
11. I will aim to practice private devotions daily, praying, reading the Bible and such materials that will strengthen my work for the kingdom.
12. I will support the evangelistic efforts of my church and always seek to win souls for Christ.
13. I will aim to attend our communion services regularly and encourage my pupils who are members to attend.
14. I will read the Gospel Messenger and other literature that presents and informs us of the total program of my denomination.

Christians in Retirement

The time when a man or woman retires from his or her job or vocation is an important change in life. It is a time for which many of us plan carefully in terms of our financial needs, making sure our pensions, savings or insurance will adequately support us. But often the way we will spend our days upon retirement is not planned or carefully considered and the golden days of retirement turn out to be terribly disappointing. It is vitally necessary to look ahead to retirement day and to plan to use those days profitably; especially is this true for the Christian who believes that all of life is a precious gift from God, to be used for his honor and glory.

How then shall the Christian spend his retirement years? What can he do with the extra hours he now has in each day? There is much room for volunteer services in the schools and charitable agencies, etc., are eager for willing volunteer help. The church profits greatly from the service of its older members. Often a skill, for example, can serve the church. A carpenter who contributes his labors to repair work and making useful items of furniture is a valued friend of his church or a teacher who helps better the educational set-up of the church's school through able service is using her spare time well.

As he grows older, the Christian needs to spend more of his time in rest and relaxation, but he can still serve his fellow men with his interest and counsel. Always, too, the Christian can pray for his brethren. And what better way is there to spend some of the longer hours of retirement than in earnest prayer? We know Jesus would not have us neglect the season of prayer or study of the Word.

There is room in planning retirement for healthful social life, of course. Travel, recreation, joy-filled hours spent with family and friends are important parts of the later years. But a Christian needs to remember the services he can render as well as the pleasures he can enjoy in the days of retirement. Wasteful spending of income and purely selfish pleasures would never bring the Christian real contentment. Just as inactivity and needless rest would make retirement days disappointing, so would days spent purely in satisfying personal desires.

The later years can be glorious ones — not lonely or unsatisfying. We all need to look ahead to them, planning to use those days, not waste them. Upon retirement the Christian has not only a pleasant past upon which to reflect, but a challenging future in which to serve.

Three Months in India

Mrs. Charles Weybright
Syracuse, Indiana

Mrs. Weybright visited all of the mission stations in India. Shown here is the church at Bulsar, where our church began its work

I HAD been eager to visit our mission field ever since the Wilbur B. Stovers came to our church when I was ten or twelve years old and told how they were going to India. Then several years later Wilbur Stover returned and reported a term of service there. I landed in India on the 29th of April and left July 20, 1954, having spent three of the most helpful, glorious and interesting months of my seventy years. I praise God for this wonderful experience.

When I arrived in India, the ground was parched and dry and hot, with wide-open cracks everywhere. There was practically no grass. Many trees had no leaves. The dry season had been on for many months. When, during the last week of May, the monsoon broke the change was so immediate, beautiful and wonderful. The dry cracks in the ground filled with water and disappeared. Tiny threads of green grass appeared. The leaves soon came on the trees; the air was cool and damp. It seemed to be a new country over night. I am glad I saw it in summer.

I visited all the mission stations. Usually, I traveled with missionaries. Sometimes it was necessary for me to go alone by train. I traveled third class as most of our workers and native Christians travel. I am glad for that experience. It did not hurt me and I surely learned of life in India as it really is. Even after living and mixing with the people of India for three months and learning all I could, I still know very little of that country. India and its dire need are overwhelming. The people are kind and good-natured and usually get along well with one another. How they appreciate, even from a stranger, a smile or a kind act—just a bit of love! I can still see their winsome smiles and hear the music of their salaams. They sing their songs in school and church with a zeal seldom seen here.

I had never realized how simple were their homes and mode of living. Now, as I compare our living with theirs, I see how much we have that we do not need. It takes so little to make them happy. Their poor babies make me heartsick, even now. They have almost no milk and so little well-balanced food. Our children here get so much good food by comparison.

The church of India was most

Earl Zigler

Once bullock carts and bicycles were usual modes of transportation; now the jeep is being used more and more interesting. I can still hear them sing. They sing with joy and all their might. No one wears shoes in a church—it is a holy place. I was asked to leave my sandals at the door, especially when I was to talk, which I did a number of times. They are quiet, orderly and attentive. They seem really to enjoy their religion.

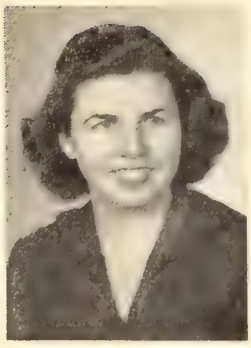
I saw a village church in process of building. The frame was made from poles of trees. Walls were to be of mud. It would not cost one hundred thousand dollars. Those lovely Christian people will be very glad for it.



Their homes are the barest necessities. Floors and walls are made of mud, with roofs of grass. There are practically no furniture and little or no bedding—not even during the cool season. Their stoves are usually made of stone and are often outdoors. We would not consider their huts comfortable in any weather, I am sure. They do not complain; they usually seem happy. Nearly all the people live in villages.

I rode many miles in the bullock carts. They are not uncomfortable, only a bit slow. You have plenty of time to see all the sights as you go. Our workers are glad for the jeeps they can use. They do need some new ones.

The boarding schools for Indian children are most interesting. Of course, some of them were being turned over to the government while I was there. This presented many problems. We do not yet know the future of that movement. Many think it may be for the best in some ways. The value of our schools to the country of India can never be computed. Some of the graduates of our mission schools have leading positions in affairs of state.

It is hard to crowd the memories of the three months' visit in India into a few paragraphs. These then are the memories, observations and impressions as they remain in my mind. I went to India, not as a sight-seer, but to see our church at work. The difference between Christians and non-Christians is so vast. The church has done wonders in India for India. But I must ask myself, Just how well are we doing our share of the "Go ye into all the world"?

The Evangelical Church in Germany, which is composed of thirteen Lutheran, twelve United and two Reformed groups, now has a current membership of more than 41,000,000 who are served by 15,363 pastors.

Virginia Bollinger Schechter

Mrs. Richard D. Sellers
Warsaw, Indiana

FLORENCE and Amsey Bollinger were very happy on a cold winter day, Dec. 7, 1925, when Virginia Moyer arrived and increased their family to four. Lowell, who was two and a half, now had a sister to play with. At this time the Bollingers were serving the Lord in home mission work in Geer, Va. Several years later, Richard arrived and the Bollinger family was complete.

The Bollingers went to the India mission field in 1930. To a little girl of five, the long trip on the ocean was a thrill. She found India a strange and fascinating new country. Soon, however, when her folks became settled in this new country, Virginia learned to love and understand the people of India to whom her folks had come to tell the wonderful story of Jesus.

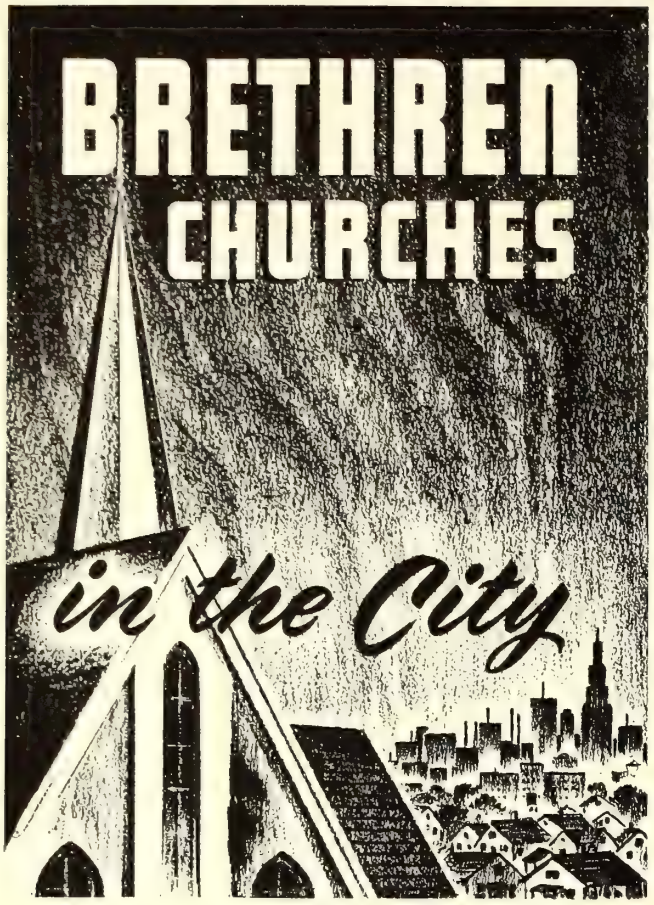
After a few years, Virginia was sent to Woodstock School, an American missionary school, in the Himalaya Mountains, where she spent nine months of each year. While at Woodstock, Virginia contracted polio, but owing to the excellent care of our missionaries, Dr. Barbara Nickey and Nurse, Hazel Messer, she recovered and had no bad effects.

At the age of eleven, Virginia gave her heart to Jesus at the annual mission conference and was baptized at Bulsar, India, along with several other missionary children by Bro. Edward K. Ziegler.

After Virginia completed her high school work at Woodstock, she returned to the States and entered Manchester College. During her freshman year she met Joseph J. Schechter, son of the David P. Schechters. Both were very much interested in missions and especially the India mission field.

In her college days Virginia was very active in Student Christian Union Commissions and in music activities. She participated in college deputation teams and many times gave talks to church and school groups on her life as a missionary child in India. During her senior year her folks were home on furlough and she spent an enjoyable year with them at North Manchester while completing her college work. She graduated from college in 1948 with the Bachelor of Science degree in music.

One of the biggest days of her life was June 12, 1948, when she became Mrs. Joseph Schechter at the Walnut Street church. While Joe attended Northwestern Medical School in Chicago, Virginia taught in the public schools of Highland, Ind., for three years.



At the San Jose conference in 1951, Dr. and Mrs. Joseph Schechter were consecrated as medical missionaries to serve in India and now after three years of special medical study and preparation they have set sail. For Virginia this is a wonderful experience as she returns to India this time with her husband.

In January 1952, the Schechter home was blessed by the arrival of Mark Steven and Virginia became a full-time homemaker. Life took on many new and interesting responsibilities. Joe was doing his internship at Wesley Memorial hospital in Chicago and so this gave Virginia and Mark much time together.

In 1952 the Schechters moved to Milwaukee, Wis., where Joe has been a surgery resident at the Milwaukee county hospital for two years in preparation for his service as a doctor in India. In December 1953, Kenneth Scott came into the Schechter home.

There are several main influences that have led Virginia to the India mission field: First, the example of her parents in their devoted service to the Lord and the people of India; second, her own experience with the Indian people when she lived with them as a child; third, the urging of the Indian church for her to come back to serve them; and fourth, meeting Joe, who had missionary service as his ultimate goal. God has truly led in Virginia's life and as she goes into full-time service for him, he will continue to grow more dear to her.

BRETHREN CHURCHES IN THE CITY is the name of a study pamphlet by the Ministry and Home Mission Commission which has the following chapters:

The Brethren Go to Town and City
Brethren Can Build New Congregations
Changing Brethren Strategy in Churching Our Cities
What Will Brethren Do About Changing City Communities?

The pamphlet is ideal resource study material for use in the Sunday School or the 1955 School of Missions. Single copies free of charge. Additional copies, 20c each. Order from the Ministry and Home Mission Commission, General Brotherhood Board, Church of the Brethren, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

THE CITY is the theme for the study of the home church for the 1955 school of missions. January is the month for special mission study but missionary education continues throughout the year. Every month should be a time for missionary study.

Sixty-four per cent of the population of the U. S. A. now live in cities — and the cities continue to grow. Vast new housing developments become cities in themselves almost overnight! The prevailing restlessness is making great numbers of city dwellers lonely, confused, insecure and anxious.

Powerful forces of a dynamic secularism play upon the lives of city dwellers and reach out to influence town and country. What are Christians doing to release equally dynamic spiritual forces to meet the needs of the people?

In such an hour the mission of the churches of Christ to city people calls for sustained study, daring planning, and concerted action. Facing this need and challenge, what greater responsibility have the people and the churches than "to save the soul of man and to give the city a soul"?

The Brethren Go to Town and City

In 1900 the Brethren had only a few urban churches. We not only thought of ourselves as, but were a rural church. Since that time changes have begun to take place; our people have increasingly gravitated toward the city. Following World War I and particularly during and since World War II our people have moved in increasing numbers to the city.

Dr. Kenneth D. Miller in his book, Man and God in the City devotes an excellent chapter to this trend that is current all across America. He says "at least thirteen millions of people changed their state of residence between 1940 and 1950 and seventy millions moved at least once during that period." Each year we now have one fifth of our population moving, half of these to totally new communities.

Brethren are among these who are moving and in probably the same relative numbers as others of our population. When Brethren move to the city, what happens to their church relationships? Naturally, some find fellowship in the Church of the Brethren in that city, if there happens to be one. But we are a small denomination. There are entire states in our union where we have no churches, to say nothing of the great numbers of cities in the various states. That means that other Brethren if they want to fellowship in a church, attend some other denomination and many ultimately unite there. Thus they are lost to the Church of the Brethren. So long as they are not lost to vital fellowship with God in Christ, through his church, we should rejoice. But we are a small denomination and cannot afford heavy losses in membership if we are to exist. Then, finally, there are those others who do not worship anywhere, who become a part of that already vast number who "leave God back home." In Los Angeles County, Calif., it was reported a few years ago that sixty-seven percent of all Protestants moving in, "left God back home." In some of our urban centers we are sure that Brethren have been lost by the scores to our church, if not, indeed, to any church.

In the years since 1900 we have been developing churches in our cities. In 1954, 269 of our 1,033 congregations were in the cities. The trend is rapidly in this urban direction. We are closing many of our rural churches and of the new ones being established or old ones being revitalized most of them are in the city.

Among the problems we face in the present situation are the following:

1. Can we establish enough new congregations yearly to keep pace with our moving people, so that the church is not dissipated? Along with that, can we assume our fair share of the evangelization of the rapidly increasing population? And can we assist in the ministry to those of other denominations who move into the communities where our churches are located and who look to us, if anyone, for spiritual ministry? These are problems every urban church, as well as every rural church should carefully consider. It involves our responsibility for the church extension of our Brotherhood. It involves also our ministry to the people around us, for whom we are responsible.

2. What sort of program must the city church have, if it is to fulfill its ministry and make for a growing church. The program of the city church can scarcely be the same as that of the country church. It must minister to the peculiar needs, problems and complexities of the life of its people.

From such excellent source books as Dr. Frederick Shoppey's Church Work in the City a careful study of the local program should be made.

3. Are the buildings and equipment adequate and sufficiently attractive to appeal to the people we serve and to minister fully to their needs? It is a fact that we have lost scores of people in our churches who felt they could not come and bring their families and friends to the bleak, unattractive and often undesirable surroundings of their church. In a day when we seek better homes in which to live, should God's house be less usable or attractive? Careful study of our own local facilities and needs could well be projected.

4. Included in the above are two more concerns: Our evangelistic outreach and our commitment in stewardship. Brethren have been woefully lacking in both of these. Professing to be a New Testament church, we have largely neglected or rationalized two responsibilities that are at the heart of Christ's message to us. We should study these in each of our churches and find the joys coming to some churches who have risen to meet their God-given responsibilities in these matters.

Anniversaries and Weddings

Anniversaries

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew L. Black celebrated their sixtieth wedding anniversary on Sept. 18, 1954. A family dinner was held in Calgary. Special greetings were received from Queen Elizabeth of England, the prime minister of Canada, and the premier of the Province of Alberta. They have four children, nine grandchildren and one great-grandchild.—R. Truman Northup, Irricana, Alberta, Canada.

Mr. and Mrs. William S. Longnecker of Mt. Joy, Pa., celebrated their golden wedding anniversary with open house at their home on Nov. 21, 1954. They have ten children, twenty-six grandchildren and one great-grandchild. — Mrs. Elmer S. Randler, Manheim, Pa.

Brother and Sister Clarence Metzger celebrated their golden wedding anniversary on Oct. 24, 1954, with a family dinner and open house at their home. Special recognition was given to them and their family during the morning church service. They have five children and eighteen grandchildren.—Mrs. Bertha Taylor, North Manchester, Ind.

Brother and Sister C. C. Shumaker observed their sixtieth wedding anniversary on Nov. 11, 1954. A family dinner was served in the social room of the church, followed by a reception.—Mrs. A. J. Casseday, Windber, Pa.

Church News

Northern California

Paradise—One Sunday afternoon each month, a group from our church conducts a worship service at the Cypress Acres rest home. The offerings from our two-week Bible school were sent to the Lybrook Indian mission, N. Mex. Several of our women heard Mrs. Nellie Miller, state president of the W.C.T.U., at the county convention of the W.C.T.U. Our pastor and his wife were co-deans at Peaceful Pines family camp and several others from our congregation were in attendance. Three of our girls attended yong people's camp at Peaceful Pines. The young people sponsored an ice cream social with the proceeds being used to send two of their number to National Youth Conference. Several of our people attended Camp Farthest Out at Clear Lake and secured tape recordings of Rolland Brown's sermons for the congregation to hear. Dr. and Mrs. E. Lloyd Cunningham visited in Paradise for about a month while they were on furlough from the India mission field. Bro. S. L. Barnhart of Chico was re-elected moderator for the coming year. Sister Halcyone Stratton was re-elected president of the women's work.—Margaret Schmorleitz, Paradise, Calif.

Southern California and Arizona

Hermosa Beach—As a result of our membership meetings in September, six were baptized into our fellowship. For the third year a yearbook has been compiled for the church members. The youth group has been reorganized under the direction of Louis Rice. Ten of our young people attended the young people's banquet at Glendora. The women of the church made and sent one dozen skirts and blouses to New Windsor for relief. They also sent clothing and comforters to Korea. Clothing was also sent to four Indian boys in New Mexico. Our church has purchased a new location in the center of a newly developed community. We are hoping some financial sources will be available so that construction may begin before too long.—Mrs. Muriel McBride, Hermosa Beach, Calif.

La Verne—During recent weeks Pastor Galen Ogden has brought us echoes from the Ecumenical Conference. Anderson Angles as given by our delegates to the National Youth Conference provided us with reviews of that meeting. Installation services for Sunday-school officers and teachers and for church officers were held Sunday morning, Sept. 26. At the same service our associate pastor and his wife, Brother and Sister David Albright, were installed with district moderator, Arthur Keim, in charge. On the evening of Sept. 15 the college convocation and church reception for college students was held with Dr. O. E. Schafer of the Evangelical United Brethren church giving the address. Our quarterly council was held the evening of Oct. 20, with Moderator Crawford Brubaker in charge. Several cottage units are under construction at the Hillcrest Homes. Work was recently begun on a wing of the central building. Bro. Albright is giving special attention to the music program. The church plant, so recently enlarged, is again proving inadequate thus necessitating planning for additional facilities. E. K. Beekly is chairman of the plans and survey committee; Paul S. Hersch is chairman of the building finance committee.—H. A. Brandt, La Verne, Calif.

Los Angeles, Imperial Heights—During Pastor Bruce Flora's absence, Laban Strite was in charge of our services. Our Sunday-school and church attendance continues to increase. The offerings from the daily vacation Bible school were sent to the Lynnhaven home mission church in Arizona. Tom Duddleston was elected Sunday-school superintendent for the new year. Two of our young people attended the National Youth Conference in Anderson, Ind. Delegates to district conference were Lowell Brubaker, Charles and Elsie Ardinger. Twenty-nine new members have been received into our church during the past year. H. L. Ruthrauff was re-elected elder.—Mrs. Charles Ardinger, Hawthorne, Calif.

Colorado

Bethel—Attendance and interest have increased during the past year. The women of the church have been sewing for relief and for the Flagler hospital. Our vacation Bible school had as its project the Navajo Indian mission. The church entertained the camp planning committee of the district and also wrote letters protesting liquor license which was under study in our state. Brother and Sister Mankey represented us at district meeting and Elsie Lucere represented our young people. Brother and Sister Dick Burger were with us one Sunday and talked and showed pictures of their work. The films, It's the Brain That Counts and Bill's Decision, have been shown in our church services. Mrs. Mankey attended the Boulder school of missions. The women sponsored three temperance meetings for the entire church and subscribed to temperance magazines which were placed in two schools.—Mrs. Dale Saffer, Arriba, Colo.

Southern Iowa

English River—Our church entertained district conference with Paul Robinson, president of Bethany Seminary, and Donald Rowe, regional fieldman, as guest speakers. A number of our juniors and young people attended camp at Pine Lake, and three young people were in attendance at the National Youth Conference. A vesper service was held one Sunday night at which time the public school teachers were invited guests. Six of our young people are enrolled at McPherson College. Bro. Kenneth Yinst of Lincoln, Nebr., held a one-week evangelistic meeting for us in October. As a direct result of these meetings, two were baptized into our fellowship. An interchurch leadership training school was conducted during the month of November. Since our last report five members were received into our church by letter.—Ollie Coffman, South English, Iowa.

Northwestern Kansas

Maple Grove—Our church officers were elected at our fall council. At a later meeting, Bro. Floyd Crist was re-elected elder. Our women's work group canned cherries for the Cedars, Brethren Home, at McPherson. Our pastor conducted an overnight camp for the juniors and intermediates. Several from our church attended camp at Camp Pawnee near Larned. Our fall communion was observed on Oct. 3. A number of our group attended district meeting at Portis. Our pastor, John Ditmars, was elected moderator for the coming year.—Wava Ankenman, Dellvale, Kansas.

Nebraska

District Meeting—Our district meeting was held at the Kearney church Oct. 8-10, with Bro. Homer D. Kimmel of the South Beatrice church as moderator. The theme of the conference was Seek First His Kingdom. Inspiring addresses were brought by Bro. Paul M. Robinson, president of Bethany Biblical Seminary. Mrs. Joseph Houston, children's worker for the Disciples of Christ church, was present for the meetings. Two films, The Hidden Heart and The Barrier, were used. A Brotherhood Fund goal of $5,250 was adopted. A paper, prepared by a special committee to study camping and camp development in the district, was adopted. This plan calls for a junior-intermediate camp in addition to the present youth and family camps and for camping to be brought under the supervision of the board of administration. A report was received concerning our district mission project which is currently the new church in the city of Lincoln. Bro. Homer D. Kimmel will represent our district on the 1955 Standing Committee of Annual Conference. Homer Kimmel, Wilbur Hoover and William P. Albright were elected to terms on the Board of Administration. Bro. Harold Grone was elected to the district Trustee Board. Moderator for the 1955 district meeting will be Bro. Foster Myers. Three new pastors, John B. Wieand, William P. Albright, Oscar Grindhelm, and their wives were recognized and welcomed into our district. Next year's district meeting will convene at the South Beatrice church, Oct. 7-9.—Wilbur Hoover, Enders, Nebr.

Texas and Louisiana

Nocona—Our average Sunday-school attendance during the past year was 101. Bro. Harley Yates of Kinross, Iowa, conducted a two-week revival in our church. Five were baptized into the church and one awaits baptism. On Oct. 11, Brother and Sister Arnold Carl Westphal, known as the children's shepherds, were with us for a musical program. Work on our new Sunday-school rooms, rest rooms, and baptistry will be completed in the near future. The women's work made it possible to have a water well drilled on our church yard.—Mrs. Albert Harris, Nocona, Texas.

Northern Illinois and Wisconsin

Elgin—Our pastor, Brother W. Glenn McFadden, and his wife returned in August from a three-month trip to Europe and Bible lands. They and others who traveled abroad during recent months in the interest of our denominational program have shared their experiences with us. Three of our number, Brother and Sister Leland Brubaker and Bro. Norman Baugher, are now visiting our mission in Nigeria. Brother and Sister Earl Zigler left in August to resume their work in India. Brother and Sister M. R. Zigler of Geneva, Switzerland, recently spent several weeks in Elgin. It was our privilege to be the hosts to district meeting in early September. During the autumn ten have been received into our church by letter. Attendance at all our services has experienced a sharp upturn since our new building is in use. Our deacons and others are assisting in calling in many homes of the parish and the community. A Sunday evening school of arts in religion was held during late October and November under the leadership of Anetta Mow. —Ora W. Garber, Elgin, Ill.

STEWARDSHIP HELPS

What Are You Worth?

by G. CURTIS JONES

A new book with new material about a subject that some are inclined to think of as being worn threadbare. You will get a fresh look at "stewardship" through the pen of G. Curtis Jones. Written in a smooth-flowing language that is understandable to lay and clergy readers alike, this book is a valuable aid in developing the stewardship concept. Self-examination and new resolves will be the results of a thorough reading and contemplation on the ideas presented. Higher levels of administration and financial support in the church will be attained when the ideas are put into action. Rich with illustrative material. 160 pages. Paper. $1.25

Financing Faith

by HARRIET HARMON DEXTER

A study of the Christian woman and her money. Both men and women can find help in money management by carefully reading Financing Faith. If read in the home together added value will be received. Since women own 70% of all the private wealth in the United States this study as to how it should be administered is a timely one. The book published in 1951 is still selling rapidly. 128 pages. Paper. $1.00

Some of our men and women volunteered to help clean houses which were damaged by the flood. On Sunday, Oct. 17, a report of the World Council Assembly was given by Bro. Norman Baugher. — Mrs. Frank Markley, Plymouth, Ind.

South Bend, First—A two-week vacation school was conducted in our church. Our pastor and his wife, Brother and Sister Harper Will, were delegates to Annual Conference. A number from our church attended the various camps at Camp Mack. Thirty-six from our church attended the Ecumenical Festival of Faith at Soldiers Field in Chicago. Our autumn council met on Sept. 28; Elder Foster B. Statler presided. We elected Sunday-school and church officers and approved the 1955 budget. Nine young people from our congregation attended the National Youth Conference. Our pastor participated in the program. One of our church families has as its guest for this year Ursula Paproth, a high school student from Hamburg, Germany. The women gave a kitchen opening dinner to provide the church families and friends an opportunity to see the newly remodeled kitchen and to share in the first meal prepared in it. Our love feast and communion was observed on World Communion Sunday. Since our last report seven have been received into our church by letter and one by baptism. Oct. 24 was men's Sunday in our church. They had as their guests for the day Brother and Sister R. H. Miller of North Manchester, who recently returned from a six-month visit to India, Palestine and Europe. Bro. Miller talked at the morning worship hour. After dinner, the Millers showed colored slides of their trip. — Lucille V. Sanders, South Bend, Ind.

Southern Indiana

Fairview — Our pastor, Bro. Dale Gibboney, represented our church at Annual Conference. Several of our young folks participated in the National Youth Conference. Our aid women, who meet once each month, are making comforters and layettes for relief. Several of our young people attended Camp Mack during the summer months. At our all-day harvest meeting on Sept. 9, Bro. Emory Smith of the Lafayette church was our guest speaker. Bro. Charles Bieber, a returned missionary to Africa, conducted our revival meeting Sept. 20 — Oct. 3. As a result of these meetings, eight persons were baptized into our church fellowship. The meetings closed with our love feast service. The men's work group has made some repairs at the parsonage and has also painted the outside of the church building. — Hattie Peter, Lafayette, Ind.

Michigan

Grand Rapids — Having been without a pastor for about two years, our church welcomed Bro. Robert Nelson and his family of Lancaster, Pa., the first of September. During the summer the men and women put the parsonage in condition for the new pastor. Besides remodeling the kitchen and redecorating the rooms, a new furnace was installed. One of the most active new organizations in the church is the couples' club which meets every two weeks on Sunday evening. The meetings are featured by a lunch and a variety of programs. — Harold S. Chambers, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Lake View—Our congregation celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of the building of the church with a home-coming. Our summer pastor, Bro. Robert Fryman, baptized seven at the close of his pastorate in August. Four of our young people attended the National Youth Conference with their advisers. They have now organized the group under the Youth Action Plan. District meeting was held at the district camp in Brethren. Our junior choir participates in our services. Our pastor, Bro. Galen Barkdoll, has the young people to help in the morning worship services. Recently Bro. H. M. Coppock of Springer, N. Mex., held a two-week meeting in our church. At the close of these services, seven were baptized into our fellowship. Our communion was held Oct. 24. The children prepared towel kits for overseas Christmas joy.—Frank Barkdoll, Brethren, Mich.

Onekama—Five of our young people attended the National Youth Conference at Anderson, Ind. At the council meeting in September, our pastor, Bro. Martin Krieger, reported a membership of 124. Our love feast and communion was observed on Oct. 1. The annual harvest day program and potluck dinner was held on Oct. 3. During the morning servie Bibles were presented to those who have joined the church since 1950. Bro. Galen Barkdoll of Marilla conducted the afternoon service with music by the Brethren junior choir. In the evening Sister Nettie Weybright of Indiana, showed pictures and talked concerning her recent trip to India. Bibles for the church were purchased by the Homebuilders' class. Several of our men and boys attended Camp Brethren Heights Oct. 16 and 17.—Mrs. Dan Deal, Onekama, Mich.

Northeastern Ohio

Alliance—Our church observed rally day on Oct. 3 with promotion services and the dedication of Sunday school and church officers. Bro. J. D. Zigler gave some thoughts concerning communion. In the afternoon Bro. Raymond Risden of the Reading church gave the message, Keep the Spiritual Gleam. In the evening Bro. Zigler officiated at our communion service. Iona Million, an exchange student who spent the past year in Germany, talked of her experiences at one of our services. Bro. Zigler represented us at Annual Conference. During the past year women's work has sent towel kits, clothing, grease and food to be used for relief work. Bro. J. W. Fyock and Sister Mary Anliane were our delegates to district meeting. On Sunday, Oct. 17, our elder, Bro. Arthur Hess, met with us for our semiannual business meeting. During the year we have organized a cradle roll and received four members by baptism. A report was given by our National Youth Conference representative. On Nov. 5 the Alliance Council of Church Women met in our church at which time friendship packages were made and dedicated. We are looking forward to having Miss Hazel Messer, a medical missionary for the past twenty-three years in India, make her home in our midst for the coming year.—Mrs. Jennie M. Messer, Alliance, Ohio.

White Cottage—Our pastor attended Annual Conference and gave a report of the meetings. Six members have been received into our church fellowship by baptism. Our pastor, Bro. Ivan Fausnight, was in charge of the dedication service for the organ and chimes, a memorial for Sister Elizabeth Gray. Paul Hurd presented a twenty-minute organ recital. Several of our people attended Camp Zion during the past summer. Three persons from our congregation were present for the regional conference at North Manchester, Ind. The Alethia class experienced an overnight outing at Camp Sugar Grove. In the absence of our pastor, Bro. John Eikenberry was in charge of a service and we also used the film, Bill's Decision. Five of our young people and one adult attended the National Youth Conference. At our September council meeting Jesse Inman of Sidney was elected elder. Ruth Erbaugh has organized the choirs. The last week of September was spent in preparation for the evangelistic meetings which were held in October.—Ruth E. Royer, Bradford, Ohio.

Donnels Creek—Communion was observed on World Communion Sunday. Rev. Woebus of Sidney, Ohio, was our guest speaker at the birthday supper in September. Fred Teach and Jay Studebaker each took a truckload of relief goods to Kentucky for the women's work of Southern Ohio. Our ladies' aid gave $100 toward the Brotherhood Fund. They are now making gowns and blouses for relief. A new department consisting of the older juniors and the intermediates has been organized. This is the same group that sings together in the junior choir. The adult choir sang at both the Springfield and New Carlisle churches during their evangelistic meetings. Our pastor, Ross L. Noffsinger, attended regional conference at North Manchester, Ind. In the absence of our pastor, Bro. Otis Landis of the Springfield church was with us. Bro. Harper Will was in our church for a preaching mission Nov. 21-28.—Ruth Funderburg, Springfield, Ohio.

Flat Creek—During the past year twenty-two members have been received into our church by baptism. Preaching services are held biweekly in the various homes of the area. During the summer a new point was opened at Double Creek, ten miles from the mission. Sunday school is held at the new mission each Sunday afternoon. Our pastor recently conducted three membership classes for the new members of the church. A "big preaching" was held one night on our newly lighted playground with nine ministers of the surrounding area bringing brief messages. Our church was host to the county-wide singing convention. Brother and Sister Weldy attended the Annual and district conferences. Twenty of the Sister's Club members and leaders attended an overnight camp at the EUB mission headquarters at Red Bird Mission at Beverly, Ky. Six of our young people spent a week at Camp Sugar Grove, Ohio. In the absence of our pastor, Brethren G. M. Sizemore and Butler Sizemore were in charge of our work. Edith Cosner and Glenna Glick were with us as Abundant Life Caravaners for a period of six weeks. Six Sunday schools are held each Sunday. Bro. Charles Rinehart of Blountsville, Tenn., conducted a week's revival at Mud Lick recently. Five were baptized as a result of these meetings into our church fellowship. Our elder, Bro. C. G. Erbaugh, was with us for the recent council meeting and communion service. New improvements about the mission during the past summer and fall have been a new furnace, new truck, lighted playground and equipment, new storage room for distribution of material aid, belfry tower and bell on the church. Four daily vacation Bible schools were held during the past summer. The council recently voted to have a special service next spring in commemoration of the tenth year of the building of the church, along with a home-coming day and Southern Ohio day observance.—Mrs. Georgia Ledford, Creekville, Ky.

Pitsburg—At our last council meeting, we elected Sunday-school and church officers. Bro. Dolar Ritchey was chosen elder for another two years. We also relicensed Bro. Carl Cawood to the ministry. The young people gave two plays during the summer. Recently five babies were dedicated. Our love feast was observed on World Communion Sunday. Several of our children attended camp at Sugar Grove during the past summer. A community daily vacation Bible school was held in our church. Bro. Earl Hostetter conducted an evangelistic service in our church. In the absence of our pastor, Bro. Moyne Landis brought our Sunday message. Bro. Carl Cawood preached for us on several Sunday evenings during the summer. Our women are sewing for relief.—Ruth M. Swinger, Pitsburg, Ohio.

Christian Teaching in the Churches

by John Q. Schisler

Briefly, this book is about religious education today . . . its nature, scope, and purpose. Some of the questions asked — and answered are:

What is Christian education?

What are its responsibilities — its opportunities?

What are its component parts — and how can they work together most effectively?

This is a thoroughly informed appraisal of the whole nature and function of Christian teaching, offering every Christian educator deeper understanding of his responsibility. The chapter on religion and the public school makes forthright suggestions for co-operation between the church school and the public school. 176 pages. Cloth. $2.50

Protestantism in America

by Jerald C. Brauer

A narrative history. This highly readable book will take you from the settling of Jamestown in Virginia in 1607 and follow Protestantism in its expanding growth all the way to the establishing of the World Council of Churches and the National Council of Churches. He recounts the "growing pains" of America's early communities, the church's part in the American Revolution, the growth of religious liberty after the war and the new frontiers facing the churches in a growing nation.

In this whole story the author emphasizes fidelity to the Bible as the basis for Protestant faith. A direct, forceful, and rewarding piece of writing. 320 pages. Cloth. $3.50

Rural Preaching

by Edward K. Ziegler

Ministers who read this book — and apply its principles — will appreciate the invigorating effect of better preaching on all phases of work in this highly specialized field. Here, too, are hints on preparing sermons for young people and for special occasions.

The minister now serving in the rural areas of service will be inspired to take a fresh approach to their difficult job and will gain a new appreciation for the importance of the role of the rural minister in the development of Christian churches in rural areas. Delightful and rewarding reading. 160 pages. $2.00

The Church and Social Responsibility

Editor J. Richard Spann

Fifteen writers, each one an authority in his field, seek to formulate from the teachings of Jesus a philosophy by which the church may deal with the problems in our present world order.

Here is a forthright presentation of the responsibility of the church in social improvement. A biographical note section and a comprehensive index add to the value of the book. 272 pages. Cloth. $2.75

First Virginia

Roanoke, Ninth Street—Fifteen persons have been received into our church fellowship. During the past summer we held our first day camp for the junior and junior high children. Next summer we plan to have a camp for the primary group. We are conducting an extended session for the children from eleven to twelve years of age on Sunday morning so that they may worship with their own age group. Boy and Girl Scout troops have been organized along with Brownies and a cub pack. The juniors sent a box of bandages to the mission in Nigeria. Following a fellowship supper one evening, the Cloverdale church presented a family life play. The men of the church have built kitchen cabinets and installed tile in our new education building. The men of the church also gave their time to the spiritual and stewardship emphases in the every-member canvass. A retreat was held for all the teachers and officers of the church school. During the month of November, our pastor, Bro. H. Lawrence Rice, conducted a leadership education program. On Sept. 29 we had a fellowship supper and the installation of the officers of the men's and women's work groups with Brother and Sister Everette Shober as speakers.—Mrs. H. H. Neathawk, Roanoke, Va.

Trinity—Our church met in council Sept. 19 with Elder H. B. Layman presiding. Church and Sunday-school officers were elected for the coming year. A consecration service was held for the new officers on Oct. 3 by Bro. E. J. Jacobs. Several from our church attended district conference. A new organ has recently been purchased for the church which was sponsored by the young people. The women's organization is planning to plant shrubbery around the church in the near future.—Mrs. H. B. Layman, Troutville, Va.

Troutville—During the absence of a pastor, our services were conducted by different speakers. Earl Rowland, Price Hylton, Orville Garber and J. P. Bowman were some of the guest speakers. We made some repairs on the church and did considerable work on the parsonage in preparation for the coming of our new pastor. Bro. Harry Gardner was installed on the morning of Sept. 5, with Bro. S. Earl Mitchell officiating. A reception was held on Sept. 28 for our pastor and his wife. At our quarterly council meeting officers were elected for the coming year. The ladies of the church sponsored a family night. Several of our members attended the regional conference in Roanoke. Our CBYF meets every other Sunday evening. Some of our number attended the annual superintendents' banquet on Oct. 1 at the Hollins Road church. On Oct. 3 we held a dedication service for the officers and teachers of the church school. Seven new members were recently baptized into our church. Evangelistic meetings were conducted by our pastor Oct. 31—Nov. 7. Our love feast was observed on the second Tuesday of November.—Mrs. James L. Kinzie, Troutville, Va.

Second Virginia

Buena Vista—As a result of our recent revival meeting with Elder D. I. Pepple of Woodbury, Pa., as evangelist, seven persons were baptized and five were received by letter into our fellowship. At our September council meeting, church and Sunday-school officers were elected for the new year. Bro. J. C. Garber was re-elected elder and Earl Rowsey Sunday-school superintendent. District meeting delegates were Brother and Sister Arnold Moore and John F. Graham, our pastor. The proceeds from the apple butter which the women made during the fall was used for our building debt. Our church group prepared and sent seventy-five friendship packets to New Windsor for overseas relief. In the absence of the pastor, Bro. Warren Groff of Bridgewater, Pleasant Valley—Paul Miller of Adel, Iowa, conducted a revival meeting in our church. As a result five were baptized into our church. Two have recently been received by letter into our fellowship. On Sept. 19 the centennial of our church was observed with Bro. Guy Wampler of Bassett, Va., bringing the message in the morning and Bro. William Beahm of Bethany Biblical Seminary as speaker for the afternoon and evening services. Bro. Minor C. Miller of Bridgewater reviewed briefly some history of the congregation. A certificate of recognition was given to all who had completed fifty years of membership in our church. Ten young people attended the Youth Conference at Anderson, Ind. Eleven juniors and intermediates attended Camp Bethel during the past summer. Paul Wright, Vernon Garber and Frank Cline were elected delegates to district conference at Barren Ridge. Melvin Wampler was relicensed to the ministry.—Mrs. Frank L. Garber, Weyers Cave, Va.

Pocahontas, Durbin—Since our last report five persons have been received into our church by baptism. Our pastor, Bro. W. E. Hamilton, and his wife served as delegates to Annual Conference. A subdistrict meeting was held in our church. Brother and Sister H. J. Brooks gave a message on their work in India. The offering from our daily vacation Bible school was used to help with the expense of the exterior decorating of the church. Our elder, John T. Glick, was with us in a revival meeting. Our pastor and several of our young people attended the National Youth Conference. The September meeting of the local W.C.T.U. was held in our church. Our fall business meeting was held Sept. 25, with Elder John T. Glick presiding. Church officers and delegates to district meeting were elected at this time. A love feast and communion service was held Sunday evening, Oct. 3, with all seven of the churches in our congregation represented. The women's work group made four comforters and gave used clothing to relief. They also gave money donations to the district, regional and national projects and to the Polio Fund and Share Our Surplus fund. The women's group also helped to reduce the parsonage debt.—Mrs. W. E. Hamilton, Durbin, W. Va.

Pocahontas, Hevener—Since our last report, one person has been baptized and one received by letter into our church. In the absence of our pastor and his wife who were attending Annual Conference, Bro. W. H. Zigler of Churchville, Va., was with us. We had a one-week daily vacation Bible school. The offerings from the school were used for the decorating of the interior of the church. The women's work group has contributed to the district, regional and national projects, Share Our Surplus project and to a children's home in Pennsylvania. On Oct. 6 the women's group presented an evening program at the church for the church and community after which an offering was received for their work.—Mrs. W. E. Hamilton, Durbin, W. Va.

Valley Bethel—Since we were without a pastor, the district board sent supply ministers to our church through the winter months. One Sunday the men's organization of the Beaver Creek congregation brought a program. Bro. Richard Coffman of Dalton, Ohio, served as summer pastor, serving six weeks in the Chimney Run church. Bro. Coffman conducted a one-week revival, closing with our love feast service. Four were received into our church by baptism. On Sept. 19 we held our council meeting with Bro. Rufus King acting as elder. We elected Bro. Edgar Stauffer as elder for one year. On Sunday afternoon, Sept. 26, the Spring Creek men's chorus presented a musical program. Brother and Sister Paul Groff of Bridgewater College will be with us on the second and fourth Sunday of each month during the winter.—Mrs. Eutis W. Bussard, Bolar, Va.

Southern Virginia

Bassett—A school of stewardship was conducted each Wednesday evening during the month of August with W. C. Sweitzer, Guy E. Wampler and Mrs. Tom Norman serving as leaders. The CBYF met each Monday evening during August for study and discussion on the topic, From Friendship to Being in Love. National Youth Conference was attended by Gloria Smith, Joanne Ingram, Mary Louise Dollarhite and Charlotte Craun. Mr. Harvey Luther of the Wells Organization, a church fund organization in Chicago, was in our church for a two-week period in September to assist in an every-member canvass for the raising of our church budget and building fund. On Oct. 3 we used the classrooms in our new educational building for the first time. The basement and the first floor of the building have not been completed. Bro. John T. Glick of Bridgewater, was the evangelist for our fall revival. Four people were received by baptism and one by letter into our church. Our love feast was held Oct. 23, with our pastor, W. Q. Crummett, in charge, assisted by visiting ministers. Our quarterly church school teachers' fellowship saw the film, For Every Child. Our pastor was in charge of the fifteen-minute radio program, Moments of Meditation, Nov. 1-6, over a local radio station.—Charlotte Craun, Bassett, Va.

First West Virginia

Greenland—Our congregation met in council at the Brick church with Elder David Wampler of Petersburg presiding. Bro. B. M. Rollins of Keyser, W. Va., was chosen as part-time pastor for the congregation. We have been without a pastor for two years. During this time Brethren Ross Johnson and Lester Evans, local ministers, have been in charge of the services. Sister Ollie F. Idleman represented us at Annual Conference. Our delegates to district conference were Brethren Lester Evans and Cecil Sites. Evangelistic meetings were held at the Brick church the last of August and the first of September. Our fall love feast was held on World Communion Sunday at the Oak Dale church. Preaching services are conducted twice each Sunday at the Oak Dale and Brick churches. Midweek prayer meetings are held at the Brick church.—Loretta M. Idleman, Scherr, W. Va.

La Tour and Son

Thawing Out

AN OUTDOOR pump needs thawing out after a night of sub-zero weather. Here is one that will begin to function soon, thanks to the steaming contents of a tea-kettle. The deep resources of the well can then be tapped.

The picture may seem primitive to those who can turn on a faucet for whatever service they desire. But it reminds us that often the deep wells of the Spirit can be sealed over when winter grips the soul. Many a church needs thawing out because, though its wells are deep and its resources are adequate, its spiritual temperature fell below the freezing point. Many a church member has allowed icicles to form on his profession of faith. It will take the spark of a new vision, the warmth of a new fellowship, the fire of fervent prayer and a burning faith to revive a church that succumbs to the deep freeze of inaction. But miracles still happen. God can touch a frost-bitten Christian so that his heart is strangely warmed—even in mid-January.

Cityward Migration

Mr. Dan Blickenstaff poses a provocative and timely question in the Nov. 27 issue when he asks, "Why Losses in City-ward Migration"? I have heard this question many times from young pastors who begin to feel that they are waging a losing battle against a great host of hostile forces in inner cities; from those disturbed when they compare meager gains in areas of promise with some of the much more dramatic successes of other churches. Still others raise this question as they inquire into the future and destiny of the Church of the Brethren. No matter what the source, it is a demanding question. I am not sure of the answer. However, I am sure that some of the naive schemes of "cause people" are of little, if any help, and are often dysfunctional.

Before there can be an enlightened solution, we must, it seems to me, ask some very basic questions about the nature of urban culture, sources and effects of mobility, the ethos (beliefs, practices and ideologies) of the Church of the Brethren, etc. These questions are not easy. They are the more difficult because of our lack of valid analytical data. I know of no one who has valid data on the amount of loss in this type of mobility; I have not seen any enlightened guesses. That there is considerable leakage through this process is hardly debatable. It has been assumed by some "ruralists" that the amount is tremendous and that unless we can keep our youth in the rural areas, we are doomed. This would provide an easy answer if it just were possible. Not only are most of the schemes offered quite impractical, but their proponents are either unmindful of or purposely ignore certain major Christian presuppositions.

I do not propose to deal systematicaly with the real nature and effects of the processes of mobility but wish to relate some of my experiences that may provide some significant clues. Since I came to Chicago three years ago, I have spoken in thirty-three different churches and synagogues belonging to sixteen different denominations. Upon each occasion I have made it clear that I am Brethren. I always announce it with a sense of pride, even though I know that my allegiance arises more from an accident of birth (for which I am grateful) than by exercise of my own judgment. On every occasion (except in the ten Negro churches in which I have spoken) one or more, and sometimes a dozen, people have come up to me and stated that they used to be Brethren, to which I always reply, "Well, what happened?" I now have 154 replies; some of them may leave Mr. Blickenstaff more enlightened, but perhaps no happier.

It is necessary for me to place these answers in certain homogeneous categories, recognizing that in so doing, I lose some of the value of each. It should also be noted that none of these responses are from ex-Brethren who are nonfunctioning church people. These people, no doubt, would be just as numerous and just as informative. I rank these in order of frequency:

1. Many marry outside of the church. This may have taken place before they moved to the city.

2. Many left the church to get away from things in it that they identified as provincial, dogmatic, puritanical. Often these people were in tension with these things before they came to the city but the new environment provided the first opportunity for them to give expression to this dissatisfaction.

3. Many feel that they were never cultivated adequately by the Church of the Brethren in their new home —often not nearly so well as a church of some other denomination.

4. Others live or have lived considerable distance from any Church of the Brethren.

5. Some found that the work situation provided certain opportunities for the development of "natural group" affiliations where there were no Brethren and often there were evangelizing members of other denominations.

6. Others state that they feel that the Brethren ethos and church program have not adapted themselves to urban culture and they are not relevant in the world in which they move.

These answers are quite superficial, to be sure. Any definitive study must provide better sampling and more extensive analysis, but perhaps they will help us in our further inquiry regarding our nature and destiny.—Merlin Clark, Research Associate, Chicago Theological Seminary, Chicago, Ill.

Greeting seventy European refugees at Idlewild Airport, the first mass arrival under the new refugee act

THIS WE CAN DO

Our District — Our Church — Our Family

Jacob F. Replogle

Photos by Church World Service

I SAW our newest Americans received into this country. The occasion was a Church Resettlement Conference of Church World Service in the Calvary church house in New York, on October 27, 1954.

Actually it was a meeting of various denominational, voluntary and governmental agencies brought together to discuss ways and means of making more effective the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, passed by the 83rd Congress, and the opening of our doors and hearts to those in need.

Pastor of First church, Baltimore, Maryland

Gathered together were representatives of the State Department, the U. S. Employment Service, the World Council and the National Council of Churches, private voluntary agencies, and those from Protestant and Eastern Orthodox Churches. It was as ecumenical as one could wish. Seven representatives, which included a lone pastor, comprised the delegation from the Church of the Brethren. But that lone pastor learned much.

One was shocked to realize anew the tragic needs of the world. While thousands of refugees have been resettled, yet today there are some forty million homeless people around the world, more than in 1948. Congress last year passed the Refugee Relief Act which opens the legal doors and offers the services of all of the governmental agencies in the task of implementing this humanitarian program. But the real task is up to the churches, to you and to me. This new refugee legislation of 1953 gives new life and hope to thousands who know more about it than the average American does; 214,000 refugees may find a new life and become new Americans. One hundred thousand of these look to our Protestant and Eastern Orthodox Churches in America as their only hope. A thousand have been assigned to the Church of the Brethren. That is about one refugee family for each congregation in our Brotherhood, I thought as I sat there and heard of the needs, saw governmental agencies declare their helpfulness, listened to other denominations report, and finally experienced the joy of talking with the newest of the new Americans to arrive. This we can do! This our district, our church our family can do!

The cost is only that of inland transportation and essential living costs until the family gets started. Even then the newcomer is to pay you back! But what is needed, I learned, is "assurances" on the part of Brethren families to help these homeless to find a new life here. The government asks only that assurance be given that the refugee has a home to come to, a job promised and that they do not become public charges. At first glance that looked like a big order but then I saw how easy it could be. The whole U. S. Employment Service in America is behind you on the matter of employment. They, with others, conduct a thorough investigation of the refugee before he is ever cleared. The church, denomination and even Church World Service supports the American family in case of problems or need. We are asked for so little that means so much to others. The resettlement office in New Windsor can provide us with the applications and files of dozens of people who need our help.

But it was a never-to-be-forgotten experience there in New York. The first arrivals under the new law landed by air in the middle of the night at the Idlewild Airport. Some seventy men, women and children had been notified just several days before and rushed to a roaring plane on Sunday in Europe. Above the twinkling lights of Manhattan on Tuesday night the homeless caught their first glimpse of their new home. Government and church officials welcomed them to their new land.

Now here they were at 11:30 the next morning before a strange but smiling group who arose and applauded their entrance into the conference hall. They came from Greece, Italy, Austria, Germany and elsewhere, seventy strong. There were little children, like our own, playing on the laps of mothers, youth who had escaped from behind the iron curtain, young couples, orphans and aged grandmothers.

Words of greeting were expressed by Mr. Harper Sibley, nationally known Christian layman. Then in broken English, a few of the new Americans responded. Here was one little lad, younger than my own, born in Latvia, his father and mother killed, who made this great adventure alone, greeted so warmly by his grandparents, themselves refugees three years ago. With tears streaming down his cheeks and down the faces of the grandparents and half the people in the hall, he could only say to that great company, "I am so glad to be in America."

Does not this mean something to you? One can not realize the tragic need of the homeless and the delirious joy of those who have had someone to open the door of his heart and to give an assurance of a new life. These assurances for new families are possible. They must come from you and me—today. I could not help but think of the mistress of Bedloe Island, the Statue of Liberty, sending her shaft of light into the darkness of night as these newest of new Americans began to sense the reality of the verse inscribed on the statue, "Give me your tired, your poor, your huddled masses, yearning to breathe free." Millions are yearning to hear those words and see that shaft of light but only we can make it possible.

Elfan Rees, advisor on refugee affairs of the World Council of Churches, summed it up in an interpretation of the Biblical account of Peter and John meeting the lame man at the Gate Beautiful as recorded in Acts 3. You and I stand before the tragic homeless of the world and we too can say, "Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have I give to thee. Here is an assurance of a new life in America. This I give. In the name of Christ, rise up and come."

Tough Mind and Tender Heart

WILLIAM JAMES once divided the human race into two types of persons: the "tough-minded" and the "tender-minded." Unfortunately the division usually leads to a contrast between the tough and the tender, the realist and the idealist, the man with his feet on the ground as opposed to the man with his head in the clouds. And of course in our rough and tumble world most honors go to the hardheaded realist.

Yet honesty compels us to admit that simply being tough is inadequate. We crave tenderness. We need to love and be loved. Does tenderness belong only to those who refuse to face facts?

If we read our New Testament correctly, we discover that the Christian experience demands a tough mind and a tender heart. Jesus had no illusions about evil or what it did to men or what it could do to society. The optimistic faith of the early Christians was firmly grounded in a realistic understanding of the world in which they lived. But they were just as realistic about their faith. They knew what produced Calvary. But they also had experienced Pentecost.

Christians have too often been tender-minded. They forgot Jesus' advice to be wise as serpents as well as harmless as doves. A tough-minded Christian does not blink at unpleasant facts. He tries to be honest with himself, recognizing his own bias, his tendency to excuse himself, his ingrown pride, his human limitations. He knows that you cannot find right answers by overlooking half of the facts. He knows that there is no shortcut to truth. A sound program of Christian action faces up to the realities of sin and evil.

But in keeping his feet on the ground a Christian can be tough-minded without hardening his heart. He remembers that when love controls a man, miracles can happen. If you always look at your feet, you may be realistic but you will not go far. It is the heart of Christians that must be strangely warmed by a holy passion. The heart must be sensitive to a brother's need, understanding of his plight and dedicated to helping him. It is the heart also that quickens in response to the Holy Spirit. The heart may grasp a wisdom that eludes the tough mind, for all its realism. And if there must be a choice between the generous impulse of the tender heart and the cold calculation of the tough mind, let the heart speak. As Thornton Wilder wrote in one of his novels, "The mistakes we make through generosity are less terrible than the gains we acquire through caution."

A Christian need not lay aside his mental equipment when he worships God. Let his trained and toughened mind remember that the earth is the Lord's and the heavens declare the glory of God. Who can think of the Creator with more reverence than an astronomer? Who can marvel at the grace of forgiveness more than a psychologist or at the power of prayer more than a physician? Yet all their knowledge will miss its mark if their minds are not motivated by a heart that responds to Jesus Christ. His tender regard for all mankind becomes our responsibility also. In his service we need both mind and heart, both intelligence and sympathy, both proven judgment and incredible love. God wants the energetic response of a tough mind and a tender heart.—K.M.

Facing Up to Peacetime Conscription

AN ARTICLE in this issue reminds us that once again universal military training—or some form of peacetime conscription—will be under consideration soon by the United States Congress. Several months ago President Eisenhower assured the annual convention of the American Legion that the administration would regard compulsory military service as its "no. 1 objective" in the new session of Congress. More recently military leaders have proposed that qualified young men be prepared for active and reserve military service for a period of several years.

A new argument for universal military training this year may be that it will help to curb juvenile delinquency by solving the problem of uncertainty facing young men and by giving them some character training. But the certainty of conscription is hardly any recommendation for it. And military training remains about what it always has been—training for killing. Indeed there are reports that the Army has abandoned many of the "social reforms" that were adopted in 1946 in order to reform the military caste system. There will again be strong emphasis on saluting, on discipline and on privileges of rank. Opponents of conscription will do well to point out again the undemocratic trends that militarism encourages.

Other questions should be asked when the new proposals for UMT are outlined. How much will the program cost? What provisions, if any, are suggested for moral safeguards? How will military training affect college enrollments? For what war —specifically—is such universal training necessary? Could not such financial and human resources be put to better use in the cause of peace?—K.M.

"Is Any Sick Among You..."

Carl H. Zigler

HEALING was a definite part of Jesus' ministry. It grew out of his compassion for people in need. Sometimes he used oil and sometimes he only laid hands upon the sick, but in every case healing was based upon the faith of the person. "He healed all manner of sickness and all manner of diseases among the people" (Matt. 4:23).

If a sick person is to be healed, he must develop patience, for it sometimes takes time for health to return. While we must acknowledge that healing does not come apart from the power of God, this does not say that man should neglect to use the gifts of medical science to assist in the return of health. The world is blessed today by many Christian doctors who are instruments in the hand of God. To turn to medical science is not necessarily to turn away from God. The two need not be separated. Medical science is not evil unless it is misused and misunderstood.

God never winks at man's sincerity in his earnest search for truth. He may frown upon our failure to see his hand at work in numberless ways. He is a God of order and law and not of disorder and confusion. The Christian will not turn to medicine alone, apart from his faith in God's power, and neither should he. The Creator is not man's last resort after all other resorces have been exhausted. Christ's followers are to submit their case without doubt or reservation into the hands of God that his will might be done.

Healing as a ministry of the church can become a great blessing. As in other sacraments, it can also be carried to extreme. This is especially true when it becomes mixed with emotion or when it bursts forth in ecstatic behavior. The service of anointing as generally conceived is not one characterized in this way. It is indeed "divine healing" in the truest sense. It is a service intended to become an integral part of the church's work. The church is supposed to bring God's healing power through faith to those who are sick and desire this power. This was a part of the messianic mission. It was out of Jesus' divine nature and love that he healed the sick through faith and the power of God. It is estimated that three fourths of Jesus' mission was devoted to healing and curing the afflicted. Since he came to do the will of the Father, we can truthfully say that God does not send sickness upon us. Even though good may come out of the experience of illness, it is true for only a limited number of those who recover. Most folks are the same persons after the disease, operation or suffering are over that they were before. The majority of people do not lose their fears in the experience of illness.

It is the Christian minority who come out of such an experience as changed individuals. It is often because of their faith in God that they are changed. This change may have been implemented through divine healing. In many cases this is the service of anointing as practiced in the Church of the Brethren. However, God has more than one way to heal even those who believe upon him. The Divine Being is almighty in his healing as well as otherwise.

While it would be unfair to say people are healed by faith alone, it would also be incorrect to say they are healed only by the service of anointing with oil. The crucial test for healing that is divine is to have a growing love for Christ and a living faith in his power to make whole. Since "perfect love casts out fear" love becomes a tool in the hands of the believer. If one will combine love with faith in Christ, he will be able to overcome the fears that grip his life when illness comes.

Here is what a prominent doctor in the church writing on the anointing service has to say about fear: "The anointing removes fear from the patient's mind, and thereby certain toxic poisons are eliminated from the system. It puts in the place of fear a confidence, a faith and a hope. It gives the patient a general mental boost which reacts very favorably on the glands of internal secretion, such as adrenal gland, and the thyroid gland, and the secretions of the liver and pancreas. Fear of the ravages of disease and fear of death tend to produce a sort of paralysis of the entire system. When these fears are removed the above-mentioned glands function more normally.

"This reacts very beneficially upon the patient's physical condition often turning the tide in the progress of the disease and starting the patient on the road to recovery.

"In addition, the anointing gives the patient a spiritual uplift and a feeling of well-being, which enables him to endure pain and disease. An effective anointing is a strong ally of medical science, and as a physician I always favor the anointing service when the patient desires it and has the religious background to enable him to enter into it effectively."*

Just as disease captures the body, so fear captures the mind. Only faith and love in Christ can cast it out. It is through him as the Great Physician that we receive the "right spirit" and a regenerated life, for not only does he heal, he also forgives our guilt. "If any man be in Christ Jesus he is a new creature" (2 Cor. 5: 17).

The Great Physician has the cure for the world's ills, and for yours and mine whether they be mental, physical or moral. His is often the untried way, but is nevertheless the only path that leads to abundant life, health and peace.

Anton Dietrich — Camera Clix

Industrial Evangelism in Japan

Toyohiko Kagawa

Photos by Religious News Service

Dr. Kagawa emphasizes a point for the benefit of a parishioner. Now sixty-one, he began his ministry at the age of twenty in a Kobe shack which later developed into a leading religious institution

THE Christian movement of Japan was started among the dwellers in big cities where intellectuals lived. Because the church leaders tried to have churches attain financial independence, they could not reach out to the needy working classes.

In the last decade of the nineteenth century, it was by some Christians that a labor movement was started among railway laborers. This first trade union movement, led by Christians, made a good start toward the uplift of the underprivileged class of Japan. However, the Christian movement of the laboring class was for a time rather slow and without much progress. I hesitate to report about my own work among the working people, but, without doing so, it is difficult to understand the progress of the Christian movement among industrial workers.

When I first entered the slums of Kobe, and also later when I started work in Tokyo, I aimed at two things: (1) I would help the laborers to help themselves, acting as good Samaritans through their own organizations; (2) I wished that some of the good people of the labor class would understand the true spirit of Christ, and, acting as good neighbors, would continue to uphold Christian principles as these must be applied in permanent welfare policies for the underprivileged.

Therefore, I organized labor unions, farmers unions, consumers co-operatives, credit unions, medical co-operatives, life insurance co-operatives and mutual aid co-operatives. I also helped the government to organize unemployment insurance and sick insurance.

And I helped organize a movement for universal suffrage for men, the goal of which we achieved in 1926. Similarly among women, we worked for it through many years and got women's universal suffrage in 1946.

Thus, though we have achieved the social and political freedoms for which we have been at work since forty years ago, the corresponding progress of the Christian movement in the field of economics has not yet been as we wished it to be. There are five reasons for this delay:

(1) There is a strong Communistic movement in Asia and particularly among the laborers of Japan. They despise Christianity as a sort of drug like opium.

(2) Scientific materialism of Japan teaches agnosticism to the laborers.

(3) Native traditions of Japan, including a number of varieties of religion, prevent the people from accepting the Christian faith.

(4) We Christians are also responsible for this time lag.

Pastor and evangelist, Church of Christ in Japan

The theological seminaries do not represent Christ as the Carpenter of Nazareth, walking among us today, at this crisis of the twentieth century. They do not teach the need of Christianizing the labor class. But unless we win the souls of the laborers, I believe the destiny of Japan and of the Orient will be dark for many centuries to come.

(5) The lack of financial resources is another reason. As I had some income from my writings, I could establish labor schools in Osaka, Kobe and Tokyo, and with the help of my friends I could build a few settlement houses—while the needs were even greater than what we could afford to give to meet them.

Before the war, I was trying to do some work among the laborers to give them the good tidings of Jesus Christ, in Kobe, Osaka and Tokyo. And I was successful in organizing four churches among them. After the terrible breakdown of Japan, I had to get busy to open up new evangelistic stations among the poor districts of Tokyo. Nearly two million poor people lived on the east side of Tokyo, beyond the Sumida River. This was the headquarters district of communism. From that section the general secretary of the Communist Party, Mr. Kuichi Tokuda, was elected to the national Diet. But after we had opened up seven preaching stations, no more Communists were elected from that section.

Rev. Ken Muto, pastor of the Hongo Central church in Tokyo and a leading Christian scholar, was elected moderator of the United Church of Christ in Japan (Kyodan). Dr. Muto, a believer in ecumenicity, is a strong advocate of indigenous control of church affairs and self-support

Up to 1952 there were thirty-six members of the Communist Party in our House of Commons, but in the general election of that year, all the Communist candidates were defeated except one. There is but one delegate from the Communist Party in the House of Commons now, and he is from the city of Osaka. There are still, however, about fourteen delegates from the Communist party in provincial assemblies and nearly two hundred and forty in rural village assemblies.

Missions Among Coal Miners

After the second world war, mission work was started among coal miners for the first time. Several workers moved into the mining districts, one of whom was Rev. Danjiro Hattori. He had been preaching in Okinawa and had to return to the main island of Japan, Honshu, because of the defeat in war. He prayed to be able to work among coal miners in Onoura, Kyushu. He himself became a dynamite carrier in the coal pits and thus won the trust of the miners. Now he has been very successful in getting many Christian believers among them. This is one of the finest examples, of an heroic disciple of Christ, who has won the hearts of the laborers to our Lord. Mr. Hattori has a small church building and a small day nursery for the miners' children at the Onoura coal mine.

Dr. Kagawa is pastor of both of these churches, which were rebuilt with the help of American Christians. The top one is in the Shinkawa slums in Kobe and the other is located in Tokyo

I have two Christian churches for coal miners on the islands of Sakito and Oshima, respectively, both in the prefecture of Nagasaki. Through my preaching at these coal mines I won about a hundred and twenty followers of Christ. So at Sakito we rented a piece of land from the coal mine and built a small church building and established a church there. At Oshima the Christians are holding their church meetings in a dressmaking school.

At Taira there had been a big riot, fighting against policemen, in which it was evident that the Communists had taken the lead. Two years after this riot had occurred, I was invited by the city authorities to preach among the Taira (miners) and about five hundred people were willing to believe Christ. So today we have in Taira a new church and a new pastor. And through the efforts of the young pastor and the city authorities, the atmosphere of that locality has changed completely.

In Hokkaido, the northern island of Japan, at Ashibesu and Bibai, there had been a terrible strife led by Communists, who even beat the head manager (of the coal mine) almost to death. Then I was asked to preach in those places. And the results were fine. We have now good Christian groups in those districts.

These are a few examples of the extension of the kingdom of God among the lower classes of Japan, of how we would be successful, if we would dare to approach the lions' den!

However, we need to train real workers among them, such workers as will be willing to do the dangerous work of dynamite-carrying for the miners, like Rev. Mr. Hattori!

Railway workers in Japan have big unions, with altogether nearly five hundred thousand workers. And they have strikes, one after another! However, an earnest Christian member of our church, Hideo Hasegawa, was once made the president of the Osaka area council of the railway trades unions. Later he was promoted to be a professor of a school of railway engineers in the same Osaka area. This time he was successful in organizing a Christian association among the railway workers. He has now about two thousand members in this association.

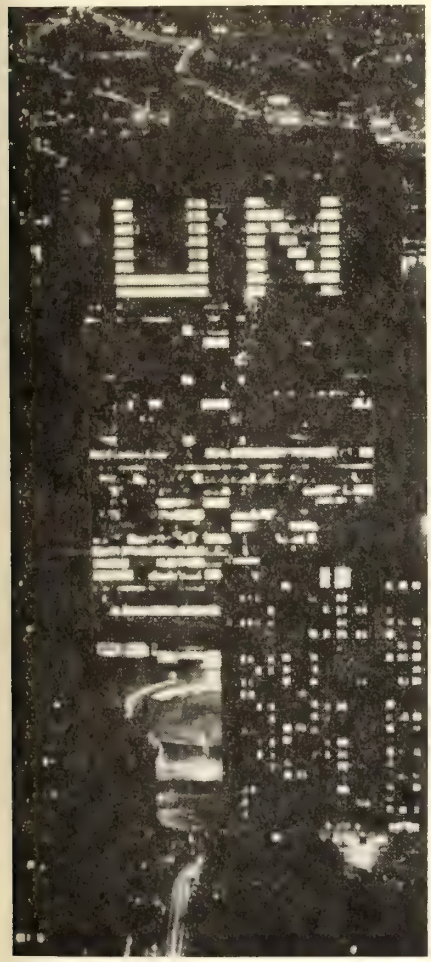
The rate of accidents was very high on one certain line, between Osaka and Wakayama. But after Mr. Hasegawa got the gospel organization started and nearly fifty per cent of the workers joined it, the rate of accidents dropped to half of its former rate, much to the surprise of the railway authorities. And since the Christian group proved its effectiveness even in reducing accidents, the Communist propaganda was stopped.

Factory Bible Classes

We have many Bible classes held in the different factories in different localities. Around Tokyo, there were about two hundred such groups, of many different kinds of workers. Newspaper printers, iron workers, machine shop workers, etc., are a few examples of the sorts of workers who hold weekly meetings for Biblical study. Thousands of Tokyo laborers are studying the Bible thus, every week, in such factories. And we find a similar situation in other cities in which we have fine leaders. This sort of thing is new since the War.

Organizing the Labor Government of Japan

After the war defeat, I had to assist in organizing the Labor Party of Japan and thus had the opportunity to get many Christian leaders appointed as cabinet ministers. Mr. Tetsu Katayama, a member of the United Church of Christ of Japan (Kyodan), was elected as prime minister; Mr. Chozaburo Mizutani was appointed as the minister of industry and commerce. (This Mr. Mizutani was baptized in the slum chapel of Kobe many years ago by me.) Mr. Yoshio Suzuki, a member of a Christian church, was made minister of justice. Mr. Suehiro Nishio was made the vice-premier. (This Mr. Nishio had confessed before a court judge that he believed in Christ. I had assisted him to organize the labor unions in Western Japan, and helped him to be elected to the Diet.) Mr. Komakichi Matsuoka, the general secretary of the Japan Federation of Labor, was elected as president of the House of Commons. As I have said, he is a member of a former Congregational, now Kyodan, Church (United Church of Christ in Japan).



Though the numbers of Christians are rather small compared to the total population of Japan, yet the influence among the laborers is great. This is the record of the movement of Japan.

The Communist Opposition

Since, however, the strength of materialistic communism in Asia is great, we hardly know how to compete with it. The Communists send over from China millions of dollars to the Japanese Communists, saying these funds are gifts to meet the natural calamities. They smuggle in drugs, too, in large quantities, to sell to secure funds for Communist propaganda. And while we Christians sit back contentedly and contemplate ideologies, they act to help the laborers on strikes and sabotage and spend much money for such movements.

Then how can we meet the existing situation in Japan? The police have published the numbers of Communists who have registered as such at police stations as at about ninety thousand. These Communists move as an organized body, while Christian forces are divided into many sections and compartments, with denominational ideologies and without funds! Thus there arises a serious question, as to how we shall keep the Christian front in order. Please pray for us.

The Family Counselor

Naomi Will H. K. Zeller, Jr. Jesse Ziegler

The Family Counselor welcomes letters of inquiry. They may be addressed: Family Life Department, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Dear Counselor,

We are the proud parents of twins born within the last month. We feel doubly blessed. Since we have other children, we are not exactly green hands at this matter of bringing up children, but we are aware that bringing up twins is different. The doctor told us that they are not identical twins. How can we give each of them a chance to grow up as an individual and avoid the trouble spots?

Happy and Concerned Parents.

Dear Friends,

It is certainly true that if your twins are normal and healthy you have been doubly blessed. If they would have been otherwise the fact that they were twins would have doubled the load.

You are probably interested in knowing just a little of how twins come into being. Your doctor told you your twins are not identical. This means that they are what are called fraternal twins. In other words, they are simply like any brother and sister except they are of the same age. Such twins result from the simultaneous fertilizing of two ova instead of one as in the ordinary pregnancy. They will be no more alike and yet just as much alike as other brothers and sisters. Identical twins are almost exactly alike. They result from the division of one fertilized ovum, making two individuals instead of one. Identical twins will be very hard to tell apart.

There are a number of things we should think about that may make it easier for twins to develop normally.

1. It should always be remembered that being a twin is a biological fact that should no more be talked about, commented on than being tall or short, thin or fat. The child has no control over this biological fact. Therefore, it is to be accepted for what it is. This simple principle will determine many other aspects of the treatment of the child by the parent.

2. It is important for the child to feel that he is just as much an individual as if he were not a twin. It would seem wiser to give a name that is distinctive, therefore, rather than to give names to the twins which are almost the same. This practice has made it difficult for some twins to establish themselves as individuals.

3. Different clothing rather than similar clothing will probably give the child more of a chance to feel that he is an individual. Similar clothing may seem cute to the visitor and it clearly calls attention to the fact that the children are twins. It seems no more in place thus to announce "twin-ness" than to wear some particular style of clothing to call attention to one's "fatness."

4. Opportunity should be given for the development of different sets of skills. At an early stage this means a variety of toys for the twins to play with. Later on it means giving each the opportunity to specialize in his particular interest. It means steering away from giving the same musical instrument to each simply because they are twins.

5. Since the children are of the same age, parents should be extraordinarily careful to express to each equal amounts of affection. This is important to the identical twins because, although their demands may be quite different, their need for affection is likely to be about equal.

What we have said applies pretty much to both types of twins. The temperament and disposition of the identical twins may be very similar while that of the fraternal may be quite different. Nevertheless, each individual has the right to be treated as an individual and it is this principle which is determinative.

God's Dimensions

WILBUR E. BRUMBAUGH

By losing God's dimensions
When torn by worldly tensions,
We rue the cross we've taken
And feel we've been forsaken.

By finding God's dimensions,
We conquer worldly tensions,
And love the cross we've taken;
And know we're not forsaken!

UMT in 1955?

Elmer Neufeld

Compulsory military training in peacetime is again an issue. How will churches meet it?

WILL the American public finally yield to the military mind? Will our future generations be saddled with a permanent program of universal, eight-year military training? As a dark cloud looming on the horizon, the following circumstances forewarn of a gathering struggle for the increased militarization of this nation.

The current Selective Service Law (Universal Military Training and Selective Act of 1951) expires on June 30, 1955. Inevitably then, the whole question of Selective Service and military training will again be considered by Congress during the early months of this year.

That complete termination of the draft law is apparently receiving little serious consideration—in spite of the fact that our nation is not at war—warns of the effectiveness of continuing military propaganda. Under the guise of victory over UMT in 1951 and 1952, the American people have nevertheless been conditioned to several doctrines which belong at the heart of UMT—a continuing peacetime draft, and the universality of draft calls. Selective Service has increasingly operated under the notion that each qualified youth must inevitably serve the military. Is it true, as suggested by the November issue of Atlantic Monthly, that a majority of Americans now favor some form of UMT?

Military Wants Larger Reserve

In spite of the fact that the 1951 law prescribed an eight-year liability—two years of service for the draftee and six years in the reserve—the Defense Department has been extremely dissatisfied. The present reserve provision has not been found enforceable, and voluntary re-enlistments have been dropping off. The 1955 campaign will almost certainly see a concerted drive to secure a reserve program with adequate "teeth"—a program in which young men will be under compulsion to continue their reserve training.

President Eisenhower has long been known to favor UMT. According to a campaign statement in 1952 he did not favor UMT while Selective Service was in effect. That statement was equivocal enough and is now old enough to have no remaining significance. Before the last annual convention of the American Legion the President clearly pledged his administration to seek enactment of UMT in the 1955 session of Congress.

That change to a Democratic Congress will also increase the chances of UMT appears likely, although of course not certainly. The influential chairmanship of the House Armed Services Committee will revert to Representative Carl Vinson, a life-long advocate of UMT. The present chairman, Dewey Short, has been a staunch foe of such legislation. In the Senate Armed

Former associate secretary, National Service Board for Religious Objectors; presently graduate student at University of Chicago

Services Committee, Richard Russell is expected to replace Senator Saltonstall. Even the fact that 1955 is not an election year may enhance the chances of UMT.

Current planning on Selective Service and UMT by the Executive Department is not known and has likely not been completed. Its specific legislative proposal is not expected in Congress until January or February of 1955. Although the administration proposal could possibly be little more than a request for extension of Selective Service, it is more likely to involve additional steps toward UMT as embodied in the Department of Defense plan presented last summer.

Under this plan all young men at the approximate age of 18½ would be assigned to either active or reserve duty (the choice perhaps depending on a lot)—that is, either two years' active service with a six-year reserve status or a shorter period of training with longer reserve training. An essential feature of the plan would be strict enforcement of reserve training for the balance of eight years. This reserve training would consist of weekly drills or technical schooling and perhaps summer encampment. For eight years each available youth would remain subject to military control. The aim would be an armed force of over 6,000,000 men, divided about equally between active and reserve men immediately available for military action. Lest the American people should become suspicious of such monstrosity, there has been an avoidance of referring to the plan as universal military training.

Moral Implications

Perhaps eight years will be adequate to purge our young men of their moral inhibitions against killing, to strip them of training received in the home, school and church. After the long period of military service is over—as suggested in a shocking article carried by Colliers* some two years ago—after this period of military indoctrination the curtain of morality shall again be dropped over the brute beneath! Against such a system of indoctrination, with its emphasis on a double set of moral standards, every Christian must cry out in moral indignation—unless he too wishes to draw a "curtain" in his own soul!

On the one hand, we are told that in case of another war there won't be time for the necessary military training; therefore, six million men shall be kept armed and momentarily available for combat. On the other hand, we are told to view the present cold and non-Communist worlds as likely to continue for ten, twenty, or even fifty years. In the meantime a few quick blasts of the hydrogen bomb could virtually reduce any nation to ashes. Talleyrand once told his chief, Napoleon Bonaparte, "You can do anything with bayonets, sir, except sit on them." Can America expect to sit on the hydrogen bomb for the next fifty years? Where shall we place our trust?

Although the actual Congressional debate on Selective Service and UMT will not begin until after the new year, a relatively short period remains for the church and concerned individuals to make a current study of the problem and to plan a responsible approach. Surely we can agree to discourage increased reliance on sheer military strength and, on the other hand, to encourage all possible means of reducing world tensions—through economic and technical assistance, by reducing trade barriers, through the United Nations, in seeking universal disarmament, etc. Once more we will need to prepare for a campaign of letters, newspaper articles, public discussions, personal delegations, Congressional testimony and prayer. May God grant wisdom and courage.

The Preacher and His Audience. Webb B. Garrison. Revell, 1954. 286 pages. $3.00.

This book presents a new approach to preaching. It is based upon vast research and study of preaching from the standpoint of the audience. It shows familiarity with all the new discoveries in communication and semantics. The author, Webb Garrison, is a seminary dean with a specialist's knowledge of journalism, public relations and the techniques of communicating ideas.

Most ministers need to understand much more fully the intricate and delicate process of sowing truth in the mind and heart of the people of their congregations. They need to sit in the seat of the worshiper and try to understand his needs.

Every preacher who desires to be a master in the urgently needed art of communicating the gospel should use this book, not as inspirational reading, but as he would use a manual in any other craft. It is not promotion material on preaching, but excellent guidance material in "how to do it!"—Edward K. Ziegler.

Celestial Space, Inc. Charles Coombs. Westminster Press, 1954. 190 pages. $2.75.

Here is a story for junior-highs. It is of no particular significance as Christian teaching, but it is entertaining reading. It is the highly imaginative and very implausible story of three young people who acquire a deed to all space within a hundred light years of the city hall. The resultant publicity and the kids' ingenuity in making the most of a good thing work a marvelous transformation for a dying little town.—Vernard Eller.

News and Comment From Around the World

Laymen Called to Lead in Peace Program

The call for American laymen to lead in a threefold program of prayer, study and action for peace was issued by the Board of Managers of United Church Men at its annual meeting in St. Louis. The resolution declared: "The manner in which people of goodwill now respond to the appalling needs of mankind throughout the world may well determine whether our civilization is headed toward the horror of global annihilation or toward its most glorious hour. We would associate ourselves wholeheartedly with this inspired plan of living prayer for a just and durable peace."

Quakers Launch East African Community Center

The world's two largest Quaker Meetings — one African, the other British — are playing major roles in planning and financing a Quaker community center in Nairobi, Kenya Colony, Africa. The center is located in one of Kenya's toughest native problem areas. A Quaker team has already taken up quarters in the center to direct social and welfare work among its African residents and teach them organized sports. The East Africa Yearly Meeting of Friends was established as an independent Quaker body in 1946, after existing for fifty-two years as the African mission of the American Friends Board of Missions.

Selassie Hails Swedish Missionaries

Emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia has paid high tribute to the work Swedish missionaries have done in his country over a period of nearly a century. The Swedish National Evangelical Union sent its first overseas mission to Ethiopia in 1866. In addition to evangelical work, the Swedish missions have been responsible for the founding and maintenance of a number of schools, hospitals and nurses' training establishments.

Alcohol an Important Factor in December Traffic Toll

According to the National Safety Council more people die in traffic accidents on Dec. 24 than on any other day of the year. The council declares, "Since holiday celebrations seem to increase the consumption of alcohol by motorists and pedestrians during the Christmas season, this perhaps is an important factor in the December traffic accident toll." The American Business Men's Research Foundation of Chicago is urging the recognition of the danger of driving after drinking on the day before Christmas. They point out that similar recognition of the danger on New Year's Eve has reduced the mortality rate on that holiday. The foundation points out that at the present daily average, twenty-four persons will be killed in alcohol-involved highway accidents in the United States each day of 1955.

Literacy Team Visiting Pakistan

A Laubach literacy team met in Pakistan early in December to begin a program which will take them from Pakistan to the southern part of the Sudan, then eastward across south Asia to Netherlands, New Guinea, and will conclude with a month's work in Korea. They will spend about eight weeks in Pakistan. They are co-operating with local Christian councils, American mission leaders and the World Health Organization.

Indonesian Universities Show Lively Growth

The Christian University in Djakarta in Indonesia recently celebrated its first birthday. It has opened its second year with a staff of 16 lecturers and 100 students. The Batak Church in Sumatra has opened its own Nommensen University, with an enrollment of thirty-six students in theology and law. Many Moslem groups in Indonesia are insisting that universities be established where the Moslem ideology will be taught. Christians who are in a small minority feel that they will be in a difficult position if the Moslems are able to take over control after the general elections in 1955.

Temple of Goodwill Project to Be Expedited

Although New York City has been selected as the permanent headquarters of the National Council of Churches, plans for a Temple of Goodwill in Columbus, Ohio, are continuing. The Temple site embraces a large downtown block. The contemplated structure will include an auditorium, a banquet hall, conference rooms and office space for denominations interested in locating in Columbus.

National Council Assembly Meets in Boston

Burton Metzler

BOSTON provided an appropriate setting for the third Assembly of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the United States of America which convened November 28 through December 4. The city and its environs are reminiscent of the Pilgrims, the Puritans, religious freedom, and early Christian leadership in this country. Two of its churches provided meeting places for the Assembly, the Old South Congregational Church organized in 1669 and the Trinity Episcopal Church of which Phillips Brooks was the preacher. A Bostonian in addressing the Assembly welcomed it, facetiously of course, "to the cultural center of the universe."

The Statler Hotel was the headquarters for the Assembly. Here on the mezzanine floor were registration and information desks, offices, and various displays of the work of the Council. Business sessions were held in a large auditorium on this same floor. In this room the delegates were seated at long tables arranged lengthwise of the room in front of the speaker's table, the delegation from each denomination being seated together. At the rear in an adjoining room were exhibits of the work of the divisions of the Council and a book display provided by the various denominational publishing houses. On the fourth floor were the press rooms which were the headquarters of reporters for denominational papers, daily papers, and magazines. This hotel was a busy place during the Assembly.

It was reported that about twenty five hundred persons were in attendance at the meeting; however, the delegates included only about one third of this number. Twenty members of the Church of the Brethren were present, six of whom were regular voting delegates. These delegates were A. Stauffer Curry, Mrs. Sarah Halladay, J. Henry Long, DeWitt L. Miller, Robert E. Mohler, and the writer.

Bishop William C. Martin of the Methodist Church from Dallas, Texas, was the genial and efficient president of the Assembly. Much of the business consisted in hearing and adopting reports, revising the constitution and by laws, and perfecting the organization. It is to be expected that organizational matters should receive a great deal of attention at this stage of the life of the Council because only four years have passed since its founding and it is no simple thing to arrange for the smooth functioning together of thirty denominations representing about thirty-four million members.

One matter which evoked much discussion and on which opinion was sharply divided was the choice of a headquarters city for the Council. The committee recommended New York, but many delegates preferred a Midwestern city. After discussion the delegates confirmed the choice of the committee. It was decided that hereafter the Assembly should convene triennially instead of biennially. Eugene Carson Blake, a member of the Presbyterian Church from Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, is the new president of the Assembly, and the next place of meeting is St. Louis, Missouri.

At one point the business was halted in order that we might hear Roland Hayes, the noted Negro singer. He sang "Plenty Good Room," "He Never Said a Mumblin' Word," and "Let Us Break Bread Together."

The general secretary and his associate, Roy D. Ross and Roswell D. Barnes, presented a report on the state of the church which every church member could profitably study. Some basic assumptions of the report are that the churches exist to serve God's purposes in the world, that the churches, though in the world, are not of the world, and that the churches should consider what God requires of them rather than what the world thinks it wants of them. While the secretaries find much in current church life that is encouraging, they urge the churches to be more evangelistic, to be less conformed to the world, and to be more faithful to their Lord.

In addition to the plenary business sessions the four divisions of the Council each held its own meetings for business and information. These four divisions are Home Missions, Foreign Missions, Christian Education, and Life and Work.

Among the great addresses at the Assembly was one delivered in Symphony Hall by Dr. McLeod of Iona, Scotland. Christianity, he said, is a matter of practical Christlike living rather than a matter of forms and ceremonies. Christ made his supreme demonstration of religion on the cross out where the throngs of men came and went, where soldiers gambled, and men cursed. We put Jesus between two gilded candlesticks in a church, but he was crucified between two thieves. He said the disturbing fact about the church in his country was that no one is talking about crucifying it. It is harmless. Dr. McLeod made a strong plea for peace among the nations. Several other speakers, including Bishop Martin, made a similar plea.

After the address by Dr. McLeod, a member of the Message Committee whose chairman was Bishop Gerald Kennedy, was heard to say that the Message ought to carry a section on peace this year, and so it did. A suggestion on this topic which was offered to the committee by one of our delegates was embodied in their report. The Message (or resolutions) reaffirmed the faith of these thirty denominations in Jesus Christ as divine Lord and Savior and declared that our efforts to end war would demonstrate our loyalty to the Prince of Peace. The church should be a major factor in building good will around the world. The Message recognized the fact that the churches have failed adequately to meet their opportunities and

During the past nine years Americans have voluntarily sent 15,000,000 CARE packages, containing $165,000,000 worth of needed supplies, to the people of sixty foreign countries.

An evangelistic campaign in New York City by Billy Graham is being planned for the fall of 1957. Under the leadership of the Protestant Council of the City of New York it is hoped that all-inclusive Protestant sponsorship for the campaign can be arranged.

Nearly 28,000 Christmas bundles, prepared by Mennonites in the United States and Canada during the past summer, were distributed to needy children abroad. Packages were issued by relief workers to children in Austria, England, Formosa, France, Germany, Holland, Hong Kong, Java, Jordan and Korea.

The Protestant Episcopal Church in the U.S.A. now has 71,000 Negro members as compared to 54,000 ten years ago and the number of its Negro clergymen has increased from 171 to 244. Although the number of interracial congregations is growing every year, there are still 331 Negro churches, most of them along the eastern seaboard.

Seventy-seven per cent of 600 Minnesota men and women polled in a recent survey are in favor of having white and Negro people "worshipping together in the same churches." This was one of the findings of an impartial scientific home-interview survey on what Minnesotans think about leading topics of the day, conducted by the Minneapolis Tribune newspaper.

Harl Russell, Brotherhood Fund secretary, was elected chairman of the Joint Department of Stewardship and Benevolence of the National Council of Churches at the fall meeting of the department at Springfield, Ohio, Dec. 16. Dr. T. K. Thompson and Dr. Arthur Rinden were re-elected executive directors. By virtue of his chairmanship, Brother Russell will also serve as a member of the General Board of the National Council.

A survey made in Richmond, Va., by the Federation of Women's Clubs revealed that one-third of the periodicals that may be regarded as objectionable comic books are purchased by adults. Mrs. James Dobyns, district chairman of the Federation, called the adult interest in lurid comics "the most shocking part of the survey." A high percentage of the comics purchased by adults come under the general classification of comics containing stories of crime, horror, or sex.

Ecumenical work camps, under the sponsorship of the Youth Department of the World Council of Churches, will once again be held throughout the world during the summer of 1955. Countries participating include: Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Egypt, Finland, France, Germany, Great Britain, Greece, Holland, India, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Korea, Lebanon, Malaya, Philippines, Sweden, Switzerland and the United States. Each camp will be comprised of twenty-five to thirty young men and women between the ages of 18 and 30.

Special services will be held in the Highland Community Church of the Brethren in Orlando, Fla., from Jan. 9-16 under the direction of Ralph White, pastor of the Frederick, Md., church. Winter tourists in Florida have a special invitation to attend.

A budget of $10,000,000 was approved by the executive committee of the Southern Baptist Convention for denominational work in 1956. The budget provides $7,000,000 for operating expenses and $3,000,000 for capital needs.

Evangelical churches in the Soviet Zone of Germany have warned that they will bar from confirmation all young people who participate in Communist-planned youth dedications. The warnings came in the wake of announcements that a special committee had been formed by Soviet Zone Communists to revive ceremonies originated several decades ago by German free thinkers as a counterpart of confirmation and communion rites.

For the first time in history a multi-lingual church service was televised simultaneously to viewers in seven European countries. The 45-minute program originated at St. Peter's Cathedral in Geneva, Switzerland. The president of the Federation of Swiss Protestant Churches delivered the sermon in French. Dr. Robert C. Mackie of the World Council of Churches gave a brief meditation in English and Pastor Ernest Meyer of Germany gave the benediction in German. Television cameras were manned by Swiss, Dutch, English and French technicians.

THE YEAR IN RELIGION

Winfred E. Garrison

For Protestants the world over, and for Anglo-Catholics and Eastern Orthodox, the Second Assembly of the World Council of Churches at Evanston, Ill., August 15-31, was the outstanding religious event of the year.

For Roman Catholics in all lands 1954 was the Marian Year in recognition of the centenary of the promulgation of the dogma of the Immaculate Conception on December 8, 1854. During the year Pope Pius XII exalted the Virgin Mary as "Co-redemptrix, Co-mediatrix and Queen of Heaven," sharing with her Son the rule of the world.

American Jewry took proper pride in celebrating the 300th anniversary of the arrival of the first Jews who became permanent residents of what was later to be the United States.

The British and Foreign Bible Society observed its 150th anniversary. This Society has a longer history of effective interdenominational cooperation on a large scale than any other Christian organization.

The meeting of the World Council brought together more than a thousand official members, including delegates, consultants, and accredited visitors, from 163 Churches in about fifty countries, and several times that number of unofficial visitors for whom more ample facilities were provided than at any previous ecumenical gathering.

A few carefully watched but warmly welcomed delegates came from two of the iron-curtain countries; none from Russia or Red China. The largest communions not represented were the Roman Catholic, the Southern Baptist, and some American Lutheran bodies. These were absent not by exclusion but by their own choice.

The statistical record for the year is excellent, though the percent of increase in membership was less than the unprecedented figure of a year ago. Religious bodies have 94,842,845 members, or 57.5% of the total population. The year's rate of increase, 2.8%, is slightly more than the rate of population increase.

Protestants (including for this purpose some who do not call themselves such) number 55,837,325; Roman Catholics 31,648,424; Eastern Orthodox 2,100,171; Jews (a population estimate) 5,000,000; all others 429,088.

The Churches which publish financial reports (i.e., Protestant and Orthodox) gave 8.9% more money for the maintenance and work of their churches than the year before, an impressive total of $1,401,114,217, which amounts to an average of $41.94 per member.

The most conspicuous event in evangelism during the year was Dr. Billy Graham's campaign in London where his meetings were attended by enormous crowds and 30,000 converts were reported. Spectacular as this success was, it seems to have been exceeded, at least in excitement, by that of Tommy Hicks, a former Baptist but now an independent faith-healing evangelist, who is reported to have created an incredible commotion in Argentina.

The work of foreign missions has gradually, but definitely, entered upon a new phase in recent years, and 1954 saw some rather marked changes in the direction in which previous events had pointed. The main factors in the change are the recognized duty of the Church to participate in the general improvement of social and cultural conditions (a kind of religious Point Four program) in the countries which were formerly mission territories; the rising national consciousness in countries which, having emerged from colonial status, are no longer suitable fields for missions dominated wholly by alien white men; and the consequent rise of the native churches to independence.

In some places, the newly-autonomous native churches are drawing together in united churches. This has happened in Japan, the Philippines and India.

In some places, notably India, a new and jealous nationalism, fortifying itself by reviving interest in the native religion, has thrown up new obstacles to a Christian advance. There is also a definite resurgence of Moslem expansion, especially in Africa, and an intensification of Moslem zeal in the Arab countries of the Middle East.

These developments, in addition to the closing of such vast areas as China and Russia to western influence, have called for a new study of missionary techniques and programs, but this has not been accompanied by any diminution of missionary zeal but rather by an increased sense of the urgency of the work in the minds of American Christians.

Religious liberty, which might be expected to be an assured reality in the modern world, is still severely limited in some areas. Protestants in Colombia have charged more severe persecution during the past year than previously; reported mob action has been reinforced by governmental decrees closing a great part of the country to Protestant work of any kind. The free churches of Greece have been allegedly checked and hindered by the combined opposition of the government and the established Orthodox Church. Protestants in Italy have had the benefit of some favorable decisions by the public authorities that have permitted the reopening of some closed churches.

Altoona Work Camp

Ethel Myer
New Holland, Pennsylvania

I AM happy that I had the privilege of participating with seven other young people in the work camp at Park Place, Juniata, Altoona, Pa. Our camp opened on June 29 and closed on Aug. 15.

We were located in a community house in a neglected section; this house was known as the "church" to the people living there. Our front room was the chapel where the Salvation Army held Sunday school on Sunday mornings followed by outdoor services. The children met in our kitchen for crafts, singing and recreation. The girls occupied a sleeping room on second floor and the boys slept on third floor. The other second-floor room was used for sewing class during the week and a classroom on Sunday.

There were twenty-four houses in our unit, twelve on each side with the back yards joining. The frame buildings are in very poor condition with broken boards in the porches; in some places the steps are missing altogether. Roofs leak, windows are missing and the plaster has fallen down. A number of families have spent much money for repairs.

The section is definitely crowded. Some of the houses have ten or twelve inhabitants. There are sixty-five children under twenty years of age growing up in that small area. One of the main problems as I saw it was alcohol. I realize that there is a deeper need when people turn to drink. If we want to help them, we must go to the bottom of their problem. With many people being unemployed, they have too much time when they have nothing constructive to do. Most of them are on relief, receiving an allotment every two weeks, but they have not learned how to budget their money.

Because of improper diets, there is a great need for dental and medical attention. The children are often given money to buy candy and soft drinks instead of having a balanced meal at home. In some families the group rarely sits down to eat together. When a child gets hungry, he runs into the house for a piece of bread or cake and then goes outside to eat it. Most of the children have not experienced the love and care which they greatly need.

Although I have mentioned some of the conditions we found there, I want to tell you about the people themselves. The longer I lived among them, the more I realized that they are just like me. They eat, sleep, work and play just as I do. They need friends who take an interest in them as individuals. They have a certain amount of pride in the things they can do and when they were given a chance, we soon discovered that they learned new things and enjoyed them. As a result of the sewing classes which were held for the girls and mothers, they were thrilled as they showed the completed garments to friends. Quite a few of the families tried to keep their houses neat and clean, but it was almost impossible with the children playing in the black dirt.

The people were very friendly and most of them were co-operative. Although we went into the community as strangers, it was not long until we were accepted. I believe I can say everybody felt friendly toward us by the time we were ready to leave. I often wondered how I would have felt if I had been one of the people living there and somone had come in to help us. Would I have accepted them? I could not be critical of the way they lived, the way they talked or the things they did because I would probably be the same if I had been brought up under similar conditions. Sometimes I wonder if I would be as good as they are. I have had many opportunities. Even though I have lived in a Christian home all my life and know Christ as my personal Savior, yet I often fail to live and practice the things I know to be right.

The city and park recreational committee was very generous in giving us over eight hundred free tickets to take the children swimming, as well as craft suggestions and supplies. They loaned us two sewing machines, a wheelbarrow, shovels and other tools needed for our work.

At the Altoona work camp activities for children were a major project

Our work activities started at home. We whitewashed our basement, cleaned the wallpaper and put on screen doors. Our biggest job was to clean up their back yards in preparation for the laying of a concrete walk. Bro. Dale Detweiler, a Christian businessman and one of the owners of the New Enterprise Stone and Lime Company, sent one of his men to survey the area and see how much fill would be needed to make the water drain away from the houses into the street. He contributed one hundred forty tons of shale, wash-line poles, and the cement for the walk. Many of the people co-operated by assisting in the leveling off and laying their pavements.

The fine spirit of co-operation among the campers was noteworthy. All were consecrated young people who willingly gave themselves in Christian service.

To me, work camp has been a very enriching experience. May I never find so much joy and satisfaction in working with people that my motive becomes selfish and I lose the true vision of service.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

AUSTRIA

The first family to emigrate with the assistance of the re-established Brethren Service Commission-World Council of Churches resettlement office, has finally sailed for Canada. This family of five is joining the husband's parents in Ontario.

As of Dec. 1, 1954, Brethren Service began sponsoring English classes in Camp Wegscheid for the people registered for emigration through the resettlement office. This class is meeting twice weekly.

GERMANY

A group of twelve — Rachel Garner, June Tritt, Doris Walbridge, Wanda Will, Rosemarie Schmitz, Romayne Eicher, Dick Foust, Dale Blough, Marlin Shaffer, Ellis Shenk, and two German friends visited the old folks' home in Eschwege. On the way the group stopped at a TB hospital where they sang for the patients. A group of about thirty-five was gathered when they arrived at the old folks' home. After singing hymns and Negro spirituals, friendship packages were distributed.

PUERTO RICO

Lucile Schweppe, director of Girls' Clubs at the Community Center reports that forty to fifty girls attend club each week. Last month forty articles of clothing were completed from feed bags.

NOTES FROM GREECE

SOME alfalfa seed was given out to villagers to plant this fall. Since the seed is for a mild climate, we decided to try it in Riziani, which is the warmest area in which we work. The villagers were glad to plant it even though it was not proved for this particular area because alfalfa seed is almost too high for the average villager to buy. This willingness to plant something that is unproved seems to me to be a good sign. When I talked to the village president about planting this alfalfa seed, he showed me a large ear of hybrid corn and said that we had helped them to improve their corn, and they would be more than glad to try a new type of alfalfa in hopes of similar results. — Leon Kline.

ADMINISTERNIG the SACRAMENT of the ANOINTING

Philip H. Lauver
Greenville, Ohio

IS ANY among you sick? Let him call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick man, and the Lord will raise him up, and if he has committed sins, they shall be forgiven" (James 5: 14-15, R.S.V.).

Sometimes, as in the case of a severe accidental injury, the patient is not able to talk or to endure a long visit. In other cases, the call for the anointing may have been delayed until the patient is in a coma. In such circumstances, the members of the family should be helped to understand the meaning of the anointing as fully as possible, so that their faith may be informed and intelligent. Whether this can be done or not, the elders proceed with the ceremony, knowing that God is able to understand what is in the human heart.

The normal situation, however, is that in which the pastor has been making regular calls and the sick person requests the anointing before his illness has reached the extremity of a crisis. In the course of these visits, the pastor has sought to lead the patient to a truly Christian faith in God.

It is the prayer of faith that saves, and our Christian faith is that God is all powerful; he is able to do whatever he chooses. We believe that God is all wise; he knows what is best. We believe that God is all love; we can count on him to send into the lives of his children only what is best for us. We believe that, in his love, he has given each of us a special task, some work to do in his kingdom.

Not all of us do the work God has assigned to us. Obstacles prevent our achievement of his purposes. Sin is the most frequent obstacle. Only God can remove our sin. He does so by a full and free forgiveness to all who repent, confess their sins and accept the forgiveness which comes through the blood of Jesus Christ.

Another obstacle to our service to God may be illness. When we are sick, we cannot move about freely and do all that we ought to do. Only God can remove the obstacle of illness. He deals with our diseases through the miraculous powers of healing which he has put into our bodies. When a disease is so bad that the body is not able to throw it off, God has helped men to discover how to use medicine, surgery, diet, exercise, and many other means to remove the conditions that keep us from getting well.

When we have used all the means we know of and they have failed, then we know that God yet will heal all our diseases in the resurrection.

In addition to these usual methods of healing, God has provided another. It is the direct application of his power to the relief of the suffering body. It comes through prayer.

We recognize that this is not God's usual method of healing. We can expect him to use it only on special occasions. Why should he go out of his way to heal me? Will it be because I deserve to be healed? No. No one is so good that God owes him healing. Will it be because God loves me better than he loves others who are ill? No. God loves all his children equally. Will it be because I weary him with continual asking? Not likely. God in his infinite wisdom and love will not change his plans just because I am inconvenienced.

The only logically sufficient reason why God might use an unusual method of healing would be that in doing so he can advance his total purpose for the world. If I put myself into his hands to be his tool, then it would be worth his while to make me as efficient a tool as possible by removing both the sin and the illness that keep me from doing his work effectively.

This is what anointing means. In the Old Testament, Moses anointed the furniture of the tabernacle. It was to be used only for the glory of God.

Aaron and his sons were anointed to be priests. Saul was anointed as were also David and others. They were to be different now, set aside for the service of God as his special instruments for a special cause. He gave them health and strength and courage to do his work well.

Jesus still invites his people to come to him for physical healing

When one says that he wants to be anointed, he is saying that he wants to be used fully and completely as a tool in the hands of God. God is a good workman. We can trust him to take good care of all his tools. He will cleanse those of us who are his tools from the guilt and the power of sin. He will cleanse us, too, from every disease and every physical illness which interferes with our doing what he wants us to do.

James says that the prayer of faith shall save him that is sick. This is faith that we believe that God will do right. Sometimes it is best for God's children to be sick in order to serve him. Sometimes we serve him best by living; the day will come when we can serve him best by our death. Faith is to put ourselves completely into God's hands, ready for him to do for us, and with us just what he knows is best.

Personal Preparation for Anointing

Perhaps at this point the patient will feel a need to confess his guilt to his pastor, who will lead him to make restitution where that is possible, to place his burden upon Christ and to accept the promised forgiveness. Most people, however, can better be left to make this transaction privately between themselves and God. They will be much in meditation and prayer as they look forward to the coming of the elders for the anointing.

The time of the anointing should be carefully arranged for the best interests of the patient, and he should be given the privilege of indicating any choice he may have of someone to assist the pastor in the service.

When the pastor returns with the brother who is to assist in the anointing, it may be best to spend a brief time in calm and unhurried greetings and conversation, so that an atmosphere of poise and peace may prevail.

Then one of the brethren reads the pertinent portion from James. This is followed by a brief prayer of faith and of petition that God may remove from the minds and the hearts of all who are present anything that might be an obstacle to the blessing he seeks to pour out.

Expression of Faith

The patient is now invited to give expression to his faith in words. Such questions as these may be helpful:

"Dear brother (or sister) you have been led to believe in the goodness and the love of God and in the healing power of his Holy Spirit. You have asked to be anointed, and we have talked together about what that service means. So far as you know, are you at peace with God and your fellow men? Is there anything that you know of which might prevent you from receiving the full blessing of God?"

If there is any such thing brought to light, it must be dealt with here and now. The assurance of forgiveness is essential for spiritual and physical health. This assurance is genuine only when it follows complete confession and surrender to God.

"Do you believe that God is able to heal your body and to do whatever else he may know to be best for you?"

"Do you believe that God knows what is best for you and for those whom you love?"

"Do you believe that God loves you as his dear child and that what he plans for you is good because it is his will?"

"Do you then accept whatever he plans, whether that may be life or death, illness or health, and do you put yourself completely and without reserve into his hands to be used as his instrument to accomplish his will?"

The fullness of faith having been expressed by the patient, either in his own words voluntarily or in answer to such questions as these, the elders take their places for the anointing.

Administering the Sacrament

The elder who is to lead with the service stands at the patient's right, facing the other elder on the opposite side of the bed or chair. Then he who leads the service extends his right hand and the other pours a few drops of oil (usually olive oil) into his palm.

Addressing the patient, he says,

"Dear brother (or sister), upon this declaration of your faith in God and of your desire that his will may be accomplished in your life, you are anointed in the name of the Lord, unto the strengthening of your faith . . ."

Here he gently applies the oil to the forehead of the patient and so twice again as he continues:

". . . unto the forgiveness of all your sins and unto the healing of all your diseases."

Then the elders place their right hands, followed by their left hands, alternately on the head of the patient and standing so each one prays in turn as led by the Spirit. These prayers contain affirmation of faith in God and a definite commitment of the patient, his illness and all of his concerns into the hands of God, with the earnest petition that the will of God may be accomplished in his life.

Following the second prayer, all in the room may unite with the elders in the Lord's Prayer.

The elders do not tarry long after the anointing. With a warm handclasp and a word of confident assurance that all now is well, since all is in the hands of God, they take their leave of the patient and withdraw from the room.

The Church Abroad

The congregation comes from the South China church after a meeting held while L. S. Brubaker was there in 1948. News from this church is fragmentary and vague

Our Church in South China

THE news coming to us from the church in China is at best fragmentary and sometimes rather vague. Of one thing, however, we are certain: the Christian church does continue behind the bamboo curtain and the Christian spirit is still existent among the people. We wish we might know more fully and more in detail just how our brethren there are faring.

From various reports we receive, it seems that considerable freedom is granted the churches in the larger cities where news of the attitude of the Communist government can easily reach the outside world. According to some reports, however, in the villages of the hinterland the churches have less freedom in carrying on their Christian activities. It seems, too, that the churches which earlier joined in with the Church of Christ of China may be faring better at the present than are those which did not enter this union of churches.

The Church of the Brethren of Toi Shan, Kwongtung, South China, while Bro. Moy Gwong was still pastor of the church, associated itself with the Church of Christ of China. According to our most recent reports, our church there is existent and functioning.

Bro. Moy Gwong's death in 1950 was a real shock to the little church there. Before long, however, the Church of Christ of South China provided a young man to take charge of the church.

Communications were soon so seriously disrupted that we could not be well apprised of the conditions of the church there for many months. It was impossible to get funds to the church in any legal fashion, and we know that the church and its members suffered much want. Whatever progress they could make was made with great difficulty.

Letters to our brethren from their families could say but little about the church and its activities. Whether giving such information was prohibited or whether there was no information to give, we do not know. When news of renewed church activity began to break through, it occasioned rejoicing on the part of our brethren at this end and of others who have maintained a warm interest in the church there.

In November 1953, word came that they had received some money that some of the Chinese men had sent personally for the work. The letter reported one hundred fifty in attendance at the regular weekly Sunday services; there had been some baptisms and ten child dedications. Some workers were coming occasionally from Canton, a distance of perhaps one hundred miles to assist them in the church work.

Early in 1954 another letter brought further news of progress. In December 1953, a new pastor by the name of Rev. Wong Ming Yee of Canton had been sent to them by the Church of Christ of China. The letter said they had reopened their church, which indicated that for sometime the church had been closed or, at least, there had been no public services. It said that weekly attendance was between two hundred and three hundred and that two hundred twenty were registered in Sunday school, with an average attendance of from one hundred fifty to one hundred sixty. In the Sunday school there were four classes. They had a young people's department, a choir, a members' study class and a Wednesday prayer meeting with an attendance of thirty or more.

At Christmas time (1953) the members met to redecorate the church, which, they reported, now looked like new. This improvement in the church house undoubtedly helped to increase the interest and attendance of the people of the community. At the time of the writing of this letter they estimated that for 1954 they would need a budget of twenty-four million dollars, local Chinese currency, an equivalent of about eight hundred dollars, United States currency. Feb. 8-10 was set for their big springtime gospel meeting, at which the new pastor was to be the speaker. For this meeting and for the work of the year they asked for the prayers of the Christians in America.

How we wish we might know now what progress the church has made during the past year. Perhaps more news will reach us in the near future. If it does we shall be happy to pass such news on to the church in America, so that we can all pray with them and for them in their courageous stand for Christ.

How we praise the Lord for the noble work our Bro. Moy Gwong did during those thirty years. May the church he established under the mighty hand of God continue to grow and lead many souls to the Lord Jesus Christ, the Savior of the world.

Missionary Helper

Ferne Baldwin
Garkida, Nigeria, W. Africa

WE HAVE a new missionary helper in Garkida. We call it the Gestetner. But actually Gestetner is only the trade name of a duplicating machine made in England and you probably wonder why I think the Gestetner is a missionary helper of some importance in the work of building the kingdom here in Nigeria. Let me tell you why I think so.

The first stencil we ran on the Gestetner was the covenant to be a Christian in the Hausa language. First, Dr. Brubaker had asked us to do it for use of all those in the Leprosarium who are in classes preparing for church membership. Hausa is the common language used in the Leprosarium among the dozen different tribes there. Then when we were actually running off the copies Stover Kulp said, "Run 150 more for the work at Mubi." Then we stopped to consider all the different groups in our mission who must learn in Hausa because it is the only language partly understood by all and so finally we decided to run almost a thousand copies of the covenant in Hausa. Now word has gone out to all missionaries that these are available for them to use in their work of spreading the gospel and preparing people to take up the way of Christ.

The next two stencils we ran were the two sides of the monthly news sheet called Headlines From Headquarters, which goes out to each missionary on the field and at home. It carries news of the work each is doing on his own station, general news of those coming and going on furlough and many other things. By this means we hope to build closer ties in our mission family, as we share our common joys and sorrows, as we understand more fully the work that each one is doing.

Tomorrow the Gestetner has an especially joyful job. We expect to run off about 600 copies of the form which is signed by the doctor and given those people who are being released from the Leprosarium with their dread disease arrested. This precious paper tells him that he can once again go back to his home and family. Many of them go with the words of a new way of life in their hearts and lives and everywhere they go the word spreads of a God who loves those with leprosy, too, and in his wondrous plan has brought healing to them—both of body and spirit. If the Gestetner had a heart and were not a mere machine, I think we might hear it breathe a prayer tomorrow as it merrily turns out the copies of the Leprosarium discharge paper. It would be a prayer for those who will soon be leaving the Leprosarium that each one may be a true light for Him.

Last night a long box of stencils came from Jos. These are the stencils for a book called in Bura Kakadur Bil Nggakur—the Book of Shepherding Health. It is the first hygiene book used in all our schools and classes of religious instruction which are taught in the Bura language. It has been out of print for some time and when the copy was taken to the press in Jos we were told that they could not say when they would be able to do it. So it is to be done on the Gestetner and we hope to have it ready to go out to the schools by September 1. Through this little book many people will learn some of the beginning rules of cleanliness and good health. They will learn what causes some diseases and how to prevent them. In this way the Gestetner will make a contribution toward cleanliness.

Within the next two weeks we hope to run the final pages of a book of biographies of great and good people the world has known. This started out as rather a small project and grew like Topsy into quite a goodly-sized book. The index lists them from Augustine to Francis Xavier—men and women who have stood for Christ and His church and done their bit to build a better world. Though written first for use in our schools we hope that this book will be widely read. And the Gestetner had a part in its preparation.

Yes, the Gestetner is just a machine. There must be human hands to make the stencils and turn the handle but who can justly evaluate its worth in Christ's work here in Nigeria.

Opportunity in Chicago

Floyd Wagoner and
Elgin S. Moyer

City churches have mission prospects at their own doorsteps. Here is the story of how one city church uses its opportunities

THE First Church of the Brethren in Chicago finds itself in a community of unbounded opportunities and of strategic responsibility. These opportunities and responsibilities are many and varied. The local church here is ever mindful of the many people in the city who are of Brethren heritage, many of whom hold their membership in out-of-the-city congregations of the Church of the Brethren. In a sense all these people have become charges of our local congregation. Since often they fail to seek out the First church, it becomes our duty to seek them out and to introduce them to our local fellowship when they come to the great city.

Without minimizing our responsibility of finding and holding for the church all the Brethren in the city, we must realize that our responsibility reaches far beyond those who have been reared in Brethren homes or have grown up in Brethren communities. There is another tremendous need right at our door. Here we have a rapidly changing community. People often move in and then later move away without ever making any contact with the church unless the church first makes the effort to reach them. People who had been affiliated with some church earlier often lose their church relationship when they move to the city unless the church of the community seeks them out and invites them to her worship and fellowship. From the time that church letters were granted back in the home churches and the time that the members get located in their new urban homes, the letters frequently get buried in stored-away trunks or are carelessly filed away in some pigeonhole. There they remain unless and until some interested Christians of the local church come along and suggest their being placed in the new church home.

Then, too, there are people in our midst with strange faiths or with little or no faith at all, who often are ready for, and sometimes eager for, the presentation of the gospel and for the fellowship of Christian people. Also there are multitudes of children who are growing up in our city communities who are without contact with the church and without any wholesome religious influence.

A little more than a decade ago these needs led several members of the First church to the conviction that a plan of evangelism was needed to reach more of the people of the community. This conviction eventuated in 1943 in the setting up of what came to be known as the Fellowship of Service. This evangelistic service is at present under the joint operation of the First church and the seminary and continues to make a vital impact upon the First church community.

By several means the Fellowship of Service seeks to ascertain the religious interests of the people of the community and makes effort to turn their interests toward the church. First of all, door-to-door surveys are made to locate prospects and to tell them of the church. Many contacts have been made through the friendly co-operation of teachers or principals of the public schools of the neighborhood and through the playground activities of the children. A church-centered club program, day camps, and young people's activities have made entres into many homes; business relations and associations in the community have done much to help us get acquainted with our neighbors. Also the occasional visit of people of the neighborhood at our regular church services have helped to make many fruitful contacts.

All of these above contacts give opportunity for initial entres which may lead to follow-up work. When a door has been opened or when a first call has been made, the planning committee of the Fellowship seeks to send into these homes the most suitable persons available at the most favorable time and under the most favorable circumstances possible. These calls are made as often as seems feasible. The same persons, going two by two, may make several visits in carrying on the follow-up work. As acquaintanceship warms up and friendship develops the people are invited to attend services at the church, to send their children to the clubs or the Sunday school and to participate in other activities of the church individually or as a family, as the case may be.

Through these planned, but more or less informal visits, the evangelistic teams become gradually better acquainted with industrial, professional, economic, domestic, social, religious and other relationships of the families. They are thus able to be in a position to offer kindly and timely suggestions and to be good neighbors and friends. The ultimate purpose of these visits and this fellowship is, of course, to interest the people in the work, life and fellowship of the church and to lead them into a close fellowship and saving relationship with Jesus Christ.

In order to do the most effective work it is necessary to lay definite plans and to follow certain techniques. The work cannot be done haphazardly. As has been suggested, calls are carefully planned and timed. This laying of plans is done partly by a planning committee or by a secretary, and partly by the entire group in its regular weekly meetings. These meetings of the Fellowship of Service are held for inspiration, consecration, prayer, sharing and planning. Reports of previous calls are carefully kept on uniform cards and accurately filed. After each new call, whether by the party that visited previously or by a different team, the date of the call, the names of the persons making the call and any new or significant information gathered from the new call, any spiritual responses of growth of any members of the family or any other significant attitudes of the family, are recorded on the card for future reference. At the weekly meetings these findings and experiences are shared with one another. Thus the individuals or teams glean from one another new ideas for approaches and procedures in the work. All the teams thus become better acquainted with the community and the whole operation becomes unified and integrated. All the teams are working in unison. There is no need of a feeling of aloneness. All are consciously working together toward one common goal. In this spiritual union of effort and consecration there is strength.

These frequent calls in the homes of the community have helped to create many friendly relationships among both the children and the adults. Our Sunday school is constantly being recruited by children from these homes. Frequently we get children who had never before attended a Sunday school.

The club program has interested a large number of these children. Some of the children are willing to attend the weekday church school on released time from the public school. As a result of their attendance at Sunday school, weekday church school and other church activities, some of these children accept the invitation to come into special classes to learn what it means to be a Christian and to receive instruction preliminary to church membership. In our baptismal services those being baptized frequently include some of these boys and girls from the church community. In due time we find a goodly number of these same young people among those entering the college freshman class in our Brethren college. Some of them later on find their life's companions within the Church of the Brethren, some of them even becoming ministers or ministers' wives.

The work among the adults usually proceeds more slowly. It is more difficult to induce them to attend Sunday school or church. Some of them will come for a short time and seem to manifest a little interest in the church and then for various reasons or seemingly for no reason at all will lose what little interest they did seem to have and drop out. To get them to start over is usually doubly difficult. But such is not always the case. Some adults accept the challenge of the church and seem to find the joy and satisfaction that the human soul longs for.

On different occasions classes have been set up for groups of these unchurched people of the community who have expressed an interest in special instruction in the Bible or in the history and doctrine of the church or in the meaning of the Christian life and the way of salvation. Within the past year such a class was set up for a group of adults who had previously had little or no Bible training. The curriculum was carefully designed to meet the particular needs of this group and the teaching was aimed at the level of their comprehension. Splendid interest was shown by the class. They met each Sunday morning with a teacher and often spent one evening during the week in the study of the Bible and in the discussion of special problems. Five of this group were recently received into the fellowship of the church by the rite of baptism. They are now showing a vital interest in the work of the church and in their own spiritual growth. They are expressing a willingness to assist in the work of evangelism in the community.

These people knowing the particular needs of this community can be of great help in reaching others here for Christ and the church.

Adult as well as child evangelism does not end with the baptismal service. It has really only begun there. Our further task is to assimilate them into the fellowship of the church and to help them become a part of the Christian program of the local church. One of the best means of doing this is to get them to work. If they become really interested in working, then their church attendance and their church fellowship will easily be cared for. By working, by attending, by fellowship, they will gradually become better acquainted with the Brethren way of life and with real Christian living. As they attend the Sunday-school classes, the preaching services, and the other church activities they become integrated into our church life and develop a sense of belonging.

During this ten-year period several families and dozens of children and young people have found membership in our local church. Many others have found Christian fellowship in our church services and activities, though not becoming members of our denomination. Still others have found friendly fellowship with us but have not as yet accepted Christ and become members of the church.

Our efforts have been rewarding, both to the esprit de corps of the congregation, and to the spiritual welfare of the individuals who have come into our fellowship. A real impact has been made upon the community. Greater successes should be realized in the future because of the accomplishments of the past. Experience has been gained and inspiration has been generated through the work of these ten years.

Yet many there are in our church fellowship who have not caught the larger vision of evangelism and there are a great many in the community who have not yet been touched with the message of the gospel. Only a very small portion of our possibilities have been tapped. A great work lies before us. With more willing workers and a greater devotion to Christ and his cause much more land can be and will yet be conquered for him. When every lay brother and sister, as well as every deacon and preacher catches the spirit of real revival and evangelism, then the Lord can do great things for us.

The opportunities are here as they are in any community. The results we achieve will be commensurate with our love for Christ and for lost souls and with our sacrificial zeal for fulfilling his great commission in our very midst, right here in our local church community. If the community is not evangelized it will be because of our failure to carry out the will and command of our Lord and Savior.

called upon them to put forth greater effort in the work of evangelism in order to bring a revival of religion to this country.

A helpful feature of the Assembly program was the daily period of worship. On one day Rev. Theodore P. Ferris, who stands in Phillips Brooks' pulpit, spoke on a simple passage from J. B. Phillips' translation of Paul's letter to the Romans. The passage was, "Give my love to the little church that meets in their house." The speaker observed in the first place that the church started so simply but as time passed necessary developments took place. We may not be able to go back to the original simplicity in all respects but we dare not lose the elementary basicness of the early church or cover it up with buildings, liturgy, doctrine, and organization. In the second place, the church is not the house. It is people. And thirdly the church is closely related to life. It should be infused with the family spirit. The Christian religion includes Christian ethics. In a sense our job is to get Christianity out of the church and into life.

Christ's prayer was that his followers might be one with himself and with the Father and therefore with one another. It is heartening to see the various denominations fellowshipping and working together.

Modesto—Alan Whitacre served as our summer pastor. In October our general board, of which Homer Messamer was elected chairman for the 1954-55 year, held its annual retreat at the Turlock state park. Our installation services for the new Sunday-school teachers and officers was held in October with Bro. Leland Nelson conducting the services. Our church participated in the observance of World Communion Sunday. We have had a net gain of thirty-seven members during the past year. Thirty people from our congregation attended the district meeting. Our pastor was elected district moderator for the coming year and a member of the Standing Committee. Our church participated in the union Thanksgiving services; the offering was used to purchase surplus food. We also held our annual Thanksgiving dinner in our church with the offering being used to support our missionaries. Our young people presented a Christmas play. We are working on our expansion program. The intermediate department went "trick or treating" for used clothing for relief at Hallowe'en time.—Mrs. Bertha Bailey, Modesto, Calif.

Reedley—A successful daily vacation Bible school was held during the summer. Two members have been received by letter since our last report. Our former pastor, Bro. Joe E. Campbell, was speaker one Sunday morning in our church. We are looking forward to celebrating our fiftieth anniversary of our church in the spring. The Reedley Council of Women sponsored a World Community Day program on Nov. 5 which was held in our church. The offering was used for migrant work in the Fresno area.—Mrs. Anna Ramsey, Reedley, Calif.

Oregon

Medford—Since our last report six persons have been baptized and one received by letter into our fellowship. One Sunday, James Brumbaugh, summer pastor in Oregon, was in charge of our morning service and in the evening gave an organ concert. Our pastor, Bro. J. R. Jennings, has resigned and has accepted the pastorate in the McFarland church, Calif. We have been without a pastor since the first of September. Bro. Frantz of California was with us for several weeks. District conference was held in our church. Blanch Lininger was elected to the board of trustees at La Verne College for a three-year term. The soap made by our ladies was given to the Friends church in Portland for Korean relief. A harvest festival was held in the church basement in November.—Hazel Jackson, Medford, Oregon.

Middle Iowa

Beaver—Five of our young people and our pastor attended the National Youth Conference at Anderson, Ind. During September we prepared for home-coming day by papering the church sanctuary and painting the basement. New hymnals were purchased in memory of Guy Smalley who died in May. A choir was organized with twelve members. Weekly prayer meetings are being held in the homes and through them a program of visitation evangelism is underway. We observed the love feast in October and World Community Day on Nov. 5. A young adult Sunday-school class was organized. Attendance at church and Sunday school during the months of September and October was twice that of a year ago. The ladies' aid held their annual supper and bazaar in November.—Mrs. Max Shank, Beaver, Iowa.

Des Moines, Stover Memorial—Several of our members attended district conference. One Sunday night each month we have a family night. At one of our Sunday evening family meetings, we had the film on the World Council of Churches. On Oct. 10 our pastor, Bro. Dale Brown, conducted a baby dedication service. Bro. Ray Zook, state fieldman, led a service of consecration for the church officers and teachers. Fall council meeting was held with our elder, Meredith Rogers of Dallas Center, presiding. On Oct. 17 we held our fall love feast service. Our church has an active junior and senior high CBYF. We have organized men's and women's work groups. The middle of each month the women meet at the church parsonage basement for relief sewing. During the absence of our pastor, Lawrence Walker of Adel was with us for our services. ☆ OLD TESTAMENT and the FINE ARTS

by Cynthia Pearl Maus

A companion book to the world-famous CHRIST AND THE FINE ARTS, bringing together the pictures, poems, hymns and stories bearing upon the greater part of the Bible into another giant anthology as noteworthy and as useful as its predecessor.

Here are the works of the masters — some familiar, some rarely seen — together with the work of contemporary artists, the results of long and careful search among art centers of the world. Music, from the simple folk songs to the great oratorios, rounds out the anthology of the fine arts built on Biblical themes. Art reproductions with their interpretations, stories, and poems combine to make this a treasury of program material fully indexed. A complete chronological narrative of the Old Testament told in the picture, poetry, song and story. 832 pages. $5.95

In the Hand of God

MICHELANGELO'S painting of the creation shows God as a person of tremendous energy reaching out of a cloud to touch the hand of Adam. In contrast to the Italian artist's picture of creation, consider this concept of the French sculptor, Auguste Rodin. Here is the hand of God, not quite fully released from the marble rock, yet holding in its palm the developing form of his creation. It is a mighty and vigorous hand, yet it is marked also by tenderness, as if the Creator is fully aware of the fragile creature he has made. It is a hand that can rule and overrule, the hand of a just and righteous God. But is also the hand of one who watches lovingly and ceaselessly over his children, the hand that in the hands of Jesus Christ would be outstretched to comfort and heal, lifted in blessing and even wounded upon a cross. Need we worry about the future if we believe that it is in the hand of God?

The Gospel Messenger welcomes letters commenting on editorials, articles and news. Letters should be brief and brotherly.

I Love My Church

I have had an urge for some time to talk to my church folk through the columns of the Gospel Messenger. I have been a member for sixty-eight years and have always loved it, and will to the end. . . .

We are only passing this way once. Let us not be careless regarding our salvation. "Ye therefore, beloved, seeing ye know these things before, beware lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own stedfastness."

Last winter I had the misfortune to hurt my hand. Unable to work, I had the pleasure and privilege of reading the Bible several times through. The second time, I marked many cherished scriptures. It seemed to me when reading that we as Brethren are slipping a bit.

I love my church for what it has stood for all these many years. In Bible times the prophets and priests were responsible that the people got the message, and perhaps the pastors and elders are responsible in part today. . . .

It's nice to look back and reflect on past, wherein we have done good, but with remorse and regret, we look at the church today, for the stand it is taking toward things that not so long ago were worth while and of much value. I am not a pessimist. We are doing many nice things that we did not used to do, such as sending heifers, relief clothing and missionaries, but leaving undone many things we should be doing. . . .

I've always loved my church because I thought it was firmly fixed on New Testament doctrines, and often wonder should Alexander Mack and some of the others come back now, if they would claim us. I doubt it very much. I have had very much respect and regard for our ministers and deacons in years gone by and wonder where our church would be today had we not been restricted. I love my church, for in time past the poor have felt a welcome. Clothes did not mean so much as today. . . .

Why are we putting aside things that have been so important through all the years? such as the prayer veil and modest apparel? Can it be these things are of no value any more? Pray tell me! I love my church for what it has stood for in years gone by.

"Let us test and examine our ways, and return to the Lord."— Orpha Nusbaum, Middlebury, Ind.

Indwelling Savior

Christians when really converted are new creatures. When one catches the vision of the kingdom, as related to our being a part in it, material ideals fall to the background. The kingdom of God and righteousness become the sought-for subject of all our desires.

The things of this world without Christ are the ruination of many souls. Our salvation is in Christ. Faith in him, love for his cause, keeping his word, will bring and keep us close to him. So close that the Father will love us, and he and Jesus Christ, his Son, will come unto us and they will make their abode with us. Then when the Father and his Son, who is our Savior, are truly at home in our hearts, our life becomes one of unspeakable joy.

Why should we be so slow to learn the real way to be acceptable in Christ's kingdom? Searching the Scriptures, it is not hard to find; John 1:12 leads us to see that it's a matter of receiving the Word (Christ). Here we must exercise faith. It embodies his teachings, his promises and his commission. Finding these sayings of Jesus and keeping them puts one on a positive plane with those who are saved.

Many church members have not yet learned what committing one's self to Christ really means. We do not join church necessarily to escape the ravage of hell. Nor is the church just a good place to find agreeable fellowship. While these may be involved, the real purpose of our church relation is associating ourselves with Christ, and his service. We unite in worship and organized effort to carry out his commission.

The indwelling Savior takes away the tensions of fear and uncertainty, giving instead the sense of security and calm. And we rejoice greatly in the great family of the redeemed. — O. E. Stern, Wausaukee, Wis.

SEEK FIRST HIS KINGDOM

"and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."

A. Stauffer Curry

THOSE who seek first the kingdom of God will have three aspects to their search. They will have a full realization of the kingdom in their experience if they find a balance among these three phases of the search.

To begin with, to "seek first his kingdom" men will search for the kingdom which will exist in the world to come—that is, the world beyond history. The Scriptures abound with references to this future kingdom, not the least of which is Matt. 25:34: "Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

The anticipation of the future kingdom gives incentive. A noted teacher of doctrine says about it: "Interest in the present is lost when there is no interest in tomorow. What incentive is there for a futureless or eternally struggling soul? Man will give himself for that which outlasts his earthly existence. Man will rise to great heights in light of a real eternal life." Quite obviously, the belief in a future kingdom goes hand in hand with a belief in immortality.

A belief in immortality does several things. It leads men to live a good life. If a man believes that death ends all, he may well be satisfied with a secondary mode of life saying, "Eat, drink, be merry, for tomorrow we die." If a man believes that immortality is simply a continuation of this life he can very logically ask, "My way of life is good enough and, therefore, why should I make any change for the better?" But, if a man believes in a perfect life of immortal being, he will be inspired to do his best in anticipation of eternal life with God in the kingdom beyond history.

A belief in immortality—in a future kingdom—can help men to preserve their balance and poise. Noted psychologists have said for years that prevention of and recovery from mental disorders comes when people catch the meaning of a truly religious approach to life. A glimpse of God beyond one's self can dispel the fog surrounding a confused mind. A long-range wholesome view into the world of the immortal soul can cut away the entanglement surrounding a person with emotional difficulties.

But a true kingdom search involves more than simply looking toward a future kingdom and immortality. If this were the only aspect of men's search, they could tend to become preoccupied with their own salvation, to the neglect of a concern for the salvation of the souls of others. Men could develop a tendency to pessimism and escapism. They might well ask, "Why should we try to eliminate the drink evil or solve the war problem, since the kingdom of God can come only in the world beyond history?"

In fact, there are some religious groups who do no missionary work, carry on no social service program and do not try to effect any betterment of the lot of their fellow men, because of the distorted or exclusive emphasis upon the kingdom in the future. In recent discussions among the theologians of the world some of them, perhaps chiefly Americans, expressed the opinion that others, perhaps chiefly Europeans, emphasize too much and too exclusively the kingdom of God beyond history. But perhaps the greater danger for most of us is that we forget the concept of God's

Brethren will need this year a minimum of seven or eight million dollars for building the kingdom of God here and now and in the future kingdom in the hereafter, as we become involved in a whirl of activities and programs designed to facilitate the growth of the kingdom.

This leads us to the second consideration: to "seek first his kingdom" men will be aware that the kingdom of God can and does begin here and now. Williams Adams Brown, the great theologian of another day, defined the kingdom of God as "both personal and social; it is a community of individuals living together under the law of love in the spirit of brotherhood." We do not have to wait for this community of love until after history; it can begin its development, even though imperfectly, in the here and now. A conservative—thus designated by himself—Baptist scholar, writing recently in the Mennonite Quarterly Review, said: "A great weakness of the conservative wing of the church, then, has been its inability to recognize that the Christian hope had a definite place for the here as well as the hereafter."

The six study groups at the World Council Assembly in Evanston established some significant norms for seeking first his kingdom in the here and now. The statement by the group on our unity in Christ and disunity as churches said, among many other things: "We must all listen together in the midst of our disunity to our one Lord speaking to us through the Holy Scripture. . . . We must learn afresh the implications of the one baptism for our sharing in the one Eucharist (Lord's Supper)."

Another norm coming from the section on evangelism is emphasized as follows: "The

What Price Prestige?

WE DON'T often read business magazines but the picture of a sparkling new Chevrolet on the cover of Business Week was too much to pass by. Inside we learned that Chevrolet had moved its model change ahead one year in order to meet a challenge from Ford. The new Chevrolet was completely redesigned from the ground up. Good styling, decided Chevrolet officials, was far more important than mechanical improvements. They wanted their new car to look bigger and to be regarded as a "quality" car. As one official said, "Every car buyer wants his neighbor to know he's been successful."

This may explain why Chevrolets look like Buicks, why Buicks look like Cadillacs—and why the newest Fords bear not the slightest resemblance to the Model T "fliver" that some of us remember. Buyers of even lower priced cars now put a high value on the look of "prestige"—which is another way of saying that most Americans will pay dearly to keep up with the Joneses.

Lest we conclude that only such material things as automobiles are influenced by the desire for prestige, note this quotation from a letter inviting laymen to a dinner in the interests of promoting religion: "In order to attract maximum interest on the part of prominent laymen, it was voted . . . by the Board that it was necessary to hold the dinner at the prestige hotel . . . This required charging a minimum of $12.50 a person."

This may be an extreme example, but it certainly illustrates a modern tendency to "sell" the Christian religion by giving it more prestige. Some pastors frankly admit that a new sanctuary did more to recommend their church to a community than the preaching of the gospel or the witnessing of members.

We dare not forget the complete lack of prestige that accompanied the beginnings of our Christian fellowship. Jesus was born in a manger and crucified on a cross. When he met a top-level Pharisee like Nicodemus he urged him to forget about prestige and to be born again. The church suffers when it resorts to any kind of "snob appeal" to win members or financial support.

We haven't space to continue the sermon but here is the appropriate text from Jeremiah 9:23-24 (R.S.V.): "Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, let not the mighty man glory in his might, let not the rich man glory in his riches; but let him who glories glory in this, that he understands and knows me, that I am the Lord who practice kindness, justice and righteousness in the earth; for in these things I delight, says the Lord."—K.M.

ABC to XYZ

ON TWO different occasions recently Pope Pius spoke out strongly against ABC warfare, meaning atomic, bacteriological, and chemical warfare. These particular brands of warmaking seemed to him to deserve condemnation as being inhumane and destructive.

The Pope was right—as far as he went. He should have finished with the alphabet. We tried to think of the other kinds of war, beginning where the Pope left off and continuing through the dictionary. This is what we found:

Demolition bombing is deadly and destructive. Even a war that seems to be expedient calls for expeditionary forces, for expendable life, for endless expenditures and often leads to extinction. War is seldom final unless it is at the same time fatal and futile. Future wars may make use of guided missiles but there is no guarantee of any result but more graves. Hydrogen weapons are worse than atomic, and incendiary bombs prove how insane war can become. A war fought in jet propelled planes leads to more jeopardy than one fought with javelins. There never has been a just war. The results are just war.

Even the Pope must admit that a kind war is a contradiction because the key word in the conflict is killing, not kindness. A war may start as local and limited but it soon becomes lethal. War is best described as mass murder leading to misery and mourning. Napalm bombs were notorious for the horror they caused in Korea. The obliteration bombing of cities means only an opportunity for new oppression. Wars may begin as provincial but they threaten to become planetary. They start as a quarrel but when neither side gives any quarter, the fighting becomes rampant and leads to ruin.

The Pope might not admit it, but even religious wars that begin with recriminations lead to remorse but seldom to repentance. There is no safe war and another world conflict may have few survivors. The more technical our weapons, the more terrible the tally of death. War tends to become unlimited and unrelenting. It is vicious in its effects upon both victors and victims. In brief, war as we find it waged with modern weapons is wicked and wrong.

When will the Christian church go beyond the simple ABC's of the Pope's condemnation and admit that all war—from ABC to XYZ—is sin? The church of Jesus Christ must never refuse to recognize that war is evil.—K. M.

Bringing the GOSPEL to Britain's Industrial Workers

Victor Jones

THE situation in Britain is complex and there is no short summary which will give an accurate picture of how the church is faring and what sort of impact it is making on individuals and on society. There is much that is encouraging and a good deal that is depressing.

There has been a general decline in the membership of the Protestant church during the last forty years, but much of that is a decline in church-going rather than a decline in religious belief. A considerable proportion of the population come under Christian influence in one way or another; they listen to the religious broadcasts on the radio, several millions to the more popular programs and about one-third of the adult population hears at least one religious program on a Sunday.

The churches are weakest where they have no roots in the life of the community, in downtown areas, on new housing estates and in some rural villages. From these places a fairly dark picture of the spiritual life of the people could be painted. It is now the accepted thing not to go to church, whereas formerly it was considered the normal thing to do.

It is only partly true to sum up the situation by saying that there has been a drift away from the churches. There has also been a movement of the population and the present inhabitants of downtown areas never had strong church associations. A large proportion of the urban industrial workers never were in church. But we must also remember that in some industrial areas, particularly in the town and villages of the north of England and of Wales the church was integrated much more in the life of the community and its membership was and still is drawn largely from industrial workers.

It is important to remember that the evangelical revival from 1750 onwards was largely an awakening of spiritual life among large numbers of people quite untouched by religion; the established church was in a sorry state and was out of touch with the mass of the people. It was a church for the landed gentry, while the commercial classes were largely represented in the older dissenting bodies. It was John Wesley and his followers more than any others who brought the gospel to the industrial workers in the rapidly growing towns and villages of the Industrial Revolution. They were separate communities with no common link of culture or language; It was the genius of Methodism that their leaders were drawn and trained from amongst themselves. The local preachers and class leaders worked in the mill or in the pit for Methodism was essentially a lay movement; even its early divisions and secessions were themselves revolts from increasing clerical control.

Having learned to value and use their talents within the Methodist community, it was these men who became the leaders amongst their fellows in the world outside; they could not remain quiet about the problems of industrial and political life. The Chartist Associations had close Methodist connections as had the early radicals. Methodism provided many of the leaders of the early trade unions. The organization was copied too in the political and trade union field with its camp meetings, class meetings, penny-per-week subscriptions and division into districts. It gave birth to a new belief in the rightness and effectiveness of democratic organization and in the necessity of social justice.

All the Christian churches have benefited from this new religious phenomenon though some may have opposed it at the time. It has left its mark throughout our society in all sorts of ways; especially it has resulted in much of our progressive political life and thought coming from Christian groups instead of being opposed to them as in other European countries, where many of the political parties are avowedly secular. The three main parties all have Christian men and women taking an active part in them, because we fortunately have no Christian political parties or trades unions.

In Primitive Methodism we had an essentially working-class church and we have in Britain a religious tradition that is native and indigenous to an industrial proletariat. From experience, we must not assume that an industrial society is inherently anti-religious.

Recent Trends

There are many reasons why the greater part of the industrial workers today have drifted away from the churches, or is it that the churches have drifted away from them? By the end of the 19th century the flourishing church was one with sufficient of its members with time to take part in its various activities; thus, there was an interest in what a person did in his leisure time more than what he did in his working time; in fact, it was of no concern to anyone as to when or where or how you worked. As a group or as a community it was cut-off from the workaday world despite the fact that many of its members were, of course, in it. Also, in the middle-class church many members had no contact with industry at its productive end; their work was in commerce, administration or teaching; the people who worked in factories or mines lived in another world. Gradually the churches found that large sections of the population were quite outside the normal preaching and teaching work and that their life and activities were divorced from the typical church.

During the last forty years half the population has been uprooted and while some people thrive on mobility most people do not and it takes time to grow new roots. They may travel long distances to work, and home and work are in quite separate worlds. Even if the church is in touch with their home life, the church is out of touch with their working life and so cannot relate them. This is emphasized still more when there are social activities at the works.

Then there is the increasing size of the industrial unit which has an influence of its own and is by no means necessarily bad. In fact many of the recent changes in industry are for the good: the improvement in working conditions, the greater concern for the individual, the growth of personnel management, and of joint consultations in the adjustment of wage differentials. Most of this has been outside the life of the churches, but there is no doubt that we cannot ignore Christian sources and the initiative of Christian people.

What are the churches doing? They are learning; this is particularly true of the leaders of the churches, because this is the one field in which they are far less involved and less informed than the rank and file of the membership. Industry is a closed book to most ministers and to all theological colleges. In all denominations there has been a growing concern that the training of ministers and clergy should deal more adequately with industrial conditions and that there should be more opportunities for practical experience. Study groups and conferences for clergy and social workers have been held in some towns to enable them to learn more of these matters.

The establishment of industrial chaplains and industrial missioners has been the most obvious expression of work under church auspices. In this the Church of Scotland leads the field, with some 300 industrial chaplains mostly part-time who do this work as part of their ordinary parish duties. Along side there is growing up a movement of laymen who have formed the Scottish Christian

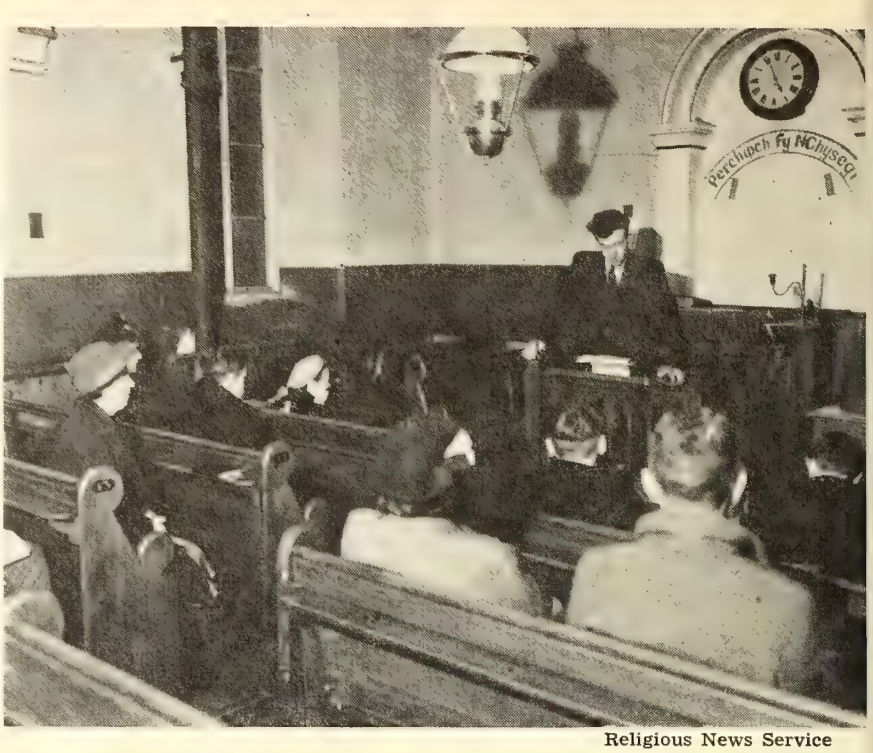
Industrial Order with 1,200 members; its aim is "to advance the knowledge and understanding of the Christian faith and its practice; to promote the best human relations in industry on the basis of that faith; and to further the application of its principles throughout industrial life and society."



In Scotland, even more than in England, there is much residual Christianity and the cleavage between the politically conscious urban worker and the church is by no means complete; efforts to bring men back to church by means of special missions are valid and are successful. In new housing areas the church may often have a kirk session, which is the governing body of the congregation, composed entirely of working men; and many ministers can demonstrate congregations built up from men in shipbuilding, steel works or coal mines who previously had no church connection. In the early days during the war the primary concern of the industrial chaplains was to conduct services in canteens and workshops. Since then, some chaplains concentrate more on discussions with small groups round a canteen table.

In the Church of England special work in industry is being done in several dioceses; in some cases there is a staff of three or four clergy and, in at least one area, also a woman. The main work has been to make contact with individuals, to meet them at their work and to take advantage of opportunities that occur to talk to them, starting from the things they are interested in. This method is particularly suited to some of the heavy industries. In most places services are also held at the works or special industrial services arranged in the churches, but some men engaged in this work feel that it is essential to make it plain to industrial workers that we are not doing this in order "to get them to church" because other methods have failed. There is far more suspicion and mistrust of people "above" than most of us realize and this includes the church. It is only understanding and love that will break that down; we must start on a personal basis and we shall only see results as a long-term measure. A desire to join or rejoin the fellowship of a local church does happen with some individuals, but then there is a danger that the church will try to use up all his time in activities on church premises and he will be lost to his fellows.

In one area an essential part of the work has been the holding of long week-end conferences away from their own city at the William Temple College. About thirty men, some Christians and others not, have been invited to come together for study, discussion and worship; the invitation is sent in a letter signed by the bishop, the chairman of the Employers Federation and the chairman of the Trades Council; wages are paid by the firm for the time away. Some of the very best discussions on these subjects come from these groups. The church is showing that we are concerned and care about their problems and their workaday affairs; in this way a new sense of community is being built.

In one city the work is on an interdenominational basis with a full-time industrial chaplain working under local Christian Industrial Council; for several years Schools of Christian Leadership have been held which have given men and women from all grades the opportunity to hear talks and discuss problems of industry and questions of faith.

There are a large number of ministers and clergy (the total is not known) who regard the factory as coming within their area of pastoral responsibility and regular visits are made for chats and interviews; in some cases the contact is quite informal; in others they have been formally appointed as part-time chaplains. A few ordained men are working in industry on priest-worker lines.

It is clear that whatever else results from this work in industry it has given many ministers a new understanding of the conditions under which most of their members spend their working lives and it has given them a valuable contact with reality. It has awakened a new sense of responsibility in the churches generally and this is bound to have far-reaching results. There are many indications that men in responsible positions in industry are turning to the Christian faith. Can we help them find a living faith or do the churches stand in the way?

The Y.M.C.A. has been doing excellent work at its five residential colleges which have been set up for adult education and especially for short courses for youth and apprentices from industry. The youth work of the churches is concerned mainly with youngsters from industry. In these and in countless other ways the industrial worker comes within the influence of the Christian faith and the gospel is preached by word and by deed.

It may be that we are at present doing little more than preparing the ground, making friendships not only between individuals but between groups, and learning to speak a language that ordinary folk can understand.

The danger is that we tend to be too "churchy" and want others to fit into our accepted pattern of church life. It is more likely that God is calling his people to new ways of fellowship and of living together, so that this modern technical and mechanized economy may become acceptable as a way of life to all men, and their daily work may be done according to his will.

Not a Demand but a Gift

William J. Gnagey

I WOULD like you to join my club, We try to spoil all your fun." If someone approached you in this way, you might respond sincerely that he see a good psychiatrist. We just do not go around recruiting people by telling them what a terrible handicap membership in our organization will be. But this has been the traditional approach of some groups when they go out to win men for Christ. They have emphasized that the Christian life is hard and sorrowful and full of grief and frustrations. They have accentuated the negative. They have painted the picture in dark colors.

It is no wonder that people do not flock to Jesus as they did when he walked the earth as flesh and told them, "Come unto me all ye that are weak and heavy laden, and I will give you rest." We have somehow gotten his words twisted around so that we perceive them to mean: Come unto me, all ye that enjoy life, and I will lay my burden on you, increase your problems and spoil your fun. What a disastrous state of affairs!

One of the reasons for this upside-down approach is a misconception of the nature of God himself. Many still think of God as a pouty tyrant sitting on his lofty throne and amusing himself by making us squirm.

But that is not what Jesus said! He pointed out that God is a loving Father in heaven who is interested in the welfare of his children, supremely concerned with their happiness and even willing to descend to the earth and live with the pain and the temptation of mortal life in order to help us get in tune with his universal laws.

God's laws were made for the good of his people: The law of gravity is an asset, not a liability. If this pull toward the center of the earth should suddenly stop, think of the death and destruction that would result.

Moral laws are made for the same reason, that is, to promote order and harmony and to prevent turmoil and disaster. The present high number of divorces and broken homes is a direct result of the flagrant ways that Americans, as reported by Dr. Kinsey, have violated God's law. The Old Testament's, "Thou shalt not commit adultry," was not the peevish demand of a self-centered god. Christ corrected that misconception when he gave us the positive statement, "Blessed are the pure in heart . . ." Through Jesus, God was trying to show us that the way to a full, lasting happiness in marriage is purity. He was trying to save us the heartache and strife and mental pain that always accompanies such animalism in our human society.

This, then, is an earnest plea for a more positive approach to Christianity. When we speak of the hard work involved in being a Christian, let's speak in the same breath of the top-rate satisfaction which accompanies a job well done. When we mention some of the things that Christians should not do, let's have some testimonies of people who have experienced those deeper, more important, longer-lasting satisfactions that are made possible by walking away from some of the more momentary, fleeting attractions.

It is fun to be a Christian! It is more lastingly pleasant than any other way of life. Christian moral law is not an unreasonable demand. It is a gift of love from God.

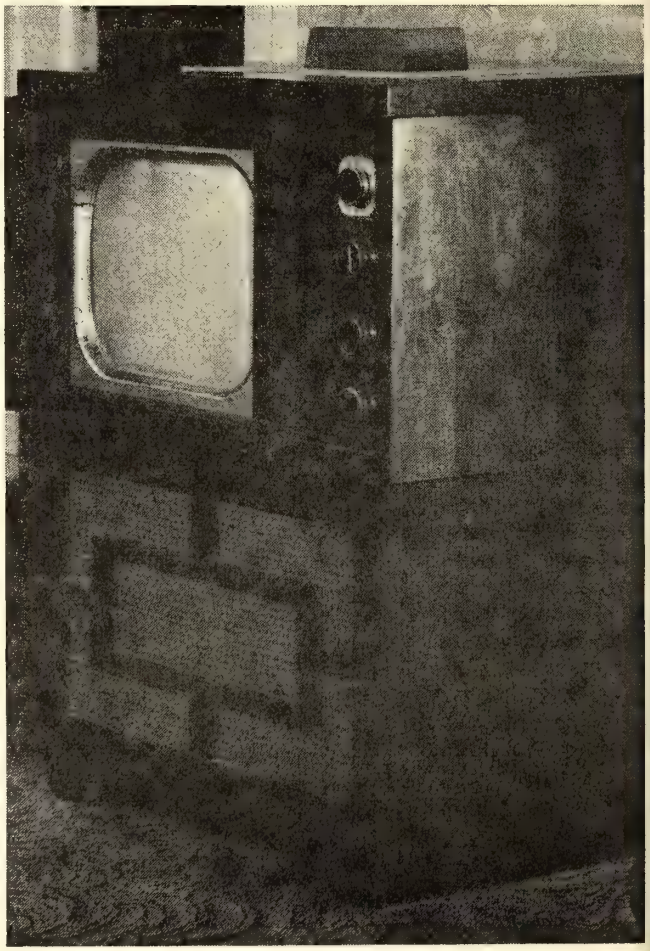
Through the Eye Gate

Max M. Shank

TELEVISION brings many varied experiences through the "ear and eye gates." Some are simply enjoyable; others are meant to bring thrills which stimulate the emotions to the utmost. Simply by opening the "gates," one can invite experiences which are enjoyable or educational or both, but my concern lies with the fact that we can invite into our very homes heart-throbbing terror which grips us forcefully, sometimes leaving us shaky and with raised blood-pressure. These emotions are not imaginary; they are real-life experiences. Once we identify ourselves with a character being portrayed, we are experiencing an emotional climax ourselves. Through the "ear gate," radio could only approximate such an experience, but now with both "gates" open we are exposed to the full impact of emotional climaxes.

My concern arose because of what my boy (two years old) had been experiencing while watching television without discretion upon our part. Anything unusual or strange happening during the day would cause Keith to become terrified, run to one of us to be held closely. He would grip us tightly around the neck with his arms and around the waist with his legs, whimpering all the time. We did not wake up to what was happening until one of these experiences happened during one terrifying play on television. There was a sudden movement in the room and Keith became emotionally upset. This is a situation which we have been startled into realizing must be remedied or untold damage may result.



My great-grandparents settled close to Abilene, Kansas, when Abilene was the wildest town on the plains. Shooting in the back was common and they buried their sheriffs until Mr. Hickok came along. Although my great-grandparents lived only nine miles away from Abilene, they did not go there more than once every three months for supplies. It was too dangerous.

My forefathers took precautions against such danger, yet we without thinking can invite such fearful experiences into our lives through the "eye gate" not just once, but several times every day. I invite other parents to reconsider their use of television especially in regard to their children. Children do not accept plays as make-believe; they accept them as life itself.

Parents should also rethink television in regard to themselves. After a day's work, adults used to relax. In many ways television does not permit this. Radio only claimed a fraction of our attention but television possesses the body in total. I think that television can be tabbed as another item under temperance. Our emotional health is at stake.

If the "gates" are being left wide open to indiscriminate use of television, let us shut them. Prevention of damaging emotional experiences is worth more, in this instance, for my child than many ounces of cure. The same applies to the children in every home in America. In this, as in other areas of life, we must choose that which is best. If we do not choose carefully, the "peace that passes all understanding" in Christ, may not originate in our children and may be damaged in ourselves.

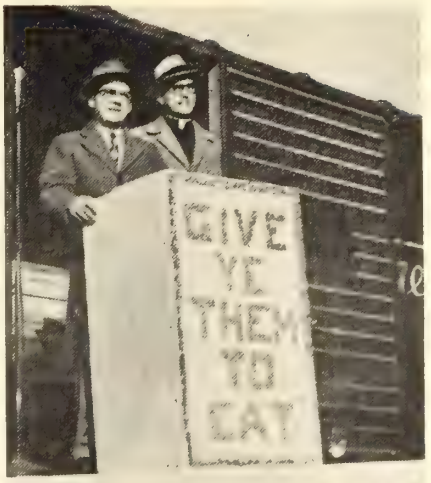
first requisite for communicating the gospel is to be possessed by the transforming power of Jesus Christ . . . . Evangelism is a dimension of the total activity of the church. All the church does is of evangelizing significance."

The section describing a Christian society said that the responsibility for a better social and political life comes from Christ. It said that "at all stages of political development . . . a Christian community must act as the conscience for the nation."

Another norm—standard of action—came from the subsidiary section on international affairs. It stated that the church's foremost responsibility in facing the new moral challenge of nuclear warfare is evangelism in order to make world reconciliation possible. Christians should be "untiring in their efforts to create and maintain an international climate favorable for reconciliation and goodwill." It stated that "the churches should plead for just judgment and humane treatment of those . . . called to this personal witness (conscientious objection) for peace."



Another section declared its conviction "that segregation in all its forms is contrary to the gospel, and is incompatible with the Christian doctrine of man and with the nature of the church of Christ." Another group said that more and more the church must depend upon and train the lay members, who actually fight the real battles of the faith in the offices, fields, homes, and farm, labor and business organizations.

In addition to these norms from the greatest of ecumenical gatherings, we have a practical program in the church for constructive activity in advancing his kingdom here and now. The responsibility for our missions and evangelism program is expressed in the title of Bishop Moore's book, Immortal Tidings In Mortal Hands. Thanks be to God that he gives to mortal men the power to disseminate the eternal truth through his spirit!

Because we believe in the fact of a growing kingdom, here and now, we have developed a program for the relief of suffering. In certain circles where I have the pleasure of moving the mention of the Church of the Brethren often brings the response, "Oh, yes, we are well acquainted with the heifer program!"

Because we believe in the development of the kingdom of God here and now, as well as in the hereafter, we have a program of Christian education. It operates through our colleges and through the local churches. Men and women are serving in college faculties, on lower salaries than they might even receive in the pastorate, because of their belief in the college as an instrument in seeking his kingdom.

Brethren will need a minimum of seven or eight million dollars during the current year for kingdom building. Over one and one-fourth million will be needed for our general program. According to the best estimates, the Lord gives to our people approximately 330 million dollars each year in earnings. Scripture teaches that he is entitled a ten per cent return. This would total over thirty-three million dollars. Recently we have been giving about seven million dollars each year, meaning we are withholding about twenty-six million dollars to which the Lord is entitled. In business parlance, the Lord is getting only a two to three per cent dividend on his income, whereas it should be at least ten per cent! It is a boundless privilege to contribute liberally in our efforts to build God's kingdom, both for the future and for the here and now.

At a dedication of corn for the relief program that is a part of the growing kingdom in our time

There is a valid criticism leveled at those who emphasize the kingdom of God here and now. It is that, all too easily, consecrated people can develop more faith in a method or in a program, than in Christ and his kingdom. Those of us who engage in much activity must always be careful to keep in mind the objective, "seek first his kingdom."

In recent world gatherings many theologians, chiefly non-Americans, warned others, perhaps chiefly those from this country, that they are laying too much stress on techniques, methodology and program.

I personally do not think the two concepts are irreconcilable. We can believe in the kingdom of God after history; we can believe in immortality and eternal life. And at the same time we can believe that the kingdom

Children do not choose their playmates on the basis of color or race if they are left alone

Religious News Service

RECENTLY my eye was caught by a striking picture. It appeared in one of our national weeklies and also in our daily newspapers. It was spread widely across our country.

It was a picture of a little lad, perhaps not more than seven or eight years old. He was partly obscured by a large placard which he was carrying and which he was having a little trouble controlling in the wind. The little lad was dressed well. The style of his dress indicated that he came from somewhere in the East, and the quality of it indicated that he came from the middle or upper class of our economic society.

He should have been in school, but he was not. No truant officer was after him because he was not.

He was carrying a placard, along with many other school children of his own age and older, and on the placard was emblazoned in startling letters: "We don't want you."

The picture did not make it evident who it was he did not want, but in reading the text it became apparent that in the school to which he had gone there had come several Negro children, less, I believe, than a dozen. The little lad did not mind about it at first. In fact, he probably did not notice it, for to him the color of skin was not an important thing. He made his friends on the basis of what they were like, their friendliness and their common interest, rather than on the basis of skin tone.

His parents did not let him continue that way, however. They made him racially conscious. They took him out of school. They sent him marching on a windy street with a placard saying, "We don't want you."

Schools of his town were closed. The governor ordered them opened. His parents would not let him go to school, even though they were open. Military troops needed to be called out. At this writing the end is not yet.

This did not look like a picture taken in America. We would have expected this picture to come out of Communist China or from the heart of Russia.

Had the Communists been deliberately seeking to have the Americans do things and take pictures which would stimulate the Communist cause in other parts of the world, they could not have done better than to get this one taken and publicized.

This sort of thing, which the picture depicted, could not happen in America! It did. If we who are educators and Christians do not keep our eyes open in America and speak out,

President, McPherson College, Kansas

Americanism can die even here.

This is not written in a spirit of criticism toward the South or toward any section of our country. The problem of race is no longer a sectional problem. It is not even a national problem. It must be faced and solved on a world basis.

I have high admiration for the courageous way in which some Southern communities have faced their problems in the matter of race and have quietly made headway in solving them. One of the finest statements I have seen on this problem was made by a Virginian, Paul H. Bowman, to Virginians. While this has been happening racial tensions have broken into violence in our Northern cities.

All racial tensions are generated. Racial consciousness is not born into any child; it is taught. Tensions and discriminations are not inherent in skin-tone variation. They are sociologically created and taught. The deliberate perpetuation of racial discrimination, no matter where practiced, is sociologically unsound; it is sin.

The immediate solution to the problem of discrimination may not be apparent, for the problem is emotional and deep, but the direction of our movement must be Christian. No child anywhere should be taught to do what the picture revealed.

"And before him shall be gathered all people."

can begin here and now and then find its fulfillment after history.

Finally, to "seek first his kingdom" we will fulfill the belief that the kingdom of God can exist in the total fabric of men's personalities. In other words the kingdom can exist in men's hearts. Because men can experience personally the kingdom they will have, in the words of Hastings, "that spiritual state which results from the very presence of God in the human heart."

A portion of the epistle to Diogenes describes the early Christians as men who had the kingdom of God in their hearts:

They exist in the flesh, but they live not after the flesh;

They spend their existence upon the earth, but their citizenship is in heaven.

They are poor, and yet they make many rich.

They lack everything, yet in everything they abound.

They are reviled and yet are vindicated.

They are abused and they bless.

They are insulted and repay insult with honor.

In reality, the heart of the matter is having God's kingdom in our entire being. When we experience and radiate the kingdom daily through our contacts and influence, we will be led to the search for his kingdom in the here and now, as well as for the perfect kingdom in the hereafter, where all redeemed men will live eternally with God, rejoicing and praising his name forever.

The Family Counselor

Naomi Will H. K. Zeller, Jr. Jesse Ziegler

The Family Counselor welcomes letters of inquiry. They may be addressed: Family Life Department, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Dear Counselor,

The report is going about in our community just now that many of our high school students are addicted to drugs. We are in a large city where parents do not know one another and we have little satisfactory contact with the teachers. Our own young people are not involved thus far but we are concerned. How could we go about doing something about it?

Concerned Parent.

Dear Parents,

I cannot possibly know whether or not the report on use of drugs by high school students in your city is or is not accurate. It probably is. It has been found to be true in New York and also in areas of Chicago. And it is easy to understand that you would be concerned as parents of teen-agers.

But when you ask what can be done about the situation—then you make it difficult—as I know you must feel it is. I must say immediately that there is no one right answer or no one completely adequate answer. Let me suggest several points of view that may be helpful.

First, it is important to realize that drug addiction, like alcoholism, is not the illness. It is only a symptom of the illness. There is little question but that drug addiction is related to the very uncertain future that most teen-agers face. A period of service in the army, unsettled economic conditions, a lack of positive constructive goals—these conditions represent a feeling of terrible emptiness. But it does not stop there. The emptiness leads to morbidity and despair. Drugs are a way to get a thrill and a lift, no matter how fleeting it may be.

Second, if drug addiction is only a symptom then it is clear that the most constructive thing we can do is to work at changing the situations that cause the despair and futility in youth. We must guarantee not only to "conscientious objectors to war" but to all youth a chance to live out life without fighting in wars they do not help to cause. We must provide through our churches and community organizations adequate fellowship that is deeply satisfying. We must open to every youth a chance for a home, a chance for satisfying extra job service to his community.

Third, this is not to say that in working at basic causes we should ignore a program of enforcement of laws against sale and distrubution of drugs. Only with an honest and vigilant police force can this be carried on. It, however, must be considered as supplemental.

Fourth, we must cut through the lack of personal contact with teachers and school people. Even in a large city school people do respond favorably to friendly concern and co-operative approach from parents. This also will help to provide an atmosphere in which drug addiction becomes unlikely.

National Council Votes Sum for Headquarters Building

The General Board of the National Council of Churches has authorized the expenditure of up to $600,000 for construction of a permanent New York headquarters. The Manhattan center will house the central offices of the Protestant and Eastern Orthodox interchurch body and headquarters of five or six major Protestant denominations. A committee representing eleven educational and religious institutions on New York's Morningside Heights reportedly has asked the National Council to consider locating there. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., is said to have offered to contribute up to $1,000,000 for a religious center in New York City.

The National Council has also extended an invitation to the Church Federation of Chicago to join in creating a committee for a similar "United Church Building" in Chicago, which is to be the site of a major office of the Council.

National Council President on Far Eastern Tour

Dr. Eugene Carson Blake, newly elected president of the National Council of Churches, left New York early in December on a visit to military personnel and chaplains in the Far East. This is the second year that a National Council president has visited Japan and Korea on a Christmas trip. Last year Methodist Bishop William C. Martin spent a month touring military outposts and preaching to troops in Korea and Japan. Dr. Blake was elected to succeed Bishop Martin on Dec. 2 at the third biennial General Assembly of the National Council held in Boston.

Untouchability Still Challenges India

The U. S. Supreme Court has outlawed racial segregation, but citizens in various parts of the United States obstruct the operation of this decision. Similarly, while India has eliminated untouchability by law, it is finding that centuries of custom cannot readily be overcome, especially when tradition carries with it religious sanctions. A barber in West Bengal who refused to shave a Harijan (Gandhi's name for the untouchables) was called before a judge; he pleaded that he was not required by the constitution to shave anyone. The court ruled against him, but as an Indian editor commented, "The law could not defeat his state of mind." The Indian Parliament has recently sought by law to close the various loopholes through which violators of the constitution escape punishment.

Pope Hails Zeal of Nigeria Missionaries

Pope Pius XII, in a letter to the National Marian Congress at Lagos, Nigeria, credited the zeal of the early missionaries in that West African country for the advances of Catholicism there in recent years. He pointed out that today in 15 ecclesiastical districts of the country there are over 500 priests and over 250 missionary sisters ministering to almost a million persons in the church's fold. He noted that many of the priests are Nigerians and that there already are many lay teachers and catechists co-operating with the clergy.

Bishop Asks Amish to Comply With Laws

A leader of an Amish Mennonite Conference has called on Amish members throughout the United States to obey compulsory school laws and draft regulations. Bishop Jacob J. Hershberger urged that Amish change their tactics of resistance to those of co-operation with law officers. He counseled that should any law conflict with the Word of God, "the true Christian will in a humble manner request to be excused from following that particular law. When the Christian has in this manner respected the law of his country, he will nearly always find that his wishes are respected, when and where his conscience forbids him from taking part in that which he believes is contrary to God's Word."

Proposes American Church Delegation to Iron Curtain

A proposal that a carefully-selected delegation of American churchmen confer with representative church leaders behind the iron curtain was made recently by Dr. Walter W. Van Kirk, the executive director of the National Council of Churches' department of international justice and goodwill. Speaking for himself and not for the National Council, Dr. Van Kirk said, "The churches of Christ must break through the iron curtains imposed by secular society. Among those people who live within the shadow of the iron curtain there is not the alarm and hysteria which seems to have taken so many of our own people captive."

Urge Governments to Pledge Never to Use H-Bomb

The British Government has been asked by the National Peace Council to seek a joint pledge by Soviet Russia, the United States and Britain never to use the hydrogen bomb under any circumstances. If the two other powers refuse, then Britain is requested to make such a statement alone. Believing that general disarmament is unlikely soon, the council points out that "no reliance can be placed on the argument that the very nature of the latest weapons will act in the long run as a deterrent to war." The National Peace Council is made up of some forty affiliated organizations, including the British peace and pacifist societies, the Atomic Scientists Association, the Council of Christians and Jews, the London Cooperative Society and the Student Christian Movement.

Norwegians Pledge $43,000 for Schweitzer's Hospital

When Albert Schweitzer left Norway after receiveing the Nobel Peace Prize, he carried away with him a pledge of $43,000, raised in three days by a newspaper campaign. The idea for the fund came to a young farm girl while she was feeding and milking her father's cows. She went in the house, wrote a letter to the labor paper Arbeiderbladet — which took up the idea with the resulting boost for Schweitzer's great work in Africa.

Northern Illinois Colleges Hold Human Relations Conference

The fourth annual College Conference on Human Relations recently brought together more than fifty students from eighteen Northern Illinois colleges. Whites, Negroes, Asians, variously Protestants, Catholics and Jews, attended. One girl was quoted by the Negro newspaper, Pittsburgh Courier, as explaining: "We're away from the social pressure of our homes and schools . . . and we can stop thinking of colored people as colored people and white people as white people, and get to know people as people."

Methodists Outline Television Series

Leaders in the Methodist Church are planning to take the gospel to American homes in a half-hour dramatic television program. No format has been set for the program yet, but it is hoped that it will minimize Protestant sectarian beliefs and be patterned after the successful "This Is the Life" series of the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod. The program will be offered TV stations through the Broadcasting and Film Commission of the National Council of Churches.

Quakers Protest Civilian Defense Drills

The Friends Peace Committee of Philadelphia has protested the mass evacuation of central city office workers and school children from their buildings in Civilian Defense drills. The Quaker group says that such demonstrations serve mainly "to demonstrate to the world our lack of faith in our ability to prevent war." Some 30,000 persons participated in the drills, the adults pouring out of office buildings and walking several blocks to evacuation stations. Children were loaded in buses and driven for an hour toward Civilian Defense gateways. It was believed the first such test evacuation in a large city. The Quaker statement declared, "If Moscow were to conduct such rehearsals for war it would hardly strengthen our attitude toward Russia's protestations for peace. We recognize the necessity for law and order, for sensible precautions, for first-aid training and fire drills, but we wonder if such dramatic demonstrations as mock evacuations may not do more harm than good."

Can You Remember?

Devere Allen

CAN YOU REMEMBER? Can you remember the days when the movies used horrible-looking Japanese as villains? Those times are gone, but we have only turned our skill towards other parts of the world. And now, in Japan, leftist organizations produce movies portraying Americans as the same warmongers and desperadoes as the Japanese who once flashed across our Western screens. If we do not like what is going on today, we might at least remember. We can outweigh such propaganda only in one effective manner — by sheer patient decency. And while we are still employing the same technique towards any nation, have we much of a right to get sore at some of the Japanese?

Can you remember? Can you think back to the 1930's, when a great migration of colored workers left the South for Northern industries? They told then of a Kentucky woman who bitterly resented the loss of servants and the fact that "soon there won't be anybody to be better than." Well, white women in South Africa are complaining angrily that if the government's scheme to remove Africans to special preserves is carried through, they will have to do their own work. The growing protest may yet rock the government's apartheid policy.

Can you remember? Can you live again the excitement of Americans by the thousands who, in 1939 and 1940, were convinced Hitler meant to land an army in Argentina and march straight to Chicago? Even through terrain hardly a single person had ever penetrated? Hitler was a menace, all right, but that soft of thing was not his dish. Now, two U.S. army historians have reported, after careful study, that at no time before Pearl Harbor did Hitler plan territorial conquests in the Western Hemisphere. They would have been mobbed for saying it, in some places, fifteen years ago. This too is important, for when you hear about "world conquest" on the part of any nation, it is wise to understand its methods and true ambitions. If we don't get it straight, we lose.

Can you remember? Can you reconstruct the mood when the first atom blast was set off at White Sands? Men everywhere were overcome with awe. They were shocked at the vast power snatched by humble man from cosmic forces. Norman Cousins wrote his famous, Modern Man Is Obsolete. Now what a change! The N.Y. Times heads a story on the discovery of a star that burst twenty million years ago: Stars That Explode Like an H-Bomb. Makes one think of the city dweller who visited his first planetarium, then went out and looked at the heavens, and said: "Why, the sky works just like that show in there!" Planning a new H-Bomb test three times as big as the last, the attitude of the atomizers seems to be, "What is God, that man should be mindful of him?" (Worldover Press.)

KINGDOM GLEANINGS

Southern Baptists will conduct a crusade for Christian morality in 1955 and 1956. Emphases will be placed upon honesty, clean living, abstinence from beverage alcohol and civic righteousness.

A new five-times-weekly radio program was started January 3 in which Dr. Norman Vincent Peale, author and minister, answers questions sent to him by listeners. The new program can be heard on NBC stations (10:05-10:15 a.m., EST).

Every minute of 1955 is to be filled with prayer by groups of individuals cooperating with plans established by the Methodist Board of Evangelism. The prayer chain will enlist from 50,000 to 100,000 participants. It is expected that peace petitions will be at the top of most prayer lists.

College students interested in missionary service are much better informed on world conditions and exising opportunities in its various countries than they were a few years ago, according to the Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship which held its fourth International Student Convention at Champaign, Ill., during the Christmas holidays.

The announcement of family life materials included on page 21 of last week's issue was in error with reference to the contents of a packet distributed by Program Packet Service of the Mental Health Center. In the announcement the reference to "a film" should have read "a film announcement."

The Ohio Pastors' Convention, interdenominational meeting regularly held in Columbus, is scheduled for January 24-27. Among the leaders who will address the convention is Kermit Eby, professor in the department of social sciences in the University of Chicago. Special denominational and interdenominational luncheon meetings will be scheduled during the Convention.

Many ABC radio network stations carry the new series of broadcast sermons by John Sutherland Bonnell. The program begins with a dramatic monologue telling an individual story of personal crisis, followed by an interiew in which Dr. Bonnell talks with an expert in the field under discussion. He closes the program with a brief religious message. The theme of the series is Toward Personal Peace. The time is Sundays, 1:35-2:00 p.m. EST.

Guy Wampler, Jr., a student at Bridgewater College, is the new president of the Brethren Student Christian Movement as a result of elections held at the annual student conference at Elizabethtown College. Other members of the cabinet are Esther Williams, La Verne College, secretary; Edwin Switzer, McPherson College; Dick Simmons, Manchester College; Carol Jenkins, Juniata College; Kenneth Miller, Elizabethtown College; and Al Whitacre, Bethany Seminary. The next student conference will be held during the Thanksgiving holidays at Bridgewater College. Program emphasis will be given to the topic, Boy-Girl Relations on the College Campus.

Evangelist Billy Graham received the seventh annual citation of the Salvation Army Association of New York. It described him as a "minister, leader, evangelist who through his boundless spirit, unfailing faith and absolute dedication to Christ has led untold thousands into a new and deeper understanding of God."

Membership in the United Lutheran Church in America increased by 53,681 in 1953 for a total of 2,141,626. Statistics soon to be published in the United Lutheran Yearbook show that the church's membership and pastors have nearly doubled since it was organized thirty-five years ago.

The Protestant Episcopal church has reported an increase of 116,386—or a growth of 4.17 per cent—in the number of church members during the past year. The total membership is now 2,907,321. Contributions to the church also represented an increase of more than twenty per cent.

The new czar of the comic book industry, Charles P. Murphy, said that he has changed 5,656 drawings and rejected 126 stories since his office was created on Oct. 27. These were part of 440 comic books slated for publication early in 1955. Shortly after the first of the year comic books carrying Mr. Murphy's seal of approval began to appear.

The Jews of the world now number 11,672,000. These are distributed among ninety-seven countries. The Jewish population in the United States is estimated at 5,000,000; about 2,000,000 live in the Soviet Union; and Israel has a Jewish population of 1,450,000. According to the survey put out by the World Jewish Congress, there are 1,200,000 Jews in China.

A record budget of $3,580,800 was adopted for the new year by the Board of American Missions of the United Lutheran Church. This is more than $500,000 above the 1954 budget. Of this amount a little more than two million will be used for church extension loans. Fifty-five new congregations were organized last year by the United Lutheran Church.

An appeal to church people to invite African guests into their homes at Christmas was made in December by the Archbishop of Canterbury. He pointed out that thousands of Africans, many of them Christians and Anglicans, lived in England as students or workers. He said, "They are far from their homes, in a country strange to them in its climate as in its ways. The church has a duty to help them."

The divorce rate in 1954 was apparently the lowest since the end of World War II, according to Surgeon General Leonard Scheele of the U.S. Public Health Service. Although the compilation of statistics for the year will not be completed for several months, Dr. Scheele reported that on the basis of reports from twenty-five areas of the nation, the 1954 divorce rate dropped four per cent from comparable 1953 figures. This represents a total reduction of about forty per cent from the postwar peak reached in 1946.

More than 150,000 working hours were given last year by Roman Catholic young people to aid in the construction of housing projects for homeless refugees in Germany.

Gratitude to American church and other voluntary agencies for the relief they have provided for hundreds of thousands of refugees in Indochina has been expressed by officials of the Vietnamese government. Among the organizations that have helped to relieve the distress of refugees fleeing from the Communist-controlled areas of northern Indochina have been the International Rescue Committee and the National Catholic Welfare Conference.

In November the Society for Christian-Jewish Cooperation celebrated its fifth anniversary in Berlin. When the Society was constituted in 1949, more than fifty leading personalities from public life addressed an appeal to the Berlin population asking for cooperation in the spirit of mutual respect. Lectures, literary recitals, public meetings and concerts of sacred music are arranged by the society. After five years the number of members supporting the aims and purposes of the society has increased to 3,700.

Newspapers generally "underestimate the intelligence and interest of the average reader," especially in their coverage of religious news, according to Dr. Henry P. Van Dusen, president of Union Theological Seminary. The seminary head urged reporters of religious news to pattern themselves after drama, music and literary critics. He said that what is "most needed" among those who cover religion for the secular press is the evangelistic purpose, depth of conviction and enthusiasm which the critics bring to their jobs.

The Washington Federation of Churches recommended to Protestant denominations in the capital city that they plan a more effective ministry to members of Congress and other government officials. The major proposals were that there be an interdenominational service of communion and intercession for members of the House and Senate; that each denomination have a reception soon after the opening of Congress; and that Protestant denominations ask all local ministers to write their national headquarters or a pastor of a Washington church when a member takes a post in Washington.

Discrimination costs American business and industry thirty billion dollars a year and is "a woeful extravagance" that can be eliminated, according to two pamphlets issued by the National Conference of Christians and Jews. One of the pamphlets, A Fair Chance for All Americans, contains articles on how discrimination is eliminated in the employment practices of some of the country's largest industries. It includes articles written by the president of Radio Corporation of America; the board chairman of the Chicago mail order house of Spiegel, Inc.; and the vice-president of Carson Pirie Scott & Co., leading Chicago department store. In the other booklet, Elmo Roper, well-known analyst of public opinion, marketing trends and employee attitudes, decried the fact that discrimination in employment wastes "ten dollars out of every seventy-five dollar paycheck on the phony luxury of indulging our prejudices."

Ordained to the Eldership

Royal Frantz in the Sunfield, Mich., church, on September 26. Bro. Glenn Fruth was the special speaker at the ordination service.

Otis Landis in the Springfield, Ohio, church, on January 9. Raymond Peters was the guest speaker at the ordination service. This was erroneously referred to as a home-coming in an earlier issue.

Assistance . . . by Example and Education

FI BEIT!" "Mr. Harry, fi beit!" "Mr. Jim, ashra beit!" These were the first words after the usual extensive salutations of our Arab boys upon our return from a week's vacation in Egypt. The boys who had been watching and caring for the chickens so closely were overwhelmed with joy and pride to know that "their" chickens were really laying eggs. Our four boys had gotten ten eggs in our absence and were given the pleasure of eating them for the big celebration.

The boys described each egg carefully to us, its shape, size and yolk. I can already see developing in them an ambition to do their work better and with more pride since some returns are now beginning to be seen.

Harry and I have been on a vacation — one week in Syria and Lebanon and another week in Egypt. Although we were not obliged to do so, we observed considerable work being done by the Point Four program. On both trips we were welcomed most enthusiastically, shown around and offered information and help. It gave us an opportunity to observe our own project when we returned on a comparative basis with others in the area. On both returns we felt we were working along correct lines and procedures and that many of our problems were similar to those experienced by others. Considering our problems and where we started, we think that things now look very good. Also, they are continuing to improve. During the past month we have filled a laying house with 800 hens and another one will be ready for occupancy within the next week.

These accomplishments may sound rather insignificant, and they probably would be in any other place. Here, we must first decide what our needs are, how much we need and what is needed most. This is not too difficult, but usually requires time and study. After deciding what is required for better production and more economical operation, we must educate and persuade the Arab managers of these needs. Because chickens have been raised here before and in the Bedouin tents and in the mud huts of the villages on just what they can pick up, and lay a few eggs, without these so-called "new fangled feeds," most people think that it is a waste of money and is foolish to buy expensive feeds. Few people know what constitutes good chicken feed, let alone what a balanced ration is, with minerals, proteins and vitamins in their proper amount and ratio. To teach this is a long, slow process and, of course, language is ofttimes a barrier in getting across our thoughts, reasons and ideas. Only actual demonstration can furnish proof of what we say when we state better production and greater profits go with better feeds, better chickens and better care.

Then, again, there is the problem of securing desirable feeds, which is difficult in the case of certain materials and almost impossible in others. Ordering must be done through the office of the general manager, after we persuade him of the need. Then we are required to find where this feed may be secured. This frequently requires considerable time. Jordan is a very poor country and very little in the line of poultry feeds is available. Therefore, communication and correspondence with producers in other countries is necessary. After locating a source of supply, extended negotiations are required to arrange for its purchase and transportation. Practically the foresight of a genius is needed to have the material on hand when it is needed.

Then, after the proper materials are finally secured, there is the matter of educating the laborers regarding the proportion to mix in the feeds. Again, this requires explaining why it is improrant to have all the elements in their proper ratio. This explanation is very important because we find that when the mixing operation is done according to their own personal ideas and methods, the value of certain ingredients is destroyed.

With this explanation, we hope that you may better appreciate our apparently meager accomplishments. Actually we have accomplished much more than is readily apparent. As we have mentioned before, it becomes increasingly evident that assistance by example and demonstration is very nearly void without a simultaneous system of education, so that a residue of knowledge and experience will remain with the people after our assistance has ended. It is to this end that we continue to labor. To plan for the immediate future here it is necessary continuously to evaluate the past.

Nevertheless, it is most encouraging to come back "home" after our wonderful vacation and accept again the challenge of service here with renewed vigor and confidence that somehow we can make conditions a little better for our fellow man, here where the need is so great.

As of Nov. 30 there were 225 men serving their alternative service in Brethren Service projects. Approximately 181 Brethren men are serving in non-Brethren projects. Approximately 125 applications are pending. A total of about 500 men have been in or are now in the Brethren Alternative Service program—about 105 men have received their release from this program.

A total of more than 5,000 men are serving in all Alternative Service programs.

NEWS FROM FRESNO

Youth of the community find many opportunities for wholesome recreation at the North Avenue community center. Pictured here are the playground marble champions

Two volunteers, Marjorie Pepple and Arlene Ober, arrived on Nov. 5 to serve here at the North Avenue community center. New house parents at the center are Bruce and Joan Young, who arrived about the middle of November. Barbara Rummel left the project at the end of September after staying three months longer than her B.V.S. term.

The Jolly Gray-Y girls' club (ages 9-11) are meeting regularly with an attendance of about eight at their meetings. The girls worked on embroidered towels which they gave their mothers at Christmas. The Twilight Junior High girls' club (ages 12-14) has approximately seventeen on roll. They painted cans and made Christmas decorations for their homes. The Gray-Y boys' club has seventeen boys enrolled (ages 9-11). Their project has been braiding belts.

There is a supervised playground every afternon from 2:30 to 6:00. One night a week is "Teen Night" and one night each week is movie night. It is a challenging opportunity to discover how to make our recreational program attractive to the youth of the community. Attendance at these activities varies because of other factors in the community.

A new director's home will be started in the near future. It will be located near the staff house and the community building. The work will be done by the churches of Northern California. Work is still being done on the community center building which includes auditorium, office, storeroom, kitchen and clubroom. Project members are also helping with these buildings.

Two Experiences

Erich Guenther
Kassel, Germany

WHEN I was a young man I emigrated to the United States and lived there for nearly five years. At that time and to this day one of my favorite American authors is Elbert Hubbard, particularly his Little Journeys to the Homes of the Great. He and his wife were killed during a trip in Europe in 1916, when the "Lusitania" was torpedoed by a German submarine. As a German national I always feel that it was a horrible fact that my people, and in a certain indefinable way myself, had been the cause of the cruel death of this excellent couple. When in 1934 I mentioned my feelings in a letter to Hubbard's son, Elbert Hubbard II, he replied in the following words: "I never held any resentment for the German people because I have always known that the sinking of the Lusitania was not their doing, but rather one of those very disastrous and fateful results of warfare."

Thus I was comforted and strengthened in my belief that good thoughts and deeds and the spirit of love would in the future be a help in establishing conditions of goodwill and understanding throughout the world. Alas! I was mistaken. There came another war, more dreadful than World War I. In spite of it I cherish the hope and still believe that some day the people on this planet will live in peace. There are so many encouraging indications in these days. I personally had one experience which I think is worth while to be passed on as a proof for this belief.

Several weeks ago my wife and I were hostesses to a young American who stayed with us for about two months. He was a fine chap and we all enjoyed very much having him live with us. We spent many pleasant and uplifting evenings in our home. This young man — let us call him Chuck — paid us a one-day visit recently. Along with him came another young American who is going to stay and work in Germany for two years; let us call him Charley. He was six feet tall, just like Chuck, and just as modest and lovable as he.

During the conversation he mentioned that there are twelve sisters and brothers in his family, and that one of his brothers, a tankman, was killed by the Germans in France in June or July 1944. We told him that my wife's youngest brother, likewise a six footer and tankman, was killed in action by Americans in the same area at about the same time. There we sat, looking into each others' eyes, each with the feeling of guilt in his heart, although neither of us was responsible for what had happened, and each one loving the other as a human character and because we are Christians.

Could there be anything more striking to reveal the cruelty of war? I believe we all felt great comfort when we sat down to have dinner and Charley in saying grace spoke the words: "We thank thee, God, for this food and for the wonderful evening, and we ask thy blessing for this family." Somehow, it made me think of Elbert Hubbard, and remembering him I recalled the words which he quotes in his Little Journeys: "We will not be here forever, anyway; soon Death, the kind old nurse, will come and rock us all to sleep, and we had better help one another while we may: we are going the same way — let's go hand in hand!"

Charles Nichols, volunteer, lived several months in this German home.

REFUGEE RESETTLEMENT NOTES

Most of our forefathers were refugees who came to this country as strangers. Some pledged their lives and service for the opportunity. Others came on the invitation of friends.

The only way strangers and refugees can enter our country today is through the assurances which we can give. Our church has been responsible for bringing many from the despair of the Old World to the opportunities of our world. Have we done all that we can do for those who look to us for hope and help?

Our City Church Studies Her Opportunities

James H. Beahm
Chicago, Illinois

THE First Church of the Brethren in Chicago is in a changing community. This is true ethnically and also culturally. The church is located in what has been called "Dunkard Island" with the seminary and the hospital and the church as sort of a unifying combination. It is true that quite a number of the members of the church have moved to the suburbs, but many have also stayed in the community; some have moved back into the community. There has been an influx of people of other cultures and varied social levels into the church community, but as yet the church has not had to face the problem of racial infiltration, as far as Negroes are concerned, but some predict that this will come in the not too distant future.

Many of our people had been discussing the opportunities and problems of the church and its relation to the community, but not too much had ever been formulated as to definite goals and specific strategy. Having the conviction that it is good for a church to think through these matters objectively and thoroughly, the pastor brought this concern to the ministerial board. After some consideration the board asked the moderator to call a special meeting of the church cabinet. There was free discussion at this meeting and it became evident that the church had embarked on a study which would need to take more time than could be given in a meeting or two of the cabinet. The church officers were therefore asked to select committees to make a thorough study of various phases of the life of the church and these reports would be made at future meetings, not only of the cabinet but of the combined boards of the church and all others who were deeply concerned.

Committees Appointed

Committees were appointed to study the following problems:

1. Trends in the area in which the church is located. This was to be a statistical study of trends in population, the economic situation, etc., which might have a bearing on the future of the church and its relation to the community.

2. The new Neighborhood Organization—this rather recently formed and incorporated organization is made up of Brethren and non-Brethren and has been doing some very significant work for the betterment of the community. (See Gospel Messenger for Jan. 16, 1954, for "The Church and Seminary Serve Their Community," by John Eichelbergers.) This committee was asked to study the relationship of the church to this Neighborhood Organization.

3. The social and recreational program in the First church area. There are other groups, such as the Y. M. C. A., the "Lighted Schoolhouse" program, etc., which are seeking to provide some wholesome

Many city churches find themselves surrounded by rapidly changing communities. Churches need to plan intelligently and objectively to meet the numerous challenges and opportunities thus presented social life for the community and it was felt that it would be good to study how the church gears into these other community activities.

4. Relation of the church to the nearby hospital and seminary.

5. Puerto Ricans in our community. Quite recently we have received into this community a large number of people from Puerto Rico, most of whom are in this area because of their association with the Brethren at Castañer. In fact, some of them are members of the church there. The conviction has developed that we have a very definite responsibility to these Brethren and their friends and, therefore, this committee was appointed to study how the church might best minister to them and help to integrate them into the fellowship of the church here.

6. The church in an interracial community. This study was asked for in anticipation of further population movements which indicate that we may need to face it sooner or later. This committee was asked to make recommendations as to what the attitude of the church should be. This, it was believed, would be better than to wait until the problem was upon us and then decisions might be made on an emotional rather than an intelligent Christian basis.

So far, these areas of study mentioned have had to do largely with the relationship of the church to the community. Studies of the following areas were also authorized:

7. Local volunteer leadership. This was not a study of leadership from the community as contrasted with leadership from the suburban areas, but rather the assistance of First church people in relation to help from the students at the seminary.

8. The church's club program. This study had to do with the rather heavy weekday program of Scouting, etc., carried on by the church. What will be our policy in the future as to expansion of this program, etc., was the specific question.

9. Program of evangelism. This committee had been functioning for some time, but it seemed wise for it to make specific recommendations concerning the evangelistic strategy of the church.

10. Church plant. In the light of the needs presented, it was felt that a thorough study should be made to determine whether or not the church plant was adequate.

11. Church staff. This was to be a study of the needs as far as paid employees was concerned—full-time secretary, minister of Christian education, etc.

These committees are not novel, to be sure, but we tried to suit the studies to the needs, problems and opportunities as we saw them. Other churches would need to do the same.

How the Committees Reported

These groups were asked to report to the moderator when they were ready but a tentative deadline was set for all reports to be in. When two or so of the reports were ready a meeting was called of all the church boards, the study committees and all members of the church who were interested. The response to these meetings was quite gratifying. This larger group considered the reports and the recommendations that were included. Then a co-ordinating committee was appointed to draw together these recommendations into a comprehensive report to be made again to this larger group. When these recommendations had been considered they were then passed on to be discussed by the church council and decisions made for action. These last steps were necessary in order that the studies would not remain merely on paper. We wanted to avoid the oft-repeated mistake voiced in the statement: "After all's said and done, there's more said than done."

The council met in regular session the last of October and there was a record attendance; the recommendations had been circulated and the members were urged to be present. The response was excellent, but because of business on the agenda these recommendations could not be considered. However, they were read and another date was set for a special called council. At this writing this special meeting has not been held, but we have high hopes for the future. It has been good to have these studies made if for no other reason than that it brought into a consideration of the program and life of the church some fifty people on committees and helped to bring into focus some issues which need to be faced openly and objectively.

There was a strong opinion voiced in the meeting that First church in Chicago has a significant mission to fulfill and therefore will stay where it is. Also, the need was expressed for other churches for the Brethren in other Chicago and suburban areas. A committee was appointed to study this matter and movement is under way to bring this about. The church staff was expanded. We already had, besides the pastor, a part-time minister of Christian education, minister of music and a full-time custodian. We have added a full-time secretary and a pastoral assistant who works with Puerto Ricans in our church community. Bro. Ignacio Rivera, who is a minister from Casteñer, is studying at the seminary and is supported in this home mission work by the Brotherhood Fund and individuals interested in this wider opportunity of service.

These study committees have made some bold assertions and some far-reaching recommendations, all of which cannot be listed here. This process has been wholesome and most worth while and it would be well for every church to look ahead and set stakes for the future and then plan to reach their goals.

Means of Leadership Training

Every worker in the church school and church should be a candidate for growth. The minister, superintendent and board of Christian education all have responsibility for planning adequate training of both prospective and in-service leaders. Build a program of leadership education from among the following:

1. Have monthly or quarterly workers' conferences.

2. Promote the reading of two books per leader per year.

3. Add new books to your church library each year.

4. Encourage your children's workers to join the Fellowship of Growth in Service.

5. Try to have each worker enrolled in one Standard Leadership Education course per year.

6. Give each worker a month of Sundays free to visit other churches for observation purposes. (Select the classes to be visited with care so good teaching can be observed.)

7. Have some assistant teachers serving as apprentices under your best teachers.

8. Occasionally bring in a skilled teacher to conduct a demonstration class, or observe a class and hold a conference with the teacher.

9. Send some of the workers to district, regional or national laboratory schools, workshops, institutes, conferences and conventions each year as opportunity affords.

The Church Abroad

A Christian family sits together out of doors during worship time in a village in India. Such Christian familes are helping the church in India to grow into maturity

Brethren in India --- Past and Present

Beginnings

When Brother and Sister W. B. Stover and Sister Bertha Ryan opened work at Bulsar in 1895 they put their emphasis on the establishment of the church in India. Within four years from the opening of the work the little bands of believers were organized into a church and an Indian deacon was chosen the day the church was organized. Within two more years a district meeting was held at Jalalpor in which there were four Indian delegates to represent the three organized churches which had already been organized. Thus from the very beginning responsibilities were placed on the Indian Christians.

The need of medical work was early felt. India's sick and suffering multitudes pulled on the heartstrings of every missionary. In the early years when there was no doctor to help, the missionaries did what they could with the simple remedies at hand, using all the knowledge they had or could obtain. Missionaries shared bits of experience and knowledge with one another and thus help was given to many a sufferer.

During several of the early years famine was severe and much help was given to the starving people. Work projects were carried on so that the poor might earn money to buy food. Hundreds of orphans were gathered in, and from among these orphans came many of the later church leaders. Industrial training was begun.

It was to educate the orphan children that schools were first established. Later boarding schools became the successors to the orphanages. Very early, too, village schools were started. But in the beginning it was hard to get children into schools. Parents saw no need of educating their children. This was especially true of girls.

Through direct evangelism, through education, and through teaching the children how to work with their hands and thus be able to support themselves the mission endeavored to build an intelligent and responsible church.

Ministry to Social and Economic Needs

The Christian message is for all of life. From the very beginning the India mission recognized this and tried to help meet needs and problems of all kinds.

The missionaries went north to the Central Provinces and brought in the children who had no parents and no one to help them. About 1898, the place for the Bulsar mission compound was chosen and buildings were erected and the orphans who had been cared for in rented buildings were moved into the new buildings. School work was soon begun.

As early as 1908, widows were protected and helped by carrying on a widows' home, and more recently they have been given some financial help where needed while living in their own homes or with relatives.

Many helpless, motherless babies were cared for in a babies' home. These babies were taken from whatever class or religious group they might come. Relatives who later received back such children when they were old enough to eat ordinary food never forgot the loving care the children had been given.

Always in connection with this ministry to social and economic needs and along with all the relief that was administered, Christian teaching was given in daily prayers, Sunday-school classes, and attendance at church.

The distressed people of India were always at the mercy of the money lenders.

As early as 1908 a beginning was made in helping Christians who needed to borrow money by establishing Mutual Aid Societies. Christians who had money to loan put it into the society and those who needed to borrow did so at fair rates of interest. These Mutual Aid Societies were the fore-runners of the Co-operative Societies which hold an important place in the world today.

Later a plan was inaugurated to help poor Christians buy land. A land investment fund was set up to be used to purchase land. The mission held the deed to the land until the farmer could pay for it; and he was allowed to pay for it on easy terms. The plan is still being used, and many a Christian farmer has become economically independent in this way.

In the industrial departments of the boarding schools, and later in the Vocational Training School at Anklesvar, boys have been taught how to become better farmers. They have learned how to raise better poultry and other farm animals. A co-operative egg marketing project has enabled chicken raisers to sell their eggs at better prices. Some have learned carpentry and make this their vocation while others use it as a subsidiary industry. And today, this same interest and concern continues as plans are made for the future and for rural training centers.

It is evident that in facing the pressures which communism brings, much attention must be placed on helping the people to get the most out of the soil of their land. Rural training centers endeavor to teach the people to meet the needs of the entire community in all areas of life.

Steady Growth

During the last sixty years the work in India has shown a steady growth. Each year has brought added numbers into the church. It is true that many fell away. This was the case largely because it was not possible to provide the needed teaching and shepherding. But there were also many who remained faithful. In the meantime Indian leaders were being trained and began to take over an ever-increasing share of the work.

From time to time new churches were organized. The table shows the present churches with the dates of their organization and their present membership.

Stewardship

The giving of the church is increasing year by year. The over-all giving in 1951 was nearly $5,000. We rejoice in the growth but realize also that much more needs to be done to encourage self-support.

Recently one of the elders of the Indian church made the following statement: "The difficulties which face the Indian church in the way of self-support are: poverty and backwardness of the Christian community; too little knowledge and much indifference regarding church responsibilities."

The Future

The Church of the Brethren has been in India 60 years. During that time the church has grown until today it has a statistical membership of 9,220. These Christians worship in 25 organized congregations under the leadership of 33 Indian ministers. Along with evangelism our church leaders have carried an active Christian concern for the health, economic and educational welfare of the people they served. This has given rise to a great and varied expression of the Christian gospel in India.

In our times we have seen the church of India grow into maturity. With increasing rapidity she will move under her own leadership. She will make mistakes and she will have great achievements. But whatever she does, it will be as a mature Christian church seeking to serve the Master as He reveals the way.

As American Christians we are now her brothers and sisters in Christ—not big brothers and big sisters, but twin brothers and sisters. Together we will strive to become sons of God.

A Church and Home Mission Conference has been held by the National Christian Council of Ceylon. Reports indicate that crowds of three to five thousand people came night after night to hear the gospel and to make their declaration for Christ, at first in their tens but eventually in hundreds. Though the conference had been carefully planned such response was more than anyone expected.

A governmental commission has been established in Indonesia to study the multiplication of religious sects. Three-score groups have developed in mid-Java, most of them combining Islam and mysticism. They are a product of postwar frustrations, the reaching out of the common man for something closer to his life and its problems than the dogmas and liturgy of a past age.

The Peron government in Argentina has acted to tighten its control over religious education in the schools. The government's aim is apparently to weaken Roman Catholic church control over the appointment of religious teachers in public schools and to revise the educational program.

An all-night prayer vigil, training and practice in stewardship, opportunities for evangelism—these are part of the history of the Wichita church

Wichita Church Grows

EARLY in the last decade the Wichita church, Kansas, discovered that her facilities for worship and Christian education were far inadequate to meet the needs of a growing congregation. In addition to the normal growth of the congregation there were an increasing number of Brethren moving to the city. In 1942 a building committee was appointed and a building fund started. Vacant lots were purchased with the idea of building at such a time as circumstances permitted. In 1944 initial steps were taken to draw up plans and make definite preparation for construction. War priorities, however, delayed actual construction until 1949. In the meantime, the church went ahead raising money and developed blueprints as rapidly as possible.

The sod was broken and actual construction was begun the first of May, 1949. The old church was sold and the last service held in it on Christmas Sunday evening, 1949. The following New Year's Eve the church began a twelve-hour, all-night prayer vigil at 6:00 o'clock, closing at six on Sunday morning, Jan. 1, 1950. The first public service was held in the new church on that Sunday.

At the time of dedication a debt of $25,000 became the obligation of the congregation. This money had been borrowed from the General Brotherhood Board to be paid back over a period of twelve years. The total cost of the building, including equipment, was $102,000. However, with the help of faithful teaching and preaching on stewardship and tithing, and with a splendid response on the part of the members, the debt was completely liquidated in less than four years and the mortgage was burned on Sunday, May 24, 1953. This was an event looked forward to for some time. After the pastor spoke briefly on the progress which the church had made during the past recent years a beautiful candlelighting ceremony was used as the mortgage-burning service.

The church built a new parsonage, debt free, in 1947. In 1952 additional lots were purchased next to the church for future expansion when needed. The attendance has almost doubled in the past four years. Fifty or more new members are being added to the church each year. Sunday-school attendance exceeds 300 very frequently. Regular giving to the program of the church has made possible, not only the burning of the mortgage, but also more than doubling all of the benevolent giving. The church did not decrease her giving to any of the benevolent causes during the building program. No large amount is received from any one person, but regular and generous giving is manifested by a growing number. The self-denial offering during Lent of 1952 made possible the purchase of eleven goats for Korea at $50 each. A similar offering in 1953 provided more than $500 towards a scholarship for a Korean student to McPherson College in 1953. The field of evangelism in Wichita is limited only by the energy and willingness of the pastor and people of the congregation. When Jesus saw the multitudes he was moved with compassion. What do the unsaved multitudes do to us?

Effective Use of Conference Resolutions

Inasmuch as Annual Conference Resolutions represent many hours of thought, soul-searching and writing by some of the Brotherhood's most spiritually sensitive and gifted persons and often speak so eloquently and profoundly to the church regarding its nature and mission, including vital recommendations for the application of the gospel in many strategic areas, it is unfortunate that these Resolutions so often "die" in the Conference Minutes. Therefore, we the Westminster Church of the Brethren, through the district conference of Eastern Maryland, request the Annual Conference to assign to the General Brotherhood Board the responsibility of studying the matter and suggesting more effective means for distributing and using the Annual Conference Resolutions.

John H. Eberly, moderator.
H. Edgar Royer, clerk.

Answer of District Conference: Passed to Annual Conference.
Harold Z. Bomberger, moderator.

Study of Peace Position and Practices of the Church

Because the Church of the Brethren has long regarded itself as being one of the historic peace churches, and as being among the leaders in the matter of promoting brotherhood among men; and because such a position can be lost without vigorous spiritual and educational promotion we, the District Board of Eastern Maryland petition Annual Conference through district conference to make a study of the official position and practices of the church in its full ministry and education, in the field of peace and brotherhood and to bring its findings with recommendations to Annual Conference.

Raymon E. Eller, chairman.
Ralph E. White, secretary.

Answer of district conference: Passed to Annual Conference.
Harold Z. Bomberger, moderator.

Study of the Office of Deacon

The Flower Hill Church of the Brethren, in regular council on Sept. 7, 1954, voted unanimously to request the 1955 Annual Conference, through district conference of Eastern Maryland, to appoint a committee to give study to the office of deacon in the local church, with specific reference to the following:

(a) The term of office, whether for a term of years or for life.
(b) The status of the deacon's wife, whether she is a deaconess in her own right, and whether she continues in that office after the death of her husband.
(c) The election of deaconesses in their own right.
(d) The function and work of a deacon, a deacon's wife and a deaconess in the local church.
(e) Other problems related to the office and its work, which seem to need clarification or consideration.

A. Stauffer Curry, moderator.
Miriam Gloyd, clerk.

Answer of district conference: Passed to Annual Conference.
Harold Z. Bomberger, moderator.
Berkley O. Bowman, writing clerk.

Study of the Office of Deacon

The Elder's Body recommends to the district conference of Eastern Virginia that a request be made of Annual Conference that a committee of five (one from each region) be appointed to study the place and function of the office of deacon in the ministries of the local church. We ask that special attention be given to the matter of life tenure as against a definite stated tenure. We request that the results of this study be reported to the 1956 Annual Conference.

Answer of district conference: Passed to Annual Conference.

Reviews of Recent Books

Books are reviewed here as a service to the church. A review does not necessarily constitute an unqualified recommendation. Purchase can be made through the Brethren Publishing House, Elgin, Illinois. Titles recommended for church libraries are marked with an asterisk (*).—Editor.

Children's Sermons. Kenneth Brakely Welles. Westminster Press, 1954. 128 pages. $2.00.

Here are fifty eight brief children's sermons which are truly on the level of children's interest and problems for the most part. The contents are arranged in four parts—Sermons for All Occasions, Sermons on the Church and Worship, Sermons for Special Days and Seasons and Children's Stories for Informal Occasions.

Ministers and teachers will enjoy using this book. Since the author is Presbyterian, infant baptism is mentioned in several stories, and Brethren should adapt the stories to conform with Church of the Brethren beliefs and practices.—Dessie R. Miller.

Christmas Voices. P. O. Bersell. Augustana Book Concern, 1954. 83 pages. $1.50.

If you are weary of Christmas as it is popularly observed today and are interested in finding deeper meanings and more Christian expressions of it, you will enjoy this little book of twelve meditations on both the mystical and the practical significance of the day. Written by a Lutheran, these meditations naturally reflect some Christmas customs and some viewpoints not familiar to the Brethren. Reverent in spirit, conservative in viewpoint, and Christ centered in tone, they will help you recover the displaced Christ and place him in his rightful position.—Ora W. Garber.

Christian Hope and the Second Coming. Paul S. Minear. Westminster, 1954. 220 pages. $3.50.

In a year when the attention of all Christendom is focused on Christian hope it is fortunate to have a meaty, yet readable, book on that subject to turn to. Written by one of America's more stimulating Biblical writers, it is a book which every minister will want to purchase, read and ponder. Not all interpretations will appeal to every reader, but all readers will be challenged to think anew (or for the first time!) their own concept of Christian hope in general and that which centers around the second coming of Christ in particular. This reviewer had hoped that this book would prove to be a definite reference book in a field sadly neglected by many moderns but finds, instead, a yeasty and often inspiring discussion of many aspects of the Christian hope without quite the structure or convincing logic which should characterize such a treatment. Despite some tendency to allegorize and overspiritualize, the book is one which should make its impact on the thought of the spiritual leaders of our times. — Chalmer E. Faw, Chicago, Ill.

To Have and Not Hold. Jessica Lyon. Macrae Smith Co., 1954. 205 pages. $2.50.

Those readers who enjoyed the serial But the Bright Gold in Horzons will be eager to get this new novel by the same author. To Have and Not Hold is the story of an engaged couple rather than newlyweds, as was the serial, but it shows the same warm, understanding insight into the basic problems of human relations that characterized Bright Gold. This is a love story that portrays the destructive danger of jealousy. Anyone who loves another—and that includes us all—will be a better lover for having read To Have and Not Hold. This novel is highly recommended as leisure reading for mature teenagers and adults. — Vernard Eller.

Who Speaks For God? Gerald Kennedy. Abingdon 1954. 139 pages $2.50.

Under the title, Who Speaks For God? Gerald Kennedy discusses four issues: (1) Who Speaks for Persons? (2) Who Speaks for the Spiritual? (3) Who Speaks for Freedom? (4) Who Speaks for Hope? With his usual incisiveness and abundance of illustration, he penetrates and illumines some of the ultimate issues which must be faced in our time. A most helpful and provocative book. — Charles E. Zunkel.

BROTHER BONSACK

by H. Spenser Minnich

The above picture will call to your memory one who was known throughout the Brotherhood as "Brother Bonsack." This new book of biography by H. Spenser Minnich sketches briefly the background factors which met and merged in the life of Charles D. Bonsack, his early life and young adulthood, his family life, and his emergence into prominence, first locally and then more widely. The author at greater length summarizes and evaluates the services rendered by Brother Bonsack in his mature years and points out characteristics which combined to make him the powerful figure he was in the Church of the Brethren.

To many people, both Brethren and non-Brethren he is an uplifting memory, for their lives have been touched personally and in groups by that of Brother Bonsack. Through his more than two decades as Secretary of the General Mission Board and his wide travels both at home and abroad he became known in homes, local churches and Conferences.

The illustrations in the book were taken from line drawings done by an Indian member of the Church of the Brethren, Daulat Daniel, living in Bombay. They were made from photographs provided by the author, who for thirty-five years has been serving the church in the central offices at Elgin and who was for much of that period in close contact with Brother Bonsack. 128 pages. Beautiful jacket. Cloth. $1.75

District reports were given on Nov. 14. — Ruth N. Tvaroha, Ithaca, N. Y.

Richland—Several of our youth attended the National Youth Conference. On Oct. 31 we closed a series of meetings which were conducted by Elder Howard W. Bernhard of Mt. Joy, Pa. At our last council meeting Bro. Ray A. Kurtz was re-elected elder-in-charge for a three year term. We had our fall love feast on Oct. 3. Our chorus is under the direction of Bro. John Brightbill. The women's work group spend a day at various times sewing and mending at the Lebanon Good Samatarian hospital. Our men's work group had as one of their projects a Lord's Acre. Bro. Earl H. Kurtz of Elgin brought the morning message on Oct. 17. During the week of Oct. 10-17 the Richland Council of Churches sponsored a religious census in the community. On Sunday, Nov. 17 Sister Martha Martin of Elizabethtown, conducted our Bible institute. Relief materials have been gathered for shipment to New Windsor.—Michael Kurtz, Richland, Pa.

Spring Grove—A harvest meeting was held in the Kemper house with Elder Amos Heisey of the Springville congregation as speaker. One Sunday afternoon a number of our people worshiped with the folks at the Neffsville Brethren Home at which time our ministers were in charge of the service. Bro. Olen B. Landes of Harrisonburg, Va., preached at three services one week end. On Oct. 3 love feast was held at the Blue Ball church with Bro. Roy Hawbecker from the Back Creek congregation and Bro. Hiram Gingrich of the Annville congregation as visiting ministers. The young people conducted a 24-hour prayer vigil preceding the opening of our evangelistic meetings at the Blue Ball church. These meetings were held Oct. 10-24 with Elder Milton L. Hershey of the White Oak congregation as evangelist. During the meeting one person was received into the church by baptism.—Mary Esther Stoner, Lititz, Pa.

Middle Pennsylvania

Dunnings Creek—One Sunday Bro. Harrison Frantz in the interest of Bethany hospital brought the morning messages at all three churches. Our pastor Bro. E. E. Ebersole held harvest home services. Several of our women attended the women's work meeting at Camp Harmony. Five of our young people attended the National Youth Conference. We send relief clothing and soap to New Windsor. Bro. Jay Replogle of the Rummel congregation delivered the morning and afternoon messages at the Holsinger annual home-coming service. A two-week revival followed with J. Richard Gottshall as evangelist. At this time eight new members were baptized into the church. A worship service was held in the Old Mock church on Sept. 18. This is a log church and it was decided that we will restore the church to its original state as far as possible. In the absence of our pastor, Bro. G. L. Baker preached for us. Our young people attended the youth banquet in the Everett church. We sent four delegates to district meeting. Five of our members attended the men's work banquet at New Enterprise. Bro. Robert Jones and Bro. Raymond Gordon were in charge of the services in the absence of pastor. At our last council Bro. E. M. Detwiler was elected as elder for a three-year term.—Mrs. Robert Barefoot, Alum Bank, Pa.

Park View—During the past year our Sunday-school attendance has more than doubled. Eighteen persons have been baptized, and three have been received on confession of faith and former baptism. Following a two-week evangelistic service, fourteen new members were baptized into our fellowship. The young people sponsored a special Christmas program for the church. A special project was added for increase in giving to our building fund. In the past six months the young people have made a contribution of $100 to the building fund. Our pastor, Bro. Henry H. Moyer, has been with us for more than a year and will continue for an indefinite period.—Minda Tubbs, Lewistown, Pa.

Southern Pennsylvania

Hanover—Our children presented a program at the Brethren Home at Cross Keys. Our pastor and his wife, Brother and Sister Glen E. Norris, served as Annual Conference delegates. Bro. Joseph W. Kettering talked at one of our men's work services. The project for the Bible school was the purchase of a heifer for relief. We participated in the vesper services with the other churches of our own town during the summer. Dieter Phillip, an exchange student, is living in the home of our pastor for this school year. On Sept. 12 Dr. Roy E. Pfaltzgraff talked at our morning service. At the evening service, he showed pictures of the work on the African mission field. Four of our young people attended the National Youth Conference. The Chiques quartet sang at the September men's work service. Bro. Robert Young of Elizabethtown was guest speaker for our Rally Day service. An area CBYF rally was held in our church with Bro. Robert Turner of York as speaker. Bro. Elmer B. Hoover conducted our evangelistic meetings in October, closing with communion services on Sunday evening. Eight were received by baptism and one by letter into our fellowship. A number of our people attended district meeting at Huntsdale, Pa. —Mrs. Horace E. Walker, Hanover, Pa.

Western Pennsylvania

Connellsville—Our pastor, E. M. Hertzler, conducted the installation service for the new officers and teachers. Our love feast and communion was held Oct. 3. Six babies were dedicated at the morning service. Bro. Austin Cooper of the Brothersvalley church, Berlin, Pa., was our guest speaker Oct. 17-24. One was baptized and three received by letter into our fellowship. Our fall fellowship dinner was held in September. The filmstrip, Unto These, My Brethren, was shown. Our quarterly council meeting was held Nov. 9. Three of our young people attended the National Youth Conference, with our pastor, E. M. Hertzler. We began a children's church on Oct. 10 with Mrs. Hertzler in charge. The union Thanksgiving service was held in our church.—Charles R. Filburn, Connellsville, Pa.

Johnstown, Walnut Grove—At the fall council meeting, Bro. William Gould was elected as presiding elder. Love feast service was observed Oct. 3. During the past year forty-seven have been baptized and nineteen received by letter into our church fellowship. An extensive remodeling program is in progress in our church building. During the year consecration services were conducted for thirty-seven babies. On Sunday, Sept. 26 Velva Jane Dick showed pictures of Africa. Brother and Sister Clarence Heckman were with us Sunday, Nov. 14 and talked concerning their work in Africa. Bro. Heckman is supported on the mission field by our church and Sister Dick is supported partially by the Good Samaritan Bible class. Our annual harvest home day was held Oct. 17. The union Thanksgiving service was held at the Beulah E.U.B. church.—Emelia Gran Strayer, Johnstown, Pa.

Scalp Level—An installation service and a reception was held on the evening of Sept. 5 for our new pastor, Bro. Raymond R. Boose, and his family. Brother and Sister Charles Bieber and children were with us for a dinner and evening service in September. Sister Bieber is supported on the African mission field by our church. Our pastor was speaker for the spiritual emphasis services which were held each night during the week preceding our communion and love feast service on Oct. 3. Messages by representatives of our children, youth and adult departments featured our evening service on Laymen's Day. Our harvest home service was observed Nov. 7 with the offerings from this service being given to the Old Folks Home. We held our annual building fund bazaar on Nov. 9. Rev. Lynn Jenkins, pastor of the E.U.B. church, was speaker for the union Thanksgiving service which was held in our church the evening of Nov. 24. Our elder, Bro. G. E. Yoder, who was seriously injured in an automobile accident, has returned to his home after a three-month stay in the hospital. Our ladies aid meets every Wednesday for an all-day quilting meeting. They also supervise the collecting and packing of relief materials.—Mrs. A. J. Casseday, Windber, Pa.

Eastern Maryland

Baltimore, First—On Oct. 14 the women of our church visited the Fahrney-Keedy Memorial Home and took gifts of staple foods. Our children's department also visited the home on Oct. 23 and gave a program. The music guild sponsored a Halloween party for the junior choir. On Nov. 12 our annual father and son banquet was held in the fellowship hall. About forty people from our church attended the district men's work fellowship dinner at the University Park church. Eight babies were dedicated on Nov. 14 at our dedication service for children and parents. A Bible institute was held at our church Nov. 25-28 with Bro. William M. Beahm, dean of Bethany Seminary, as guest speaker.—Helen A. Vance, Baltimore, Md.

Dundalk—During the past year our church has received sixteen members by letter and nineteen members by baptism. Our pastor, Bro. Eller, has conducted three classes in church membership. At present a class for children who wish to unite with the church is being conducted. Five babies have been dedicated as a part of our family services. A series of family nights have been planned. During the mother-daughter dinner, a young German exchange student from the University of Maryland was guest speaker. Guest speaker for the father and son dinner was Joshua Wheeler, principal of a near-by high school. The Sunday school has organized a junior department and services are held in the fellowship hall. The women's work group visited the Fahrney-Keedy Memorial Home and took gifts to the residents. They provide The Upper Room devotion booklet for all who care to use them. The CBYF sponsored a skating party and sold Christmas candies. Our church was host to the district conference. We cooperated in a community leadership training school. Bro. Samuel Harley of Indiana held a one-week revival meeting in our church. As a result three persons were baptized and seven reconsecrated to our church.—Mrs. Robert Bennett, Baltimore, Md.

Washington City—Our church served a dinner to the exchange students who had been in Brethren homes during the past year and were returning to their own homes. The women's council presented a program at the Fahrney-Keedy Memorial home at Boonsboro, Md. Nine young people and our pastor and his wife, Brother and Sister Duane H. Ramsey, attended the National Youth Conference. Our church sponsored a dinner for the Sunday-school teachers and officers in appreciation for their service to the church. Delegates to district meeting were Mrs. Frank A. Jordan, Alfred P. Smith, Bro. Harold S. Moyer, and Brother and Sister Ramsey. Our fall communion service was held on World Communion Sunday. We also had a special communion service for children who are six years of age and older but who are not yet members of the church. The children's communion has been observed for a number of years in our church. On Sunday morning, Oct. 17, Bro. A. Stauffer Curry, who represented our denomination as an accredited visitor at the World Council Assembly in Evanston, Ill., shared with us a message from the World Council of Churches. The movies, City Story and Rim of the Wheel, have been shown in our church. At our adult forum on Nov. 7, Bro. John C. Middlekauff, pastor of the Huntingdon church, Pa., showed slides and talked concerning his trip to the Holy Land. Nov. 14 was Stewardship Sunday in our church. At the morning worship hour about seventy persons were consecrated in a special service for an every member canvass which took place that afternoon. Since our last report ten babies have been consecrated, six persons baptized and twelve received by letter.—Mrs. Danny Dalyai, Washington, D. C.

Welsh Run—We held our love feast on Nov. 6 with Bro. D. I. Pepple officiating. On Sunday morning Bro. Michael Lovell taught the Sunday-school lesson for the entire school and Bro. Pepple delivered the morning message. On Thanksgiving Day Bro. Carl Valentine of the Marsh Creek congregation was with us. A special offering was received at this time for foreign missions.—John D. Martin, Mercersburg, Pa.

Tennessee

French Broad—Our new pastor and his wife, Brother and Sister Glenn W. Petcher, came to us the first of September to take the place of Bro. Paul R. White who accepted pastoral duties at Winston-Salem, N. C. We had our annual family night in the basement of the parsonage with a pot luck supper and a short program. Church officers for the coming year were elected at our September council meeting. Our fall communion service was observed on Oct. 2. The men and women of the district met with us Oct. 30 in an all-day meeting at the church. We are having a full program with Sunday school and preaching every Sunday morning and preaching every Sunday night. — Shelby Williford, Dandridge, Tenn.

Johnson City—At our regular council meeting in September, Bro. Roy White was re-elected elder. Sunday-school and church officers were also elected for the new year. We observed family night Sept. 24 with a covered dish supper which was followed by a program. Bro. Floyd Biddix of Orlando, Fla., conducted our evangelistic services in October. Since our last report two new members have been baptized into our church. We have purchased a new piano for the sanctuary. —Mrs. Shirley Street, Johnson City, Tenn.

First Virginia

Oak Grove—The installation service for our new pastor, Bro. John E. Sayre, was conducted by our elder, S. Earl Mitchell. Our pastor recently closed a two-week revival service. As a result of these meetings, two persons were received into our fellowship. Four of our young people attended the National Youth Conference. Our former pastor, Bro. Paul B. Sanger and the undersigned served as delegates to Annual Conference. The men's work has made some improvements to the church and the church grounds. The ladies' aid is quilting. We held our autumn love feast on Nov. 14 with our pastor officiating. Our Thanksgiving services were held in cooperation with the two Cave Spring churches. Our young people went caroling on Christmas Eve.—W. K. Coffman, Roanoke, Va.

Northern Virginia

District Meeting—Bro. Paul H. Bowman served as moderator for the conference which met in the Mountain Grove church. Bro. Robert L. Sherfy, pastor of the Harrisonburg church, was elected moderator for next year's conference which is scheduled to be held in the Mt. Zion congregation. District representatives on the Standing Committee for the 1955 Annual Conference are Hollen H. Helbert, Joseph M. Mason and I. C. Senger. Bro. M. R. Zigler was guest speaker for our conference. The district approved the division of Lower Lost River congregation to form two congregations and named for the two churches in the old congregation—Mountain View east of Lost River and New Dale west of Lost River. We now have twenty-eight congregations in our district.—J. Galen Wampler, Linville, Va.

Second Virginia

Sangersville—Several of our women attended the district women's work meeting at the Little River church. Our church joined in observing World-wide Communion Sunday. For the coming year our church will have a 100% Messenger Club. Our men's work joined with the Emanuel and Briery Branch men in a Lord's Acre project. Our Sunday school held election of new officers for the coming year. On Nov. 7 an area conference was held at our church. — Mrs. Victor M. Click, Bridgewater, Va.

Southern Virginia

Red Hill—Bro. Carl Spangler found it necessary to resign as our pastor because of ill health. Bro. Frank Layman of Troutville has begun his pastoral duties in our church. Bro. Ernest Wampler of Bridgewater conducted a week of revival meeting in our church, Nov. 1-8.—Mrs. W. J. Cornelissen, Boones Mill, Va.

First West Virginia

Knobley—Our church is progressing under the leadership of our new pastor, Bro. Owen Stultz. Vacation Bible school was held in connection with our revival services under the direction of our former pastor, Norman Harsh. Six of our young people attended camp at Camp Galilee during the summer. The ladies' aid is remodeling the church kitchen. Our Sunday-school attendance is growing. Layman's Sunday was observed on Nov. 21.—Mrs. Effie L. Whittaker, Antioch, W. Va.

This book should have the special attention of the parents of Brethren Families for it is the only book available, giving in pictures and story the historical setting of the founding of the Church of the Brethren in 1708. The pictures are modern with the story covering two hundred and forty-six years.

Published for children, youth, and adults, with enough detail to hold the interest of all. This is really an every Brethren family essential. You will enjoy this book for winter reading and reflection.—M. R. Zigler. $1.75 postpaid

Answers for Their Questions

PERHAPS this picture of a Sunday morning youth class is not typical of every church school but it has much to commend it. We like the idea of a big table where books and lesson quarterlies and Bibles can be consulted, also the ever-helpful blackboard as a means of following the discussion. In addition to the teacher who usually guides this class, the superintendent—or is it the pastor?—offers a helping hand. But more significant are the signs of interest and inquiry in the teen-agers themselves—especially the gesture of the girl who seems to be scratching her head. Thank God for all head scratchers who bring their honest questions with them on Sunday morning. If a church is dedicated to its teaching ministry, it will train leaders and spend money and use the best materials for its inquisitive children and youth. They need the best answers the church can give to their questions and its solutions for their problems.

READERS WRITE . . . to the editor

The Gospel Messenger welcomes letters commenting on editorials, articles and news. Letters should be brief and brotherly.

A Mighty Force

I love the Pietistic movement. I revere its history. I admire its attitudes. I respect its interests. I value its achievements. I confirm its convictions. Humbly, courageously, from a deep-seated and firmly rooted conviction I gladly proclaim from the mountaintops and from the valleys its right to continue in building and expanding the kingdom of our Eternal God.

Denominationalism may not be the only answer to the Christian movement, but it certainly has been a "mighty force" in propagating the faith, the attitudes, the concerns and the ideals of the Lord of Hosts.

Presbyterianism is good for Presbyterians; Lutheranism is good for Lutherans; Methodism is good for Methodists; Pietism is good for "Dunkards," and we of the Church of the Brethren are legitimate offsprings of this courageous and splendid and glorious movement.

"Dunkers," "Tunkers," or "Dunkards" are good terms. They have a rich meaning. They are words of endearment, of heartaches, of golden memories, of eternal hope, of dreams magnificent and of the fullness of Christian conduct and efforts. No one ever needs to be put to shame by these appellations or nicknames of the Pietistic groups and their descendants.

"Feetwashers," "mutton eaters," "odd and peculiar" people are they? We ought to be glad in our hearts that our spiritual ancestors left such an amazing and lasting impression upon people in whose midst they lived. I only wish that we could do half as well.

I am happy when I am privileged to enjoy the whole communion service: the washing of the feet of a brother for humility, for cleansing, for repentance (who does not need these?); the eating together by the high and of the low of the feast of Christian love for fellowship, for unity, for poise, for reflection, for continued guidance, for strength; the distribution of the "holy elements" symbolizing the broken body and the outpoured blood for doomed, sin-cursed, lost humanity. We need a revival of this eternal Christian doctrine: man is lost without the Lord. Only the Lord of glory redeems. "How shall we escape if we neglect so great a salvation?" (Heb. 2: 3).

I am not interested in bigotry or prejudice or antagonism or controversy, but let's go forward, onward and upward in the world's greatest channel — the church of the Lord and the Church of the Brethren.— John H. Clawson, Robinson, Pa.

Only Hope

The article in the Messenger on "The Way to Peace" by Martin Niemoeller was one of the most uplifting and inspiring articles you have published. Except for disagreeing with his statement on the New Testament not saying much on the danger of doing something bad, I felt like saying amen in several places. Christ is the only hope for the world and the only way to lasting peace.—Mrs. H. G. Snyder, Parsons, Kansas.

Will They Be Free to Speak?

The announcement about our ministers getting Social Security gives me great concern. They don't seem to feel free now to speak of our governments in harmony with Jesus' teaching. If they were getting money from the government they would feel far less free! The Brethren church must not tie its hands by moving along with a government that is piling up bombs that can destroy God's wonderful world!

The Pope last Easter spoke strongly against the H-bomb and how Christians were duty bound to do something about it. The Protestant ministers of Europe thought the Pope had gone too far and asked if he hadn't said things as certain or very probable that were not certain or very probable? This caused Pastor Martin Niemoller to call a conference with their leading scientists and Prof. Halan's answer was, "He has not exaggerated. It is no real problem today to build a bomb which on going off will make the whole surface of our planet uninhabitable for any human being."

Niemoller has suffered more for his convictions than any of us. We had better hear his appeal to the church, and not lessen our usefulness by depending on the government for money. Our pastors have hospitalization and old age assistance. Won't that care for them? They hadn't any of this in the past.

If it ever was necessary to be free to speak the truth it is now.— Margaret E. Bixler, New Windsor, Md.

The church is not fulfilling its divine calling if it remains a walled-in compound, ministering only to those within and fails to move out into the slums of our cities and rural areas, among the poor and downtrodden, the social and racial minorities, the skeptics and unbelievers

CHOSEN for What?

T. O. Wedel

BLESSED be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who has blessed us in Christ with every spiritual blessing in the heavenly places, even as he chose us in him before the foundation of the world."

I have visited the Grand Canyon of the Colorado River, and gazed in awe upon the drama of the geological history of our planet earth. The rocks at the bottom of the canyon, so our scientists tell us, are at least a billion five hundred million years old. The place where the visitor stands has been under the ocean seven times. Let the observer, in addition, look up into the starry heavens, shining clear in that desert air, and contemplate his littleness in comparison with those gigantic galaxies of fire, and he may well paraphrase the psalmist's cry: "What is man that this abyss of unimaginable time and this ocean of space should be mindful of him?"

Yet we who know the God of heaven and earth as the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ can reply: "Before the mountains were brought forth, or even earth was formed," their creator had us in mind. We are those predestined before the foundations of the world to be God's sons and to reign with Christ in glory everlasting. All space and time are but the setting for our appearing.

Canon, Washington Cathedral, and Warden, College of Preachers, Protestant Episcopal Church

But dangers lurk in the church's confession of her greatness in the sight of God and of eternity. We are, indeed, God's people, "a chosen race, a royal priesthood" (I Peter 2:9). But woe unto us if we enjoy our citizenship in heaven as if we had earned it. Are we worth all this divine love and the promise of eternal life? "Chosen before the foundation of the world"—these are breath-taking words. But chosen for what? To enjoy our salvation and our comforts in the gospel behind closed doors, our worship shrines safe hiding places from the world, a world given over to God's wrath and ultimate destruction? The privilege of sanctuary is, indeed, not denied us. Can there be a more compelling witness to the gospel, in lands far and near, than islands of God's peace, of faith, hope and charity, in the midst of a strife-torn world? The community of faith, indwelt by the powers of the Holy Spirit, must be the primary evangelizing agent calling to all who labor and are heavy laden: "Come and see."

And yet can our response to God's election end there? Let us have the witness of the sanctuary of God's peace by all means, with gates ajar for all who will enter. The voice of judgment, however, meets us even here. Are our doors really open—no color bar, full welcome for the repentant publican and harlot, no entrance requirement of respectability or of the good works of the pharisee before we permit the convert to enter? The prospect of the Lord coming in judgment may well frighten many of us who are at ease in Zion in our comfortable assemblies, for that judgment will, as the New Testament warns us, begin with the household of God itself.

Nor will the voice of divine judgment pause at this call to repentance. It will ask us to consider on an even deeper level still the question about our election as the people of God. Elected for what? To be merely islands of the saved in the midst of the lost? We are included in this "we, the elect" Did Christ die only for us or those who may perchance find us attractive enough to present themselves for church membership at our doors? Are we an aristocracy among the future citizens of heaven? Are we not instead custodians of an election meant for every son of man? "Go therefore and make disciples of all nations" (Matt. 28:19), is our Lord's command. The church is an evangelizing army on the march and a haven of rest only between campaigns when it returns to home base to renew its strength and to receive fresh orders. We have no right to our Sabbath ease and our promised end before the gospel will have been preached throughout the world.

Would I be wrong, however, in suggesting that such a doctrine of election comes to us still as a shock and a surprise, though it is writ large in our Bibles? Some of us, at least in our safely harbored churches, have resembled a family enjoying a rich inheritance on an ancestral estate. It was ours, we supposed, to cultivate and to make a model for neighboring households. We thought we were obeying the demands of the original title deeds and the noble traditions handed down to us by our fathers when we opened our doors to the sojourner and the stranger, when we were given to hospitality and charitableness and when we answered calls for aid from distant areas. But then, like a stroke of lightning out of a clear sky, we learn that our ancestral estate is not ours at all. We have been occupying public domain. We had misread our title deeds. We may not be turned out of our ancestral home, but we are now permitted residence only as custodians of a communal inheritance. Our aristocratic privileges, even those of generous condecension and sharing are taken from us. Ours is now the sole vocation of carrying to the poorest citizen of the land the good news of his rightful share in the inheritance once thought to be ours alone.

Apply the little parable to our churches of comfort and ease and it can lead to a searching of hearts. Every chiseled stone in our Gothic shrines, every carving on our pews, every cushioned parish house stands under judgment if it is not serving the apostolic calling of the church—a church on a mission sent. Every human soul over the face of the globe has as much right in the gospel as we have.

To pay lip service to the cause of evangelism is easy. To be generous with an occasional gift on a missionary Sunday or to

A Hymn of Evangelism

May be sung to tune St. Peter, Brethren Hymnal No. 387

EDWARD K. ZIEGLER

Thy Spirit on thy church, O Lord,
Send forth in flame and power,
That we may go with glowing word
To win men in this hour.

Our brothers cry to thee, O Lord,
In hunger, fear and need;
Thy saving grace and truth afford
As we their spirits feed.

Come, Holy Spirit, Wind of God,
Breathe strength into our souls;
We follow where our Christ has trod,
To reach his kingdom's goals.

Then fill our hearts with pow'r, O Lord,
Our hands with pity move,
That Christ and we in sweet accord
May win men to thy love.
Amen.

Released Time or Full Time?

THE HEADLINE caught our attention. "Released-time program launched in Nazareth." As we read on we realized, of course, that Nazareth was in Pennsylvania and the released-time program was a plan for giving week-day religious instruction to children there.

Then we tried to imagine what kind of religious training there might have been in Nazareth in Galilee more than nineteen hundred years ago. Did the local ministerium petition the Nazareth school board to excuse children from school a little early so that they could meet in the synagogue to learn the law and the prophets? Or did Mary ever have to argue with Joseph over the importance of releasing Jesus from duties in their carpenter shop in order to allow time for learning what every Hebrew boy should know?

Although no school at Nazareth is mentioned in the gospels there were elementary schools in Palestine at that time. They were primarily religious schools, often conducted in the synagogue by a rabbi. It is evident that Jesus was especially well trained as a boy, also that he was recognized as a teacher. But neither his own education nor his training of others was relegated to "released time." It was rather a full-time occupation, demanding first claim on the lives of the young.

In the home of Jesus and in other Hebrew homes, basic religious instruction was the responsibility of parents. If any special credit is due for the understanding Jesus revealed as a boy of twelve, the recognition should probably go to Mary and Joseph. It was part of the Jewish tradition to pass on knowledge of the law from father to son. The home was primary and central in their system of religious education.

It is also central today. Public school instruction has departed so far from specific religious training that such training must be given on "released time." In this connection the failure of the home becomes more apparent. Too many parents shirk their responsibility for so living and teaching their faith that it becomes a daily ingredient in the family menu and a recurring theme in family conversation. Church school classes, vacation schools and weekday schools have their place—an urgently needed place—but no one can substitute for what happens—or fails to happen—in family experiences.

Home life in Nazareth likely had many limitations, according to current standards; but look what one devout Jewish home produced. Let's help more of our own Christian homes to put religious training where it belongs—not merely on released time but as the full-time responsibility of parents, pastors, counselors, school and church school teachers.—K.M.

A Fellowship That Forgives

TWO YOUNG vandals, one eight years old and one twelve, broke into a Chicago church by entering a basement window. Inside the church they destroyed chairs and church furnishings, took food from the church kitchen and threw it on pews and the organ. Much of the camping equipment belonging to the Cub Scout pack of Grace Church was damaged.

The two boys were seized the next day. The church agreed to drop charges when their fathers offered to pay for the damage. Then the father of the eight-year-old wrote to the pastor, asking if his son could be allowed to join the scouts. Were the boys willing to take him in? They welcomed him into their pack. Their pastor said, "What started out to be a very bad experience turned out fine after all."

Almost every day's newspaper carries stories of vandalism, robbery and destruction—stories that many church people pass over lightly unless they involve someone they know. So often they result in boys or girls being sent to detention homes, industrial schools or even to spend several days in a county prison. Not often enough are they invited to become a part of a fellowship that practices forgiveness—as did the Cub Scouts of Grace Church.

Yet the spirit shown by the cubs is exactly the spirit that ought to prevail in our churches. When one of our members becomes seriously ill, we put arms of encouragement around that member, we pray earnestly for his recovery, we comfort and sustain the members of his family. This is as it should be, and through such bearing of one another's burdens God works wonderful miracles of healing in our midst.

But somehow we are not as considerate of a brother who makes a mistake. Instead of seeking to restore him through forgiveness and rehabilitation, we are tempted to gossip about his failures. We describe his errors in detail, sometimes with obvious relish, as if to bolster up our own decency by emphasizing the indecency of those who fall by the way. We are often cruel when we should be most understanding, condemning when we should forgive and forget. Should not Christians labor as earnestly in prayer for a prodigal son as for one who is physically ill?—K.M.

A LOOK AT LEADERSHIP TRAINING

C. Ernest Davis

FIRST, let us recognize that a leader is not necessarily one who stands up in front and does all the talking. Leadership in a group may shift from time to time as different members, for the moment, become the ones who direct activities in an area in which they are capable or in which they have a special concern. If you have been scared of the term leader because you thought of it in terms of domination or prominence which you did not care for, relax; concepts of leadership have changed much from that pattern. Leaders are guides and directors, not just haranguing bosses or goose-stepping top brass. They are friendly helpers and fellow seekers after truth and constructive experience. Being a leader is not going to take you out of the fellowship of the group.

Second, let us admit that training is not the best word in the world. It is, however, one that is widely used in this connection and does have some points in its favor. Let's not stop to argue about terminology, but get down to the substance of the situation.

The truth of the matter is that church workers of all kinds need training. How can a person be an usher, a janitor, a choir director, a member of the ministerial committee, a church clerk, a treasurer, a Sunday-school superintendent, a teacher, or anything else if he does not know what to do? Of course, we already know some things when we are selected for a church job; we may even have some knowledge about the particular work to be done because of our observation of others through the years; but, in many instances, we ought to have additional instruction. In all too many cases, important work is being poorly done because the church has failed to provide leadership training opportunities.

There is considerable literature available to help workers in various church positions. Sometime ago a Preliminary Catalog of Guidance Materials was issued to let people have a better idea of what is available as helps. Generally speaking, we do not have to remain ignorant because nothing has been written about the subject.

However, the church should take the initiative in defining the work to be done, in supplying helpful literature, in organizing classes, in providing supervision and in doing other things that will provide both pre-service and in-service training. Some of this will be informal in character. Training conferences, observational opportunities, workers' conferences, etc., can be very helpful and all such possibilities should be used.

The Standard Leadership training classes and schools are a formal training program for church school workers and offer a wide variety of helpful courses. One ought also to be aware of the excellent training facilities offered in district and regional laboratory training schools where the formal, informal and practical are all joined into probably our most effective training instrument.

It is my particular job to supervise the Standard Leadership curriculum in our church and I will devote major attention to it in this article. This curriculum is a co-operative enterprise. I serve on the Committee on Administration and Leadership of the Division of Christian Education of the National Council of Churches. This committee has subcommittees on curriculum and the textbooks. I serve on the latter. The curriculum and the textbooks are both under constant scrutiny and review. A new guide is brought out every two years so as to keep the program as nearly up-to-date as possible. The present one is entitled Leadership Education Handbook and sells for 65 cents. It covers First and Second Series Courses in detail and also contains the information formerly presented in a Manual for Deans. Thus, the Handbook combines in one handy booklet the information that was once presented in three separate publications: Bulletins 501 and 502 and the Manual for Deans.

There are seven main divisions or groups in the standard curriculum:

I. General Courses
   1. Religion in Personal and Social Life
   2. The Bible
   3. The Church
   4. Psychology and Method for Church Leaders
   5. Missionary Education

II. Children's Division Courses
   1. Divisional Courses
   2. Nursery Department Courses
   3. Kindergarten Courses
   4. Primary Department Courses
   5. Junior Department Courses

III. Youth Division Courses
   1. Divisional Courses
   2. Intermediate (Junior High) Department Courses
   3. Senior (Senior High) Department Courses
   4. Older Youth Department Courses

IV. Adult Division Courses
   1. Divisional Courses
   2. Christian Family Courses

V. Leadership Development Courses

VI. Administration Courses

VII. Field Work Courses

In many of these subsections, there is a wealth of material. In the Bible section, for example, six specific courses are listed on a First Series level and eight on a Second Series level. The leadership Education Handbook gives the number, name, description and approved textbooks for each course in the entire curriculum.

In a First Series course, at least five hours are spent in class and an equal amount of time in outside study. The minimum requirement in Second Series is double that: ten hours in class and an equivalent amount of time in outside preparation. First Series courses are simpler, but cover the same general ground as Second Series courses.

There are exact regulations governing the accreditation of a class or school and the certification of instructors. Full details are provided in the Educational Handbook and in a free leaflet which we have sent to pastors and superintendents and will send you on request. Many people are of the opinion that one must be a college or seminary graduate in order to qualify as an instructor. Such is not the case. One needs only to have some competency in the subject and be willing to work out plans for presenting the course. Leader's guides are available for many of the courses and these help the instructor organize and conduct his course. Even small churches can do something with this program. My office is always willing to help you in these matters.

Do we need it? Yes, indeed. Many superintendents still carry on a school almost exactly in a pattern well over a century old and leave the teachers about thirty minutes for their class activities. Many teachers do not know that the story of Noah's Ark is not a lovely kindergarten tale, but an adult story that, if actually told to a kindergarten child, could worry him half to death. Many parents do not know that in the newer curriculum trends there are home-study books for pupils that guide the family activities in connection with the child's church school class work. But we can not expect better performance unless we give training. The resource materials are available. Let's use them. The Christian Education Commission of the General Brotherhood Board wants to help you meet your leadership training problems.

Is It Too Much?

MARY E. BROUGHER

Is it too much to pray that sometime
This weary world might dwell in peace,
That we would hearken to our Lord's commandments,
That love could reign and war could cease?

Is it too much to learn that somewhere
God's children must accept his plan,
That nation must co-operate with nation,
And man must trust his fellow man?

Is it too much to hope, that somehow
Our hardened hate might melt away,
That we could beat our heavy swords to plowshares,
And herald in a brighter day.

VACATION CHURCH SCHOOL Opens Doors

Dessie R. Miller

Bill Smith

Vacation church schools are increasing in number but still many churches miss this unique opportunity to open doors for better teaching, reaching new members and strengthening the church

FRANK and Jean Keller sat beside a clear mountain stream eating their picnic lunch. They could look out over the broad, beautiful valley dotted with homes and back on the hill at the church strategically located so that people from the hills could reach it also. Why did they not come? Today had been disappointing. Only three families had been represented at the morning service. This was a poor beginning for their first summer pastorate.

"You know," Frank said after a long silence, "I have been wondering about vacation church school. If we have something definite in mind it will be easier to go calling and invite the children to come. We can also learn to know our community and perhaps work with some of the people who have been teaching children in this church in the past. I know we thought we would wait until in the summer to start a school but I believe that it will be better strategy to work out definite plans now. I am surely glad that we attended training conference at Manchester College and have our texts."

Thus the planning began and the two became excited as they worked out details. Instead of calling as they had intended on that warm June afternoon they planned their next procedures step by step. What was the result? we cannot share all the details but suppose we look in on an evaluation session some weeks later. Frank and Jean had completed a successful two-week vacation church school with an average attendance of sixty children.

"The school was a wonderful idea, Jean, because we learned so much and through it many doors were open for the work here during the rest of the summer."

"Yes," Jean agreed. "I surely want to work on the music. I never dreamed that good people could have such limited insights and appreciation for church music. The teacher-training day we had with our workers was immensely worth while too. Mrs. Martin told me that in the future she would work with children with more understanding. I really thought she did a rather good job with her juniors, didn't you?"

"Yes," agreed Frank. "But I saw need for more training. Take the primary teacher, for example. She believed in pouring in and there was no opportunity for participation on the part of the children. It is a wonder that they didn't rebel more than they did."

"Well, I am glad that the teachers want to continue having some meetings. We can discuss methods and ideas concerning teaching. I believe that it would be a good idea to get the church-and-the-children audio-visual kit and use some of those filmstrips. They would give us a good basis for discussing some of the needs here."

"The thing that concerns me," said Frank thoughtfully, "is the ongoing program for children and young people in this community. We have had this successful two-week program in vacation church school and they have responded enthusiastically. Oh, yes, we had to visit homes and do a lot of publicity and promotion, but the children came even when their parents were extremely busy at home with canning and making hay. We need some through-the-week activity for the rest of the summer."

"I know what I would like," Jean said enthusiastically, "a day camp for several days each week for a month or two. It wouldn't be at all like vacation church school and we could get across some concepts which we know are needed."

Thus the vacation church school led into other activities for children and young people in this community. At the close of the summer Frank and Jean insisted that their success in this first summer pastorate was largely due to the open doors they discovered through their vacation church school experience.

Their experience could be and has been repeated throughout the Brotherhood. Sometimes workers are not aware of open doors even when they exist. Sometimes they are too busy to plan a vacation church school but when you look at statistics of growth in vacation church school work in the Church of the Brethren during the past five years they are encouraging. In 1949 there were 14,341 pupils enrolled, according to reports that came to the national office. During that year $5,413.35 was given in projects. In 1950 there was an increase in enrollment of 5,279. This record of increase, 5,000 or more, was maintained through 1951, 1952 and 1953; the total enrollment in 1953 was 38,382. The increase in 1954 has not been quite so large but it is still an encouraging evidence of growth. In 1954 there was a total of 40,731 pupils reported. Of this number 22,384 were from the Church of the Brethren and 18,374 from other denominational groups or were unchurched community children.

It is encouraging also to note that more schools are using acceptable curriculum material. In 1954 there was a total of 463 schools reported. Of this number 318 used either Co-operative or Judson texts which are recommended for use in our schools; 58 used texts from other denominations and 73 used nondenominational materials. Childen's workers who evaluate carefully are inclined to be especially critical of nondenominational materials.

Projects have been quite varied in vacation church schools. In 1954 a total of $19,173.55 was reported for projects. The reports offer brief glimpses concerning what the projects may mean in influencing the attitudes of children concerning the program of the Church of the Brethren and their part in its future development. From one of the reports we had this statement, for example, "Had heifer at church for the short dedication service. The audience stood around the heifer, which the children had bought, and sang a hymn." Another said, "We made a globe of the world and followed the missionaries to their station."

In a congregation where they are building a new church they used the church theme of 1954 and built a copy of the new church out of cardboard and paper. The children made stained glass windows of colored

Vacation church schools can open the door to other opportunities for using the summer months, such as day camps, clubs and story hours paper. In one situation they reported that an eighty-year-old lady from the Brethren Home had told the children about the beginning of the church. The money projects included many missionary gifts, help for Indian and migrant children, contributions for home, church and community needs. Some of the projects are within the Brotherhood Fund and others are not. It is evident that some children's workers use projects as a means of interpreting the Brotherhood program to children.

Having a common theme for vacation church school is a definite advantage. This was first started with the fiftieth anniversary celebration in 1949. Several years following that we promoted a Brotherhood theme and in 1954 the theme was planned interdenominationally again. It is expected that this pattern will continue. The theme for schools in 1955 will be Personal and Group Relationships, with emphasis on Christian behavior. The texts, of course, will center on the teachings of Jesus There will be a new set of books from the Judson Press and there are excellent books from the Co-operative Series. It is expected that interdenominational groups will use the new children's work audio-visual filmstrip in their training sessions this spring. This kit of filmstrips is similar to the leadership education kit and has been developed by the Committee of Children's Work of the National Council.

What does the future hold for vacation church schools in the Church of the Brethren? We can never predict with certainty. We can only hope that a growing awareness of the importance of the childhood years will never be lost. Secular agencies and even the public schools are all bidding for time in summer and many kinds of programs are offered. The church may need to double her efforts and make the program for children especially vital in order to maintain the right to use a part of the summer for Christian teaching.

There are some churches in the Brotherhood which do not make use of the summer opportunity. It is hoped that there will continue to be more vacation church schools and longer ones. The tendency to cut them down to one week or to have them at night is not a good move in terms of the amount of time and the values which children get from continuity. Night schools are much like hurried Sunday-school sessions because they are necessarily shorter and children are often tired.

Here is hoping that the future holds a great expansion of summer experiences including day camping, club work and story hours. Vacation church school opens the door. We let the children down if we fail to use other ways and means of giving them Christan teaching. Not only should we say "Let the children come," but let us be sure that the total church provides and supports a creative summer program to nourish them when they come.

CRYSTALLINE WORLD

MARY McDOWELL

Today, the world I waked upon
Had changed its usual form
Into a world all crystalline
From last night's freezing storm.

The trees in our back yard wore glass
And, as the sun peeked through,
It seemed to me that crystal fruit
Was sparkling on them too.

The street lights hung like chandeliers,
Their glassy pendants dancing
And down upon the old stone wall
The sunbeams bright were dancing.

It was a brilliant, brittle morn
A dreamland bright and new,
But once the sun began to warm
The old world soon came through.

Chosen for What?

support with contributions and attendance an evangelistic mass meeting is also not too costing. But if evangelism means to us no more than this, however needful and right such tokens of concern may be, it were better if the subject were dropped from the agenda. Of pious pronouncements in favor of evangelism we have had enough.

The need today is for a sober look at the world outside our church walls, and an even more sober look at our churches—at their structure, their community life, their worldliness, their comfort and ease.

Here are some of the problems we face:

First, do we really want to carry the gospel out into the world? This would mean not merely opening our doors and welcoming those who find us attractive enough to join our fellowships, but moving out into the slums of our great cities, among the poor and downtrodden, the social and racial minorities, the skeptics and unbelievers, let alone the unevangelized multitudes in distant lands. It would mean surrender of our pride in membership statistics and accepting those outside our walled-in church compounds as and where they are. "God makes his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust." Have we the right to fence in this free gospel? Our evangelism must sound to many outside our churches as if we said to them: "Become socially respectable and financially independent as we are, move to our beautiful suburb, and sign on the dotted line as a weekly contributor, and we will welcome you to our lovely Sunday service, with the heavenly music of our choir, to our church suppers and even to membership in our missionary society." This is caricature, of course. God loves suburbs as well as the lost in city slums. But can we honestly say that we place no price tags on our evangelizing membership drives? Our survey of evangelism around the world is full of reports of pioneers, eager to minister in factory or university scene, who have been branded failures because they could not produce an immediate harvest of new church members, thus increasing their membership.

Secondly, if we take seriously our call to declare the good news of God's love to the world regardless of profit to ourselves, have we the power to do it? Do we ourselves know what the gospel is so that we can communicate it to our neighbors? Our chaplains in the last war testify to the appalling religious illiteracy of our Christian youth. In thousands of our nominally Christian homes the Bible is an unread book. Is not the traditional language of the church at times little more for us than a soothing cloak for ignorance and sloth? Yet the primary evangelists of the church are none other than its laity and not its ministerial order. The layman is thrust out into the world, into factory and office, each and every one called to be an apostle and a witness to the gospel. Something more is needed for this vocation than a chaotic jumble of ideas about religion or a vague sentiment of good will.

Luoma

The verbal presentation of the gospel by the churches is not enough; the power of God must be seen in action in the lives of those who belong to the church

Thirdly, if the individual Christian stands under judgment as one called to be an evangelist, our churches stand under judgment also as churches. Trust in mere verbal presentation of the gospel is never enough. The power of God must be seen by those outside the church's life in action—above all, in the corporate life of those who call themselves members of the body of Christ. Yet what does the outsider see? We may well listen to the nonchurch citizen's appraisal of his neighbors. How are they different from their worldly environment, except by the observance of a few moral taboos, sporadic attendance on Sundays at a peculiar pious exercise, and at times an offensive self-righteousness? The church on the local scene often resembles a club competing with a multitude of not dissimilar rivals, and the outsider sees little difference. Within the churches he often notes the same competitive success-worship that he meets in business or sees written large on the society page of his newspaper—the commercialized bazaar, the fashionable wedding, the treadmill of guilds and committees, each spending its energy in encouraging members to attend the next meeting, no one knows quite why. My portrait may be inexcusable exaggeration. Yet are our churches guiltless of transforming the fellowship of the Holy Spirit into an institutional tyrant and even monster, devouring her children for the sake of her own prosperity and grandeur? A church desirous of becoming a true evangelizing church may have to listen again to the voice of the Lord of the church: Only a church which loses its life will find it.

There can be no urgency, even that of hydrogen bombs, equal to this. The prospect of the end of the world did not frighten the Christians of apostolic days. It need not frighten us. But those early Christians lived in the fear of God, knowing that only as they obeyed the command of the gospel would they be able to claim for themselves its promise of eternal life.

The Churches in China

Charles C. West

What we can know of Chinese Christian life today is compounded of the shrewd guesses of those who knew the Chinese church before and after the communist revolution and the news brought by returning missionaries and refugees and from the censored religious papers.

FOR over three years the only news which has come to us of Chinese Christians has been brought by departing missionaries and refugees, and the Communist-censored church publications which come into our hands. We depend for our interpretations of Christian life in China today on the shrewd guesses of former missionaries or Chinese churchmen in exile, based on their knowledge of the church there before and just after the Communist revolution, on their knowledge of China and on their knowledge of Communism. This is all we know about the churches in China today.

Those of us who are called to maintain the bond of the spirit with fellow Christians there sift the scraps of news and rumor which come our way. We read betwen the lines of the censored church papers, and the reports of "official visitors" to China. And we pray that God will guide our imagination to discern what in fact is happening in the spirits of our friends and in the witness of the church. No letter comes to us from China which helps us with this task. Most of us treasure still unanswered notes of three or four years back, notes we do not dare to answer for fear of the harm we may cause to those whom we love who may receive them. No regular channels of secret communication cross the bamboo curtain. China is cut off from the rest of the world by every human means.

This is the situation in which we seek to bring before our eyes a living picture of the churches in China. Yet we must seek this living picture, because the church does not express its unity only through the post or through channels of commerce and of the mind which are opened between nations whose politics are congenial; nor is it split when human contacts are cut off. There is a power which has formed us—the lordship of Jesus Christ—which defies these limits. There are channels of contact—those of intercessory prayer and of minds sensitized by its practice—which no bamboo curtain can frustrate. It is well that there be some report, therefore, of what these channels tell us of Christians in China. It is well that we should for a few minutes try to comprehend what the Christians in China are trying, through these very channels, to convey to us.

The first item in this report is that there continues to be a church of Jesus Christ in China. By this I mean not simply that external conditions allow religious worship to continue. The evidence on this is quite ambiguous. On the one hand, the Common Program, under which the Communist government operates, and the draft of the new constitution guarantee "freedom of religious belief," which has generally been interpreted to mean the right of church groups to meet for worship and other religious activities, so far as these are co-operative with government projects and propaganda or at least not offensive to the government. It has meant the right of churches, under government license and guidance, to organize nationally, hold synods, conduct theological education, publish materials and the like, so far as these have no foreign contact or finance. In the cities on the whole this right has been respected. In some cases violation of religious liberty thus defined has even been redressed when the church appealed the case to a higher authority.

On the other hand, this freedom has been made dependent on the churches proving themselves "anti-imperialist." Some church leaders are in prison and some have been executed or have disappeared. In rural areas churches are usually closed during the long period of education, purge of the government's victims, and redivision of the land, under land reform. In some cases they are allowed to open again, in others not. In city and country few people in active life can find the time for church life because of the schedule of required public meetings, training courses and lengthened work days. In the ranks of the mass organizations and the party itself, the freedom which the state grants to religion ceases.

The case of the young Christian whom this speaker knows is typical of the situation. He joined the Communist youth after being assured that he could remain a Christian. But some months later he was accused and expelled on charges of having joined with insincere motives. "You are the only case," they told him, "in which a Christian has failed to give up his religion after a period with us. Therefore, you must have had false purposes in joining us, in the first place."

So the picture of permitted religious activity is ambiguous, and it varies from place to place and from time to time. Yet there exists a church of Jesus Christ in China today, not because it is permited, but because there are men and women who in the midst of the insecurity, the fears, the pressures on their freedom, on their time and on their daily bread continue to live from the nourishment of the Word of God and to gather around the table of the Lord. The evidence we have for this is more in symbolic examples than in detailed reports. We hear of a rural church, scattered by the force

Naomi Will H. K. Zeller, Jr. Jesse Ziegler

The Family Counselor welcomes letters of inquiry. They may be addressed: Family Life Department, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Dear Counselor:

We have a loved one in a mental hospital and our hope is beginning to grow dim regarding the recovery our doctor once assured us might come. We are having a struggle not to lose faith in a loving heavenly Father. We tried in all the ways we knew to bring our children up right. Would a loving God punish us thus? Is this affliction a punishment for him or for us?

Troubled Parents.

Dear Friends:

From your letter I gather that your son or daughter has been in a mental hospital for a considerable time. It seems that your discouragement and questioning arise from the prolonged stay in the hospital. You have found how hard it is to see a loved one go out of your home to a mental hospital where it seems you can do so little for them. You have also learned something of the agony of waiting for some sign of improvement.

For your sake I hope you will not give up your faith in a loving and merciful Father. You are questioning whether this sickness is a punishment either for you or the child. I doubt that it can in any sense be considered a punishment by God.

Let's take a look at how mental illness comes about. Some illness comes from physical causes: venereal disease, sleeping sickness, alcoholism, drug addiction, injuries to the brain. When such things happen to a person there are other results that often follow in the form of mental illness. this is just like harvesting grain when you have planted it. There is nothing of punishment in it. It is a simple cause and effect relationship.

Other illness comes from emotional and psychological causes. Too little love, too much protection, too strict conscience, too little esteem and respect for self, too little feeling of personal worth: these are some of the factors that contribute to causing mental disease. Such are never brought to bear viciously on a growing child in a good home. Sometimes parents do not understand how important such things are. If mental illness follows, it is not that God sends it. It is just that when seeds are planted, the harvest comes. Such seeds are planted not only by parents but sometimes by the kind of society of which we are a part. Parents should not think of such illness, therefore, as a punishment from God.

A final word about your son or daughter is in order. Do not give up hope. Do whatever the doctor who is in charge of him at the hospital suggests. And continue to pray that he may make a turn toward return to health. Sometimes after several years of seemingly hopeless illness a person suddenly begins to improve and returns to health. On the other hand, sometimes the disorder is so malignant that the person does not get well. Be sure that even so, the love and mercy of God are with him and you.

Let There Be Peace

LOIS R. NAFZINGER

The Master said to all, "Let there be peace."
Sharing and loving, make all tumults cease;
Working together understandingly,
Helps all mankind become one family.

Each friendship offered will return to bless
Our offering of ourselves to do our best.
Goodwill and brotherhood for all mankind,
Comes through our love where'er the need we find.

So let us labor in the Master's name,
His message, "Peace on earth," to all proclaim.
He will be with us and will lead the way,
And give us strength and courage day by day.

of Communist conquest and faced with the hostility of the new officials, beginning to gather once more in little groups for prayer and Bible study wherever it is possible. We hear of a church in Shanghai which has taken in 400 new members in the past year. We hear of a growth in Bible study and Bible circulation in all the churches. We hear of a few leading churchmen who have endured the indignity of mass trials rather than accuse others or compromise with the truth as it was given to them, and we hear or others who out of their failure and confusion in the time of testing have learned new things about the mercy of God and proclaim the gospel with sounder theology than ever before. We hear hints of the way the fellowship of the church has been strengthened in love and trust and of little ways which Christians find to serve their neighbor regardless of what the pressures on them are.

The church lives in China. And because it lives it faces problems which we can share, even though only the fellowship of common prayer is left us at moment.

The first of these problems—and the basic one—is that of finding an expression of the gospel which is genuinely free from the charge that it is a part of the imperialism of Europe and America. The Chinese believer does not have an ancient tradition of Christian culture on which to draw. Christianity came to China with the help of imperialist power. Its worship, its theology, its education and its social service have been part of the revolution which has changed the fundamental patterns of Chinese life. China has been in this revolution for over a hundred years. Her leaders have long ceased to think in terms of the ancient Confucian culture and have sought the new pattern of China's life in some Western system of thought and social order, which at the same time will be China's answer to Western dominance.

Communism has become this system. It is the first power in centuries which has given China relatively incorrupt and efficient government. It has covered the land with great projects, both industrial and military, and has shown its force in aggressive war. It has gripped the imagination and changed the lives of millions of Chinese youth. It has left those who are oppressed by its power and repelled by its total claim no place to turn. For it is presented to the Chinese as China's answer to Western imperialism. Allegiance to the Communist state and to Communist plans for society has become a test of patriotism.

This is the dilemma with which the Chinese Christian is confronted. With his Christianity he has received a Western education. His church follows the American or European pattern in worship, in organization and theology. Its leadership has been till recently missionary. The great institutions of the church—its hospitals, schools and colleges—have been supported by American or European funds and have been run on Western principles. He cannot easily distinguish between this heritage of Western culture and the gospel which underlies and motivates it.

The second great area of problems is that of Christian living, especially community living in the church. We must turn here for the realism which balances the illusions of many leaders about the benefits of communism and for that communion which seems so often to be broken by the actions of the men at the top. The problem of the average Christian and his congregation is that of Christian living under pressure—the pressure of the total ideology, the total power and the total planning of a Communist state.

This pressure shows itself in a number of ways. There is the pressure of time already mentioned which itself cuts drastically into the visible fellowship of the church. There is the intense pressure of the training school on each Christian youth, to "give up the burden of his superstition" in order to give himself fully to the service of the people. There is the pressure of great Communist reconstruction projects and of the dedicated spirit of Communist cadres, which seems sometimes to make Christianity irrelevant. There is the pressure of money in a society where socialization of all business and farming proceeds apace, and bond drives or government charities absorb spare cash. But above all there is the pressure of purges and accusations on the church itself, undermining the mutual trust which is of the essence of Christian community.

The answer of Christians to such pressures as these have varied greatly. Undoubtedly the church has been greatly reduced in numbers. Many have found it not worth the risk to continue to seek fellowship of other Christians, to pray and read the Bible. Especially among youth there are many even in government service who harbor in the back of their minds a faith which they cannot relate to any practice in their lives. Among other Christians the ancient Chinese custom of yielding with words but not with deeds has been adapted to foil this new tyrant as it has every other.

Sects have multiplied since the Communist conquest, largely at the expense of the established denominations. Some observers estimate that a majority of Chinese Christians are no longer in any organized church, but in small worshiping groups without any organizational connections at all. Most of these sects rest upon the twin bases of ecstatic, pentecostal prayer, and a rigid, legalistic interpretation of whatever words of Scripture appeal to them most. A few, like the now suppressed "Jesus Family," succeed in organizing the whole life of the believer in a kind of Communist community on a Christian base. Most, however, do not take the whole of life so seriously. All of them, however, are a natural response of simple Christians to the chaos of both the world and the church.

When all has been said, however, the barrier remains between us and our Chinese fellow Christians. We have seen it to be a barrier raised higher by our differences on questions of politics, faith and morals, than the Communists had already raised it. Most of us cannot understand or share the illusions about Christian co-operation with a Communist government which has led our Chinese friends to such fateful compromises. Most of us are sick at heart about the lack of sound theology which has denied them the vision of a transcendent kingdom of God, a true hope in the coming of Christ, which would have freed some for the joy of martyrdom and all from that fatal fascination with the inevitability of communism which undercuts every resistance to it. Most of us have watched with sinking feelings the way in which compromise with truth—at first only on matters of international politics—was skillfully exploited by the Communists until Christians were forced to denounce and accuse other Christians. And finally, the growth of the sects places a new barrier between us. These things we cannot understand, nor can we suppress our concern about them.

If we could see our Chinese brethren's list of concerns about us, we would probably be even more appalled. It is not human understanding, even in matters of theology and ethics, which unites us, but the knowledge that we can lay these differences, these burdens too heavy for us to carry, before the mercy of God. There is forgiveness to spare, both for our transgressions and those of our friends in China. There is the strength to go on praying for them, sharing their problems and rejoicing in their witness with them; for Christ is Lord both there and here.

Reviews of Recent Books

Books are reviewed here as a service to the church. A review does not necessarily constitute an unqualified recommendation. Purchase can be made through the Brethren Publishing House, Elgin, Illinois. Titles recommended for church libraries are marked with an asterisk (*).—Editor.

This Do And Live. Ray M. Pearson. Abingdon, 1954. 124 pages. $2.00.

Here is a readable book on how to put faith to work. Mr. Pearson, a vigorous young Congregational minister, preaches sermons which bring a treasure of happy illustration, a clear and serene faith, and a sympathetic understanding of human problems to bear in interpreting the good news for personal living.

It is a book containing a series of very practical sermons, beginning with one on the necessity of clear-cut Christian decision. Read what he says about the need for getting out of the church! —Edward K. Ziegler.

Paul, the World's First Missionary. Albert N. Williams. Association Press, 1954. 160 pages. $2.00.

This is an excellent readable account of the life of Paul. Well-known facts of Paul's exploits are presented with an interesting freshness which makes them new all over again. Paul will spring to life in adventures as thrilling as those of any secular novel. History and facts are relived in new freshness for the present generation.—Norman Long, McPherson, Kansas.

Folk Party Fun. Dorothy Gladys Spicer. Association Press, 1954. 300 pages. $3.95.

The author gives brief, but yet complete and easy-to-follow directions for each of the twenty-five folk parties. To make any one of the listed parties a success means planning and work before the presentation. But how else is a party to be successful? These parties can be either expensive or inexpensive, depending upon the leadership involved.

I especially appreciated the author's folk-lore background of each party; the invitation, decoration, game and music suggestions; and the unusual hard-to-find recipes given.

This book was written for all ages and for all types or organizations and groups, both large and small. The parties can be presented both outdoor and indoor. These folk parties are packed full of fun just waiting for you—try them! —Elsie Kindley Hall, McPherson, Kansas.

KINGDOM GLEANINGS

A record of twenty-seven shipments was set in 1954 by the Heifer Project. Fourteen countries including six to which the project had never shipped previously benefited from gifts of livestock.

A resolution requesting that the American delegation to the United Nations initiate steps to have each session of the UN General Assembly opened with prayer is among the first bills introduced at the new session of Congress.

The National Student Assembly of the Y.M.C.A. and the Y.W.C.A. adopted recently a firm resolution against racial discrimination. The delegates were college students representing some 500 Christian associations in the United States and Hawaii.

One hundred twenty-five dollars came to the Brotherhood treasurer recently with this explanation: "These checks represent an accumulation of funds offered by our families in lieu of a Christmas gift exchange. We desire the total used for the Share Our Surplus program."

Orville and Lois Sherman of Goshen, Ind., have accepted the call to become directors of the Inter-Church Service to Greek Villages. This is a project of several denominations, including the Church of the Brethren. The Shermans will be leaving the States about March 1 for a period of two years.

The Committee on Higher Education of the Church of the Brethren met in Washington, D. C., on Jan. 10 and 11 in connection with the annual meeting of the Association of American Colleges. Bro. A. G. Breidenstine, dean of Franklin and Marshall College, and Moderator A. Stauffer Curry addressed the committee.

A rehabilitation center for alcoholics will be opened in Baltimore, Md., as an experimental joint project of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Maryland and Alcoholics Anonymous. The center will give residence for a limited time to chronic alcoholics who, upon release from hospitals or penal institutions, show a sincere desire for recovery.

A seminar on religious journalism is being sponsored by the Nashville Tennessean for the second consecutive year, Coleman A. Harwell, editor of the daily newspaper, announced. Rev. Webb B. Garrison, visiting professor of religious journalism at Scarritt College, will head the seminar open to all ministers and church workers of all faiths.

Ernest A. Gross, legal advisor to the UN Secretary General and former U. S. Assistant Secretary of State, has been named chairman of the National Council of Churches' department of international affairs. The department's program for a just and durable peace is currently highlighted by four objectives. They are: continuing support of the United Nations, international regulation and reduction of armaments, a workable atoms-for-peace plan, and economic and technical assistance to the world's underdeveloped areas.

Medford D. Neher, recently pastor of the Michigan City church, Ind., has retired from active pastoral work and is now established in his new home at 333 Johnson Road, Michigan City. He plans to serve the church through the medium of his paintings in baptistries, chancels or wherever the message, Seek First His Kingdom, can best be used.

Ezra Whisler of Mossyrock, Wash, died suddenly on Dec. 30, according to word received in our office. An elder in the Richland Valley church, Wash., Bro. Whisler had been active until the day he died. He had preached the previous Sunday morning and had visited those who were ill on Monday afternoon. Funeral services were held on Jan. 4 in the Richland church.

The State Department has disclosed that a further curtailment will be made in the German high school student exchange program. The program was drastically reduced this year due to budget cuts and only 200 high school students came to spend the school year with American families. Next year it will be cut to about 150 students. The Brethren Service Commission which sponsored 55 of the German students this year has been the leading Protestant agency working in this field.

At the request of the National Christian Council of Nigeria, a team of two leaders in the field of Christian education will visit that country from October 1955 to June 1956. During the first three months in Nigeria, the two leaders of the international team will visit local congregations in rural and urban areas to study the conditions under which Sunday-school and youth work must be carried on. Then they will give instruction to a group of young people chosen by the churches of Nigeria.

The Brethren Service Commission is now recruiting a rehabilitation team of four members for Korea. The General Brotherhood Board in its November meeting authorized Brethren Service work in Korea. The team is expected to begin work by early March, and will work in close co-operation with the United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency and the government of South Korea. One vacancy on the team still exists. This could be an agriculture, a sanitation or construction person. No children will be permited to go to Korea. Any one interested should contact Brethren Service Commission, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Dr. John S. Noffsinger, Brethren and executive director of International Voluntary Services, Inc., Washington, D. C., of which Brethren Service Commission is a founding member, has just returned from a two-month visit of IVS projects around the world. He reports most favorably on the work in Egypt (where Otis Rowe is serving), Iraq (where Dr. Eldon Burke is director and several other Brethren are team members), Jordan (where James Bales is working on an agriculture project near the Dead Sea). Dr. Noffsinger also completed arrangements for IVS projects in Lebanon, Pakistan, Thailand and other areas. Several Brethren, including alternative service men, will be nominated to these projects.

Brotherhood Theme: Seek First His Kingdom

The Brethren Service Commission will soon open a Brethren Service material aid center on the West Coast, probably in the San Francisco area. This will meet a long-time felt need of Brethren on the West Coast interested in relief materials. Church World Service will designate it as its center on the West Coast, as it has done at New Windsor, Md.

Harry K. Zeller, Jr., has been invited by the West German government to be one of several Americans to make a study-tour of German religious and social institutions from Feb. 8—March 8, 1955. Bro. Zeller was nominated by the Brethren Service Commission. He will also make a brief visitation of Brethren Service work in Germany and Austria. Brother and Sister Zeller left New York on Jan. 11, and will return immediately after March 8.

McPherson College

McPherson College had five of her outstanding seniors elected to Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities for 1955. They are Isaac Grillo, a biology major and premedical student, son of Jeremiah and Rachael Grillo of Lagos, Nigeria; Ruth Strickler, an English major of Ramona, Kansas; Kenneth Brown, history major, of Wichita, Kansas; Marinell Johnson, home economics major, of McPherson; and Edward Frantz, business administration major, of Conway Springs, Kansas.

The McPherson College Players have presented two plays this year. The first was the famous one act play, Sorry, Wrong Number. Miss Irene Shull of Colo, Iowa, had the lead. For regional conference guests the players presented the controversial three-act play, Deep Are the Roots. Leads were held by Max Parmely of Hutchinson, Kansas, Leland Lengel of Windsor Colo., Leon Albert of Minneapolis, Minn., Duane Hoover of Overbrook, Kansas, Jo Ann Silver of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Irene Shull of Colo, Iowa, Peggy Hoefer of Worthington, Minn., and LaFaughn Hubbard of Hugoton, Kansas.

A chapter of the Future Teachers of America was organized on the college campus this year. The chapter has fifty members. Faculty sponsors of the organization are Dr. Mary Fee, head of the department of education and Prof. Max McAuley.

The Student Christian Association and CBYF have formed "Operations Nylon." The two organizations are seeking to secure a mile of used nylon hose. It was explained that women in Germany make flowers and other articles out of the nylons. They also unravel the nylon thread and use it in making other articles.

Mrs. Sarala Pradham of India presented the college with a handmade picture at a chapel program prior to the Thanksgiving vacation. The picture is an expression of appreciation for the services the college has given to her. The picture was unique in the fact that much of the fine embroidery work was done by using her own hair for thread.

Leon Neher, McPherson College junior, is in India as an exchange student. He plans to spend a year attending school, visiting mission points, and learning more about the various religious faiths of that country.

Miss Jessie Brown, long-time head of the college's music department, was injured in an automobile accident prior to the Christmas holidays. Miss Brown retired from active teaching two years ago. According to information available she is recuperating as well as can be expected.

Eula Mae Murrey, junior, has been selected as one of thirteen Kansas 4-H Club members to go abroad next summer under the International Farm Youth Exchange Program. Miss Murrey will leave next spring. She will live with various European farm families. She was the 1954 home-coming queen of the college.

Prof. S. M. Dell, dean of men, will take a sabbatical leave beginning the second semester. Prof. Dell will give his time to Brethren Service projects in Europe.

Several carloads of students motored to Elizabethtown, Pa., for the Brethren Student Christian Movement meeting earlier in the fall. Students and faculty members motored to California, Idaho, Texas, Washington, D.C., and New York City during the Christmas hoidays.

Various high school groups have been guests of the college this fall at athletic, dramatic or musical events. The college has welcomed their presence on the campus.

Regional conference this year was the largest ever held in the Western Region. Outstanding in the conference was the leadership of our principal speaker, Rev. Roger Frederickson of Ottawa, Kansas, the special musical numbers from various college ensemble groups, and the play by the college, Deep Are the Roots.

Over One Million Civilians Employed by Military

According to Senator Harry F. Byrd, nearly half of the civilians on the Federal payroll in the executive branch are employed by the military. At the end of July, 1,161,911 persons were employed by the Defense Department, Selective Service and Atomic Energy Commission. This amounts to 49.3% of the civilians on the executive branch payroll and is in addition to the 3,304,000 men and women in uniform.

Tunisian Christians Call for an End of Violence

Leaders of the Orthodox, Roman Catholic and Reformed Churches in Tunisia recently joined in issuing a message calling for an end of violence. The text of the letter which was read from pulpits said: ". . . We beg you to seek the way of peace and brotherhood. We absolutely condemn the practice of reprisals and crimes against innocent people. We warn you, in the Lord's name, that it is impossible to achieve justice by such methods, and that in the sight of God peace cannot be built upon hatred."

Pollard Sees World Headed Toward New Dark Age

Dr. William G. Pollard, director of the Oak Ridge Institute of Nuclear Studies, recently warned that the world is headed toward a new Dark Age comparable to that which overcame Western civilization from the 6th to the 10th centuries. He said that man is threatened because he has lost the capacity to respond to his cultural heritage, just as did the people of 6th Century Europe. Dr. Pollard said that science is at the peak of its prestige but has lost its ability to challenge the best minds of the world. He added that the challenge for the inquiring mind of today is how to build a society which will make proper use of the discoveries of science.

Senator Blasts Sunday Sales in Washington

In a Senate speech Senator Monroney of Oklahoma criticized Washington business houses which hold bargain sales on Sunday. He said that if the practice is not curbed voluntarily by merchants he will consider introducing legislation to halt it. Displaying four full-page advertisements from Washington newspapers announcing the Sunday sales, Sen. Monroney told his colleagues that he fears Washington will be "turned into a Baghdad on the Potomac."

Jewish Religious Leaders Honor Scandinavians

American Jewish religious leaders recently paid tribute to the Scandinavian peoples and governments for their work in saving Jews of Norway, Denmark and Sweden from the Nazis during World War II. Dr. and Mrs. Aage Bertelsen of Denmark, a pacifist schoolteacher and his wife, were honored for initiating and directing a Danish underground movement that took the lead in saving Denmark's 6,000 Jews by smuggling them to Sweden. Dr. and Mrs. Bertelsen disclaimed any acts of heroism, saying, "We did not know much about the Jews, but what the Nazis were doing went against our religion and morals."

Bible Society to Establish School for Colporters

Plans to establish a full-time training school for colporters in Latin America — first of its kind — were announced by the American Bible Society at the thirty-sixth annual meeting of its Advisory Council. It is planned to offer a one-year course of intensive training, class work and laboratory to six or eight graduates of seminaries and universities each year. These men will then assist agency secretaries of the Bible Society and help churches in the distribution and use of the Scriptures. It was reported that 3,198,000 volumes of Scriptures were distributed in Latin America during the past year. This is sixty-five per cent of the Bible Society's foreign circulation.

The American Bible Society may expand its work next year in Communist areas abroad, if funds are available to cover the cost. Supplies of paper are again being sent to Hungary for the manufacture of 30,000 Bibles. Six thousand Bibles and 4,000 New Testaments with Psalms have been sent to Yugoslavia. One hundred and fifty tons of paper and funds for distribution work have gone to East Germany. Supplies of Scriptures are on hand for shipment to Russia "as soon as doors for which we are constantly seeking are opened." Steps have been taken to reach nearly twenty million Chinese who are living outside the China mainland in the countries of East and Southeast Asia.

War Prevention Council to Close Doors

The National Council for the Prevention of War, one of the nation's oldest peace organizations, closed its doors on Dec. 31 with the retirement of its veteran executive secretary, Frederick J. Libby. At the height of its activity shortly before Pearl Harbor the Council had a staff of fifty workers in Washington. Since World War II it had been largely concerned with reconciliation and reconstruction in Germany.

Negro Named President Richmond Ministers' Association

Dr. John M. Ellison, the president of Virginia Union University, has been elected president of the Richmond Ministers' Association, an organization of about 430 Protestant and Jewish clergymen. He is the first Negro president of the association, formed in March 1953, by the merger of three white, Negro and interracial ministerial groups.

Another Negro clergyman, the Rev. C. Shelby Rooks, has been elected moderator of the Washington, D. C., Association of Congregational-Christian churches.

Two New Papers Published in Germany

Two new papers, Mirror of the Protestant Church Press and Mirror of the Catholic Church Press, commenced regular publication in Bonn, Germany, in the early autumn. The news items which they select are factual and informative rather than religious or theological. They give information about events within the churches, political questions and important events in art and letters as mirrored in the German-speaking church press.

Quotes in the News

Dr. Henry J. Cadbury, chairman American Friends Service Committee: "I am always impressed by the fact that in the Hebrew prophets it was not religion first and politics afterwards. It was experience of sensitive obedience to social duty and that brought forth in men like Isaiah and Jeremiah some of the great insights in religion. So it was a Quaker, a later prophet, William Penn, again who said, 'Government seems to me a part of religion itself, a thing sacred in its institution and end.'"

Dr. David G. Moses, principal of Hislop College, Nagpur, Central India: "The Christian gospel is either a world gospel or it is no gospel at all. Its universal character is founded on a universal human lack—all men have sinned and come short of the glory of God."

Dr. George F. MacLeod, founder of the Iona Community and visiting professor at Union Theological Seminary: "The validation of radical social passion does not lie in anything that need happen here on earth, but solely in obedience. Whether Jesus Christ comes at this moment or not, we must labor and strive that he may have a more beautiful Africa to come to, a more beauiful East Harlem, a more beautiful Glasgow."

Pierce Brandt

News Briefs

Police in Philadelphia have joined church and civic leaders in a "Go to Church" campaign for youth to help fight juvenile delinquency. Thousands of posters urging church attendance have been displayed throughout the city by law officials and all city police force members have been asked to use their personal influence to get young people to church.

King Haakon VII of Norway recently granted a private audience to the general secretary of the World Council of Christian Education, Nelson Chappel, during his visit to Norway. Norway reports a fifteen per cent increase in Sunday-school enrollment during the past twelve months. Fifty-six per cent of all the Sunday-school teachers in Norway are men.

The Methodist Publishing House broke all records with its sales totaling more than $18,000,000 during its last fiscal year. The oldest and largest of denominational publicating agencies now operates bookstores in fifteen cities and mail order outlets in twelve, as well as a book publishing unit, the Abingdon Press.

Sixty-nine European refugees arrived by plane at Idlewild International Airport in the first mass airlift of such migrants to be conducted by Church World Service. The refugees were guests of honor at an Eastern Area Church Resettlement Conference, where they were greeted by 150 denominational and interdenominational leaders from 11 northeastern states.

While the United States still discusses the place of television in broadcasting sessions of Congress, the West German Federal Republic continues with televising sessions of the Bundestag. Between October 1953 and October 1954 such TV broadcasts totaled 100 hours and covered 12 transmissions of 8 to 9 hours each.

The annual summer festivals of the Finnish Lutheran lay movements gathered thousands of Finns to praise God with prayers and songs. In addition to these, the various religious societies, foreign mission seamen's mission, inner mission meetings had their own conferences. About 200,000 Finns attend one of these great Lutheran festivals each summer.

Report from . . . Castaner

Eugene C. Carper, Administrator

The following report was prepared as a summary of the year 1953-54 in Castañer, to present to the General Brotherhood Board at their November meeting.

Shoes received through a shoe distribution are tried out by several children in Castañer. Those who are able pay a small sum for their shoes

The Brethren Service Project of Castaner brings Christian Greetings to the November Board meetings. The project for the first time has a full time Administrator who will serve as a coordinator in drawing together all phases of the work. The work at Castaner is divided into three main sections.

Operational services consist of maintenance, laundry, kitchen, coffee and animal farm, store room, and garden, care of grounds and transportation, and are under the direction of Walter Keiser. The farm is steadily increasing in production of coffee, bananas, minor fruits and vegetables. Our diary herd is reaching top milk production; we have been steadily increasing the number of brood sows. Our plan for next year is a stepped-up program of soil conservation, and an educational program designed to teach natives the proper method of feeding, selecting and housing animals, proper methods of planting, caring and terracing of land to eliminate soil erosion. We plan to make the farm more self-supporting.

Educational services consist of a unit school, academy, community center, and Cerrote (an outreach project in a nearby mountain community). They are under the direction of Jerry Davis. The student body of the Academy has increased from 35 to 52 students. The introduction of a new program of practical high school education in the fields of nurse-aids, dental technicians and commercial courses has been greatly acclaimed by students. These will be scholastically acceptable and accredited. A thorough study of population trends in surrounding second unit schools indicates a tremendous increase in requests for admission to the academy. Next year we will need more floor space or be forced to screen applications for the most promising students. We would like to make the academy more self-supporting. At Cerrote, Sunday school classes have begun; a one room public school opened; a hot lunch program continued; weekly clinics continued; and the second work camp was highly successful. The community center is continuing to improve Christian development for boys and girls. Club work continues and the starting of a teen-age club is anticipated. The trend seems to be toward helping people to solve their own problems.

Health and welfare services consist of the hospital, out-patient department, laboratory, pharmacy, dentist, and material aid. They are under the direction of Dr. Harold Leppink. We have an increasing number of patients, a well-equipped medical set-up, a growing income, five nurses, seventeen nurse-aids. The need is so great however that on a typical day, patients receive only a few hurried minutes of the doctor's attention. There is little time for physical examinations, or time to think or investigate or to talk with the patient. There is great need for two doctors full time. The dental program is now under way and meeting a real need. The material aid work continues to help the most needy with its medical, social work program of home visitation and through the distribution of clothing, shoes, milk and food.

The future program of the project will be affected by the liquidation of the Puerto Rico Reconstruction Agency and the completion of the nearby dam, perhaps next year. We are working with the Department of Labor studying possibilities of introducing some type of industry. Goals: Extension of publicity; making the project "homegrown;" identifying ourselves with the native population through "fellowship evangelism." There are a vast number of opportunities waiting fulfillment. The morale of the unit is at an all-time high. Whether they will be able to fill these opportunities will depend largely upon the "home front."

We ask Brethren at home to pray for us that we on the field may render worthy service to the cause of Christ.

SELF HELP PROJECTS

Some of the greatest needs at the present time are for items which enable families and individuals in Europe and Asia to become self supporting.

As spring approaches, the need for seeds becomes urgent. Seeds are distributed to refugee farmers in Germany and Austria, Greek farmers struggling to rebuild their farms, or farmers in Korea. A pamphlet is available describing the kinds of seeds recommended.

Along with the seeds, there is a constant need for hand and garden tools. Many farmers have several times lost all they owned. Many have only enough to exist from day to day, which does not give an opportunity to restock their farms.

Sewing projects are gradually being developed. With sewing machines workers may conduct sewing classes; or machines can be placed in a home or institution for a period of time. There is great need for the old fashioned treadle sewing machines. In Greece young girls learn how to sew and in other areas where the Brethren Service Commission works, mothers are learning to sew and are making clothing for themselves and their families. In Puerto Rico, young girls are making clothing for themselves and their families out of colored feed bags sent through the Brethren Service Commission. Sewing kits and sewing supplies also enable the women to do more for their families.

In addition to the above self help projects, there is still a need for good used clothing, shoes, bedding, layettes and food. For information regarding any of these projects write: W. Ray Kyle, Brethren Service Center, New Windsor, Md.

BRETHREN VOLUNTEER FELLOWSHIP

A recent retreat for Chicago-Elgin BVF'ers was held in Chicago at the First Church of the Brethren. M. R. Zigler, director of Brethren Service in Europe, W. Harold Row, executive secretary of the Brethren Service Commission and J. Henry Long, associate secretary of the Foreign Mission Commission, were guest speakers. Approximately 60 attended. Brethren Volunteer Fellowship is composed of former BVS'ers.

BRETHREN VOLUNTEER SERVICE

Applications are being received for the March Brethren Volunteer Service unit. Would you, your friends, the young people in your church or others be willing to give a year of volunteer service to the church, beginning March, 1955?

There have been 650 volunteers who have served since the program began in 1948. There are approximately 85 volunteers serving at the present time on the current projects.

Interested people should write to Ora Huston, 22 S. State Street, Elgin, Ill.

GERMANY

Twelve BSC workers attended a two day Peace Conference of the Mennonites, Friends, Brethren and International Fellowship of Reconciliation. A very favorable report was given on the visit of the Brethren and Mennonite workers to the English Friends last spring. This visit was so well received, that an exchange visit will take place in the spring with young Friends visiting Mennonite Service work in Germany and the Netherlands.

A recent shipment of material aid from the Brethren included 500 lbs. of clothing, 200 pair of shoes, 500 lbs. of dried milk, 400 lbs. of cheese which went to the Sandbostel refugee camp, where Charles Nichols, 1-W, works. These supplies fill an urgent need as about 30 new refugees come in each day needing clothing and food. A mobile craft unit has also been made available to this camp for several months.

PUERTO RICO

Four new workers arrived the last of November. They are Robert and Violet Metzler, Edward Whittemore and Janice Ebersole. The Metzlers will work at Cerrote and Ed Whittemore will teach in the Academy. Janice Ebersole will work at the Community Center.

Special Thanksgiving services were held at the church on the evening before Thanksgiving. On Thursday evening a Thanksgiving dinner was shared by all project members and several Puerto Rican visitors. The main dish was the famous Puerto Rican delicacy of roasted pig. Following the meal was an inspirational worship service which included slides and songs.

Growth--Necessary Complement of Consecration

Milton C. Early
Morrill, Kansas

SEVERAL summers back, the American Magazine published an article in an attempt to answer the question as to why people do not go to church. The third point in the article states that people have stopped attending church because the church is being replaced in the program of changing a person's character. The article states that "gland specialists, dietitians, psychiatrists and psychologists hold that crime and abnormality are the result of disordered glands, improper nourishment, disease, poverty, ignorance and mental derangement of one form or another."

It is hard to estimate the importance of the basic fact of this statement. But it is just as difficult to prove the replacement of the church in the converting of the soul of man to Jesus Christ. For there are also well fed, socially integrated, and glandularly sound persons who still have not made Jesus Christ and his way dominant in their lives. Such persons find life to be lived for what will contribute merely to the well being of their own lives at the disregard of their neighbor's good. That old story told by Jesus concerning the Good Samaritan keeps coming up with the theological emphasis that if we would gain life we are obligated as our brother's keeper.

We must not, however, entirely disregard the magazine's article. A clipping from the Huntington Christian under the title, Does the Church Falter? gives the following breakdown on why much of our church program fails: 5% of reported members do not exist, 10% cannot be found, 20% never pray, 25% never read the Bible, 30% never attend church services, 40% never give to any cause, 50% never go to Sunday school, 60% never go to church on Sunday night, 70% never give to missions, 75% never engage in church activity, 90% never have family worship, 95% never win a soul to Jesus Christ.

It does not matter just who took time to make this kind of an analysis, but it does matter just what the church does about the existing condition.

We often speak of children as the hope of the world. But it certainly does not take much wisdom to discover that children may be the world's peril as well as its hope. Much depends on how we build into their little subconscious minds the eternal facts of life. Measurement cannot be made of just what the church does for the child, but the church can be very certain that the job which belongs to it is done well.

There are several problems involved in getting the job well done. Our public schools are advancing rapidly in their ability to reach the child. Fewer and fewer children dislike school as a direct result of their efforts. Levels of training are presented to children which match their abilities and interest. The result is easily observable in the outcome of the child's response to the training.

Teaching Techniques

The church must not, dare not, lag in its techniques and materials if it expects to reach the child. With its corps of volunteer leadership and often limited finance, the church frequently is retarded and even obstructed in reaching children. Most of the teachers are adults whose training was in the public schools of a decade or two ago when techniques were much different than now. If the teacher cannot be trained in the modern means of teaching, or if she actually refuses to match in her class the interest-getting techniques of the public school, the success of teaching in the church school is limited just that much. So, the need becomes obvious and often acute. The church must constantly remain alert to the better teaching techniques and materials and to the challenging of the consecrated lives to constant growth in methods as well as dedication to a task. Just how shall this be accomplished?

First, the church must establish a record of doing good work. "Nothing succeeds like success." This is as

M. Edward Clark

Fortunate is the church school teacher whose local church provides magazines, books and other teaching tools for her use as she plans her work and her professional growth. Each church needs an adequate storage place or library for such needed materials true of the church as it is of anything else. News of failures get around, but so does the news of success, and people like to be a part of a successful group. The teacher who does a good job with her teaching will be known around the country side. She is always the person who, with the nurturing of her Christian growth, applies the best available techniques and materials. She will be acquainted with the homes out of which the children come. She will discover why the child who is becoming an absentee has lost his interest. She will take her responsibility seriously.

The church, however, will not leave her without assistance. Many people in the church who are idle would be thrilled to work if they knew where to take hold. To distribute responsibilities is to lighten the load for the few who so often are overworked. There are short-term responsibilities which can be given to many people who are willing to take short-term work, but who are not willing to be tied down over any length of time. A fine capable person whose talents should be utilized may be asked to serve as an assistant to a teacher, thus making lighter the load of the teacher and under this capable teacher, the assistant often may become one of the leading teachers.

Leadership Opportunities

The second way in which the church may challenge her leadership may be through leadership training. It is not necessary to spend much time here discussing the merits of the leadership training program. The growth-in-service programs such as the Fellowship of Growth-in-Service and the leadership training courses as offered by the Christian Education Commission of the General Brotherhood Board can be of tremendous help. Local councils of churches may also be helpful. Churches in the main have not offered a big enough challenge to their people. One of the biggest phases of the church work is the teaching field, but we must remember that it is not possible to separate the teaching program from the evangelism program. These two go hand in hand. Every teacher should be teaching so to win the child to Christ. Any time he does not use the best possible "tools" for accomplishing this end, he is not serving his master well. It is, therefore, necessary not only to gain training, but to develop a thoroughly Christian attitude toward growth as a leader. Some churches are beginning to set up regulations and standards for active teachers. If a given person is not willing to meet the standard as a teacher or leader, he is no longer considered sufficiently interested and should be dropped from his respective position.

Education—Means of Evangelism

Pointing out that evangelism was connected with teaching was purposefully done and might be considered as another means of challenging churchmen. The word evangelism has been spoiled for many people, as George E. Sweazey points out in his late book. Some folks have come to associate it with the cheap type of religious effort, being used by the unpolished, the uneducated, and the esoteric. This is unfortunate for in the New Testament it is the one word used to announce "good news." Down through the centuries the direction of evangelism has always been, and indeed should continue in its connection with the teaching phase of the church to bring men and women, boys and girls to a working knowledge of the faith and to a fruitful relationship with the church of Jesus Christ. Indeed, if this is not the work of the leadership, and especially the teaching staff of the church, then the church has lost its vision and soon will perish.

This brings us to one more thought. However consecrated a person may appear, when there seems to be nothing which will urgently drive him out into the hedges and byways to seek out those who have missed the way, it is questionable if his consecration has struck deeper than the shaping of the lips. Today people do not seek out the church congregation alone for their social contacts. If that segment of society which ignores the influence of the church is to be reached, the church will have to go out to them. It is sometimes said something like this: "They know we have the gospel here," or "If we live as we should, they will be attracted," or even "We need an evangelist to attract them." That is not the way to look on the problem. Such statements merely reveal the lethargy and carelessness of the church. There are no longer "shortcuts" which will work. We simply have to go out to them, taking the church to the homes, factories and farms—there showing the needs and offering the Christian gospel.

Edward L. R. Elson in his book, America's Spiritual Recovery, points out that America is in the midst of a spiritual awakening where people are showing more interest in the church than ever before. This should challenge us to plan as a Church of the Brethren so that we may take our place in the family of churches and share in the shaping of lives of children in that they may truly become the Christian hope of the world.

As this amount represents a minimum need of approximately one dollar per member, we earnestly ask Sunday schools and churches to emphasize an offering goal which averages no less than a dollar per person.)

Notes on the Emerging Church in Ecuador

Benton Rhoades

Sunday, June 27

Today the parents of the mission school children met to lay plans for the annual examination day which will terminate the school year. The main point of discussion was chicha, the corn liquor which is the center around which much of the Andean Indian's social life revolves. Since the P.T.A. is an autonomous organization it was possible and quite in place to discuss and decide the matter democratically.

The writer, one teacher, and the evangelicals were the only ones at first to uphold the case for a liquorless school fiesta. The discussion was long and heated. The final decision, reached after more than an hour of debate, was that liquor be banned, that recordings and a film replace the native band, and that each family contribute to the makings of a lunch.

Sunday, July 4

Today has been a great day in the life of the young church, the third baptizing. What a joy to the Tasiguano family to have now a second Indian Christian family in the church which has been largely made up of young people until now. This second family, the Tupizas, have been brought to Christ largely through the testimony of the Tasiguano family and have received instruction while visiting in each other's homes during the past month.

Among those baptized today, one has been a notorious thief in the community. A few years ago, at age sixteen, he robbed the Claude Wolfe home. At their request, he was assigned to the Wolfe family on parole and lived at the mission for six months. More recently he served a term in the penitentiary for other robberies. A few months ago he was led to Christ by a newly baptized layman of the local church. Since that time he has been a great Bible reader and seems to have found great joy in the Christian life. Today, on entering the baptismal pool, he, as well as one other man, asked for the privilege of confession and prayer in the presence of their neighbors—a real testimony to the unsaved who were present.

Baptismal services have been occasions of rejoicing in the young but growing church in Ecuador. On at least five occasions recently the church has accepted new members by baptism

After lunch the baptismal certificates were handed out. On the receipt of his, one new member used this as an opportunity to hand over his first tithe to the church stating that he was convinced of the Biblical teaching on the matter and he with his family expect to practice it from now on.

Sunday, July 18

This has been a day for which to be thankful—examination day ending the fifth year of the mission school in this community.

Early this morning the first parent arrived at the school. It was evident that he had been drinking, He sat down on the church steps and waited.

Almost immediately members of the Parents' Committee began to arrive, rolled up their sleeves, scrubbed out huge brass pots and began to cook—thirty gallons of soup, pickled cow's stomachs, mountains of dry rice, fifty gallons of sweet fruit punch—all paid for by the parents.

The state inspectors arrived at 8:30 and began the oral examinations, grade by grade, which went on until 1:00 P.M. The children were well prepared and made a good showing. The parents were happy. The chapel stage was converted into a classroom, and proud fathers, mothers, and close relatives filed into the chapel as their own little ones were tested on skills and knowledge acquired.

On completion, the Indian president of the parents' group announced that dinner was ready. Everyone ate and drank his fill. Then the party began—a humorous program by the children, conversation, games and a film. All during the day a stream of families trickled into the school office to enroll their children —returning for another year or entering for the first time.

At 8 P.M. the last families went home, carrying the handcraft articles made by their little ones. The parents were sober, happy, and not a few were saying, "Let's do it this way next year." What a joy to feel that maybe another small step was taken today toward acceptance of a more wholesome way.

July 31

As I think back tonight over the past month, two things seem outstanding in the life of the church. One, series of meetings on the organization and function of the church; and two, the working out of the local church's first budget. The church dealt with the various public services and their purposes, also reorganization of the Sunday school including finer grading of classes, and the appointment of more national teachers. Three evenings were spent on a study by the entire membership of stewardship, the tithe, and church finance. The tithe, which has customarily been exacted by force in these parts, we found was still considered by the young Christians as an abuse, a systematized method of exploitation on the part of the priest who sent his man "Friday" with a burro and large bags at harvest-time to collect. Now, to find the tithe taught in the Bible and the progressive practice of stewardship among God's people, was for them an amazing discovery.

On the last evening the little church adopted its first budget with the whole membership present and ample discussion on each point. It is as follows:

	Sucres	Dollars
Pastor's salary	3,000.	$180.00
Building fund, future church	1,500.	90.00
Charities	500.	30.00
Church fiestas (social)	400.	24.00
Furniture (table)	200.	12.00
Love feast and communion	73.	4.50
Community recreation	105.	6.00
Miscellaneous	50.	3.00
	6,828.	$349.50

August 31

The outstanding happening of this month has been the unexpected awakening in the village of interest in the Gospel. The village of Calderón, two miles from the mission, is populated by Spanish and mestizo families who live from their land-holdings, from Indian trade, especially in liquor, and from legal and political fees collected from the Indian. The mission has not made any attempt to serve the people of that community, partly because we have enough to do among the Indians, and partly because it is a Catholic stronghold being overshadowed by a large church and by the ministrations of a full-time priest.

Suddenly, out of this village, groups began to drop in to visit. These visits, though beginning as neighborly calls, always ended up on Bible and religious subjects. These occasional calls have turned into regular classes two nights a week. The attendance in these classes is from seven to ten people and it seems likely that it will lead to additional baptisms in the church.

October 3

Today the church held its fourth baptismal service. It is two years since the first baptisms and the number of national believers totals twenty-six. It was a day of rejoicing with more than seventy in attendance. Among the applicants were one Indian family and four "whites" from the Spanish-speaking inquirer's class in the village and a young carpenter and wife from a neighboring community. The Indian applicants this time received the major part of their baptismal instruction from the Indian pastor and in their own language. The local church is now interracial, a situation which may not be easy, but which, if successful, will be a real step forward for Ecuadorian Protestantism.

Though these notes are concerned usually with the evangelistic phase of the work in Ecuador, it seems in place to report that today the new school year opened with seventy children enrolled. During the vacation months the school has faced strong opposition dealt out by the local priest and a group of Colombian nuns. This religious order was brought to our community several months ago to check the evangelical influence of our mission school. The nuns live at the head of the lane which leads to our school. There they operate a school also. They attempt to control the entrance of families and, by visiting, to spread fear among those who insist on educating their chuldren with us. During the summer we have also kept visiting in the Indian homes, attempting to keep the people's confidence and keep alive their resolve to educate their children. The struggle is well-known in both liberal and conservative political circles and has even received comment on the floor of Ecuador's Congress. Today, with a healthy increase over last year's enrollment, it would seem we are winning. But the enemy will not rest from his purpose of a fight against the school which is to him a threat not only to the existing religious system, but to the economic control of the poorer class as well.

The opening day activities consisted of the payment of tuitions and purchase of supplies by the parents, the organization of the P.T.A., initiation of the adult literacy campaign, and an agricultural demonstration given jointly by Rolland Flory and the newly organized agricultural extension service of the government.

The staff of the school this year is made up of four full-time national teachers plus the missionaries and native artisans from within the church who will teach various trades an hour or two each week.

Today, in his weekly report, pastor Pedro told how on Thursday he was visiting in a nearby Indian community. He had taken large Bible pictures to aid his teaching. While teaching in one of the homes, a lady from the village of Calderon entered the house and begged him to give her one of the pictures, feigning an interest in the Gospel. Taking advantage of the fact that Pedro must pass her house on his way home, the lady hurried back to the village and stirred up a group to attack him. Of this Pedro knew nothing.

When he was walking home a little later, the lady who had asked for the Bible pictures met Pedro outside of her home and invited him in to talk about the Gospel. Inside he met a drunk who had been brought there to beat him. A blow dealt by the drunk in an unguarded moment knocked Pedro down and caused him to drop his Bible pictures, which the others picked up, ripped to pieces, and burned. Pedro began to speak to them of the love of God and how it manifests itself in love for one another—even our enemies. He continued to preach to them until they would hear no more. Then he went on his way amidst threats of burning, beating and death if he should again preach the Gospel in that village.

Today Pedro said he was telling this to the "Brothers" so that all could rejoice that the Word was preached among its enemies and to request prayer for those who had attacked him. Also he asked for a new roll of Bible pictures.

Detroit Adjusts to Program of Action

CITY church work is very important, profitable and strategic. We need and must have strong churches in our urban areas, for these areas are growing very rapidly. Jesus was interested in the city. He went to the cities to preach. He wept over Jerusalem. And Paul sought out the great cities in which to preach.

So why have the Brethren avoided the cities? There was a time when Brethren thought that they could not do city work. We were told that we are a rural church, with the results that over the years we have developed an inferiority complex toward city church work. True, we have had many failures in the city. We likewise have had many failures in the country. A number of reasons could be enumerated for our failures, but we shall endeavor to set forth a positive program of action, a program that is working in many places. We see now we can go into the city parish and succeed by putting on a good, positive, up-to-date program. It is not easy, for we are not known. We must earn our way. Whereas some of the larger denominations are already established at least in the minds of the people.

I have been asked to write about Detroit. There was one church up to 1950. The city was growing rapidly. The members were widely scattered. Many would drive twenty-five miles through heavy traffic. Many were being lost. Something needed to be done. It was a killing job for the pastor to drive all over this tremendous metropolitan area. After much consideration it was decided to sell the old church building and parsonage and move into suburban areas and build two churches instead of one.

From the standpoint of attendance and interest it is paying off. Both churches, First church located on the east side of the city and Trinity on the west side now each have an attendance higher than when they were together in one church. We now have two good churches each served by its own pastor and yet there are people driving from fifteen to twenty miles through city traffic. More churches are needed.

Now let us see some of the problems to be met as well as the opportunities. One of the first problems is location. In the cities now, we are working with the city and state councils of churches in the matter of extension and planning. We must find a place that is not overchurched. This location is investigated and then assigned to the denomination asking for it. Once you get your assignment it will not be violated by any major denominations. This is a real advantage. Then in most cities enough space must be purchased for off-street parking. After we have our assignment then we must minister to the needs of the people of the community.

This introduces another problem for the Brethren. Should we hold fast to Brethren traditions in polity and order? Or should we revise our membership requirements to receive others who are Christian and yet have not had our method of baptism? We took the broad view and are receiving members in full fellowship on confession of faith and the presentation of a church letter. We are finding no difficulty here. Parents come by letter but when the children come into the church, they are baptized. We have discovered that the spirit of a member is far more important than rites or ceremonies. Feet washing and supper at communion is a strange thing to people who have never heard of it. That problem has been solved by having four communions a year at morning worship using the bread and cup. These can be most beautiful and helpful services when properly studied and administered. Let the communion be the sermon, building it to a high point with meditations, scriptures and music. We still have two love feasts a year and the dual method is proving most satisfactory and beneficial to all.

If we plan to do effective city work we must face our task realistically. Our methods must be up to date. Worship must be beautiful, orderly and well planned. The idea that we should not do certain things because other churches do them is a bit narrow and a little ridiculous. In the past our church, in order to be plain and simple, has been so severely simple that we have bordered on the crude. The city pastor should study up-to-date worship helps, materials and methods, attend classes and workshops promoted by the Council of Churches in order to beautify and to make his worship programs attractive. For we have found that people respond to this type.

Getting acquainted is one of the first things to do in a new community. So the conducting of a survey is imperative. Make sure your cards carry the information desired about each family, then file these for future reference. The callers should have a brochure with full information about the church, its leadership and program. Monthly fellowship dinners at the church sponsored by the Fidelis Club (a group of younger women of the church) have been highly beneficial. Emphasis is placed on fellowship rather than money making. No charge is made for the meal but a free-will offering is received as they leave. An invitation is sent to all in the community who have expressed an interest and when they come, we try to be friendly and get them acquainted with others in the community and in the church.

A monthly parish paper is exceedingly helpful. It is a regular monthly visitor that goes into each home. It carries all the activities of the church and the various organizations and promotes the total program.

Our Mother's Club purchased and dedicated to all the mothers of the church a public address and chime system. This provides tower chimes which ring out the gospel message every day. This can be heard many blocks from the church in every direction and is most appealing and attractive. There is also a beautiful life-size picture of the Christ, "Come Unto Me," lighted automatically, which can be seen by every passer-by on the street.

Another helpful method of acquainting the people with the church is through Sunday-school classes, junior and adult choirs and various clubs. A church must be a fellowship or it is not a church. Visitation in the homes by the church school teachers, the deacons and others has resulted in increased interest and attendance and a growing friendliness to the church.

While the problems and opportunities are many and great the need is tremendous. Church denominational barriers are getting thinner. People are interested in a church close at home; so a friendly church with a good program has a real opportunity.

Working closely with the city Council of Churches is very important for most of these have a good reputation and people respect those churches which work with them.

Obituaries

Beam, Howard A., son of Samuel W. and Ephia M. Beam, was born at Dixon, Ill., Jan. 11, 1875, and died Aug. 29, 1954, as the result of injuries received in a car accident. Is Your Group Using the

1955 CBYF Program Kit

Now for the first time the Youth Department under the Christian Education Commission has prepared a CBYF Program Kit especially adapted to the needs of the youth in the local churches. There is enough material here to help you plan for youth meetings each Sunday for an entire year. Rich in suggestions for worship, study, and recreation. A new Kit will be developed for the use of the youth department in the local church for each new church year. If you have not yet purchased one of these CBYF Program Kits do it at once and use it in planning the programs and activities for your youth group.

Adults will also find valuable aids for program planning in this Kit. The material dealing with India is excellent as supplementary aids for the planning of foreign mission study groups.

Baugher held a Bible Institute. Our young people were in charge of the devotions at the district youth rally in the Codorus church. The Berean Bible class sponsored a hymn sing and the Willing Workers' class had a special program of music by the Jordan River Boys, a local Negro quartet. Our women spent a day working at the New Windsor center. Another project of the women was the preparing of bandages for the African hospital. We participated in the union week of prayer services in January. In November E. Russell Hicks of Hagerstown conducted a four-week school of living during the Sunday evening services. Our communion service was held on World Communion Sunday. Our district has approved the retirement system for pastors and our church has recently taken part in this system.—Margaret E. Oellig, Greencastle, Pa.

JESUS' DESIGN FOR LIVING

(40 Meditations on the Sermon on the Mount)

By Thomas S. Kepler

Jesus' Great Sermon is the blueprint for the life you seek — an unfailing guide to the joy and serenity of Christian living. In these meditations Dr. Kepler traces the design so that all may clearly see and follow. Richly illustrated from the Bible, great literature, and from the daily paper, these meditations make the Sermon on the Mount more meaningful. $2.00

WHEN GOD WAS MAN

By J. B. Phillips

Twenty centuries ago when God became man and dwelt on earth as Jesus Christ, men saw what it means to be truly good, honest and pure in heart. In this book those days are re-created. Here the full figure of Jesus Christ comes into sharp focus in all of its radiance. Readers will more clearly understand his teachings and the compelling appeal "Follow me" will again take on a new meaning. (Ministers' Book of the Month for January) $1.00 meetings in our church. Our love feast was held in the new fellowship annex which is nearing completion. This hall is a project of the young adult class. The women's work sponsored a church-wide Christmas celebration in the new hall. Elsie Houston has entered BVS. Our Sunday school contributed forty dollars to help make available surplus foods for overseas relief. — Mary Ann Springer Grassmeyer, Greenwood, Del.

Denton—Brother and Sister Lloyd Haag from Bethany Seminary assumed the pastorate of our church in July. Five young people from our group attended the National Youth Conference. Our missionary society holds monthly meetings and will again sponsor mission programs during the month of January. The aid society has been providing a number of quilts and comforters for relief. Again this year our men's work sponsored a Lord's Acre project. Bro. James Renz, national temperance director who was visiting our district, talked in our church. Our pastor assisted in the union Thanksgiving service which were held in the First Methodist church. A reception was held in November for Clyde Nafzinger, who spent two years in Brethren Service in Germany, and his German bride, Erika. Bro. H. H. Ziegler, peace counselor for our district, talked in our church recently. Emphasis on peace and missions has been stressed by the use of the films and filmstrips, How to Conquer War, Home in Nowhere, and Frontiers Near Home. On Dec. 5 Miss Emma Ziegler, formerly from Denton, shared with us her experiences as a foreign mission school teacher. The CBYF under the direction of Mrs. Haag presented the drama, The Empty Room. A special missionary program was held Dec. 12 at which time the mite boxes were returned.—Mrs. Norman L. Rairigh, Denton, Md.

Green Hill—At our recent council meeting Bro. Walter Mahan was re-elected elder for the coming year. Nine of our young people attended the National Youth Conference. Most of the young people attended Camp Mardela during the summer months. Lena Doss, Grant Mahan and Elmer Johnson were delegates to district meeting at the Fairview church. Bro. James Renz, national temperance director, was with us Wednesday evening, Oct. 6. Bro. David Hanawalt, district fieldman, was in our area for a visit. On Nov. 26 six from our church worked at Camp Mardela. Bro. Olen B. Landes from Harrisonburg, Va., was with us for revival meetings, beginning Nov. 15. As a result three persons were added to our church. —Mrs. Salome Hartman, Westover, Md.

Eastern Maryland

Piney Creek—Our church just completed a one-week revival meeting with Bro. Wayne A. Nicarry as evangelist. There were seven persons baptized and one received by letter into our church fellowship. Our love feast was held Oct. 24 with Bro. Maurice Mentzer of Chambersburg bringing the morning and the preparatory sermon for this service. He also officiated at our love feast service. The young people presented a Christmas play. —Mrs. Virgie A. Bowers, Littlestown, Pa.

Pipe Creek—During the summer our CBYF had several Lord's Acre projects. Some of the proceeds were used to help several of our youth attend the National Youth Conference. Bro. M. Guy West of York, Pa., was guest minister during August. In addition to our delegates a number of our members attended the district conference. On the last Sunday of September our pastor conducted an installation service for the newly-elected and appointed church and church school officials and teachers. On the third Sunday of October we held our love feast and communion service in our remodeled church. Bro. Harl Russell was with us one Sunday morning as a part of our stewardship education program. On Nov. 6 most of the antiques of the church were sold at a public auction. Most of the articles were bought by members of the church whose ancestors organized this congregation in 1758. Duplicates of almost everything sold have been kept for our museum. Some of our members attended the dedication of the new wing in the Fahrney-Keedy Home at Boonsboro. Our annual harvest home fellowship dinner was held Nov. 24. A film, That They Might Have Life, was shown. Two persons have been received by letter since our last report.—Edna Fike, New Windsor, Md.

First Virginia

Hopewell—Since our last report, three were baptized into our church fellowship. On Oct. 24 our pastor, Bro. Shallenberger was ordained to the eldership with Bro. Henry C. Eller of Roanoke, Va., bringing the morning message. Our men's fellowship group attended the community Thanksgiving services at the First Methodist church. The women's work group did some relief sewing during the summer months. Three quilts were sent to New Windsor by this group.—Mrs. E. D. Green, Hopewell, Va.

Northern Virginia

Calvary—Our elder, J. Floyd Wine, was named delegate to district conference. A hymn sing sponsored by the young people was held in our church one Sunday evening. The film, God Is My Landlord, was used at our service on Nov. 14. A fellowship supper was held Nov. 26. Parts one and two of the film, Our Bible, How It Came to Be, were used on Dec. 5, and the third part was shown on Dec. 12. Our Christmas program was held Dec. 26. Five persons were baptized and two received by letter into our fellowship.—Mrs. Flossie Foltz, Winchester, Va.

Second Virginia

Pocohontas, Boyer — Vacation Bible school was held under the leadership of Brother and Sister W. E. Hamilton. The offerings from the school was used to help purchase paint for the church building. Delegates to district conference were Mrs. A. W. Wilfong, Mrs. C. D. Brubaker, Mrs. George Vandevender and Bro. J. W. Pugh. Our ladies' aid has made several repairs on the church. We contribute twenty-five dollars a year to missions. Mrs. Paul Mullenay is adult advisor for our youth group.—Mrs. A. W. Wilfong, Boyer, W. Va.

Are Members Cheap?

A few years ago a pastor friend said "We worked hard for every member we got. We can't afford to lose any of them." Considering the difficulties many of our churches have in growing numerically, it would seem that a high value should be placed on every member. Yet I have the opinion that members quite generally are "cheap" in the Church of the Brethren. The value placed on them is low, as though they could easily be replaced.

A seventeen-year-old Brethren girl went to the city. She did not know there was a Brethren church in the city until she was married and had a family. The city church was not informed of her presence, and did not learn of her until she was accidently discovered a few blocks from the church, rearing her family of four in another denomination. What a difference if the home church had valued her membership, had directed her to the city church and had notified the church of her presence.

This is what one pastor did when a family of six was moving. He wrote well in advance of the move, introducing the family, giving ages and capabilities in the church. He told of the new work and the kind of home needed. The pastor in the new location went immediately to an official who could help in locating a home. This official wrote to the family, offering his assistance. When the family received the letter, they left for the nearly five hundred mile drive to the new location. Although they could not find the desired location on that trip, they could arrange for this local churchman to find a home for them. Then they transfered their membership immediately and went to work in the new location where their coming had been anticipated. And the previous pastor wrote a followup letter to encourage this family in church participation in their new location. Members are not "cheap" to him.

When Brethren young people come to the city for work or school, the home church has the responsibility to help them into church life in the new location, immediately. The same is true when families make this move. If the home church is satisfied because they come home sometimes, they will probably be lost entirely. So, let us act as though church members were very precious, for they are.—John B. Wieand, Omaha, Nebraska.

Prayer

I have read many articles in your column on prayer.

We do not spend enough time in prayer. Prayer is like food; we starve our souls if we neglect to pray. Just in the last few years two of my loved ones passed away, both with an incurable disease, and I spent much time in prayer. One's mind is not at ease unless he follows the example of Jesus; he spent whole nights in prayer. If we do the same and yield our lives to his hands, we will be richly blessed. God can steady our nerves and give us a clear vision of what life is all about.

So let us spend some of our busy time in prayer, not to tell God, but to listen to what he has in store for us.—Mrs. Della Johnson, Perrysburg, Ohio.

Rooted in the True Gospel

I would like to reply to an article evidently written by one who did not quite understand what he was writing about. For he wrote that we should cut out all denominationalism, and all be one body.

I have lived in Brethren communities, and also where there was no Brethren congregation. One sees so much of what we might call "sham Christianity," many preachers saying and preaching that baptism is not necessary; that feet washing is only an old Jewish custom and not for the Christian to observe; that sprinkling, or a few drops in the hand, and pressed to the forehead, is just the same as immersion; that the Lord's supper was only the Jewish passover. And Jehovah's Witnesses say that Jesus' body was not resurrected, but dissolved in vapor; that after the Christian is resurrected, men and women will be so developed that they will be perfectly mated, and that they will have children that will be perfect.

How can a real Christian swallow this and still believe all the New Testament?

I thank God that there is a church (denomination) that believes, teaches and observes all of the Scriptures.

But seeing how so many have perverted and misconstrued the Scriptures has really rooted me more firmly in the true gospel as practiced by our church.—Edgar R. Longenecker, Farmington, Mo.

Opportunities for Dedicated Service

Earl M. Zigler

SINCE returning to India several months ago I have felt a greater challenge to service for the Lord and the church than I have had since those idealistic days of challenge and dedication back years ago in the youth camps in America. We now have headquarters in a cottage near the village of Khergam, twelve miles from the railroad town of Bulsar. This is located in the heart of the area occupied chiefly by the aboriginal tribe known as Dhodias, but in the area there are several other such tribes and a sprinkling of Hindus, Muslims, Parsis, etc. In this area there are three organized churches. By means of our old jeep all parts of this area are accessible except during the rainy season when the rivers get up and the roads become impassible. We are just on the edge of the areas of Dharampur and Bansda, which were formerly native states in which the rulers had forbidden any Christian work. Today preparations are being made to begin work in those needy areas. There are unlimited opportunities of service open to those who feel the call of the Lord and in whose hearts the burdens of these people are felt.

Today's opportunities

1. There are thousands of eyes in which there is no light of hope or joy. To bring a gleam and glitter to these eyes is a tremendous opportunity and challenge. Many are depressed because of ill health or disease. They are economically dispossessed, burdened by debts, insufficiently fed, dependent upon landlords for a meager existence. Spiritually they are hopeless, fearing the curse of evil spirits and knowing nothing of the love of God and the release available through faith in our Lord. A few have found a new hope in the new independent India, but thousands lack even that hope, not trusting their own fellow citizens. These hopeless and lusterless eyes are hungry for help and release from their fate. The opportunity to help is tremendous.

2. Another challenge is that of having a part in the very vital moments of building a new nation in India. For the first time in history India is united into a single nation under its own government. Today the principles and patterns for the future are being formed. The future leadership of the country is being trained. The need for God-fearing, honest, faithful, unselfish people interested in the welfare of all classes and races of people, filled with a spirit of service for the needy, is evident. The challenge is to the Christian church to give and train leadership for this responsibility.

Zigler

Winnowing beans

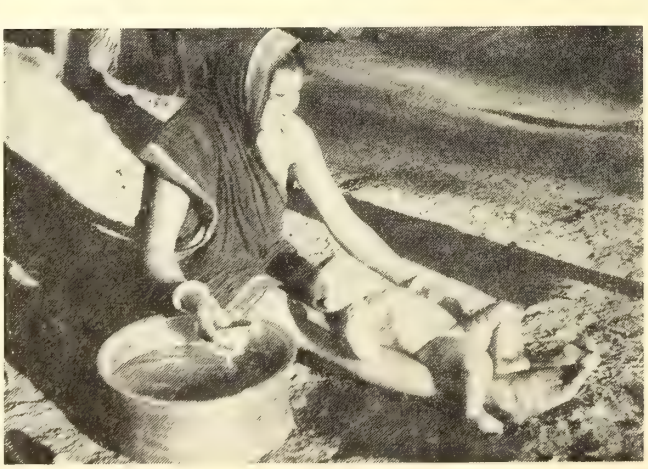
3. India stands on the threshold of two competing cultures—in between the East and the West. She is trying to maintain a non-involvement policy in world politics. In other words here is a place filled with wonderful possibilities for working for world peace, an objective dear to our hearts and to all the world. Our pacifist background and the spiritual basis for our faith in the way of love and brotherhood should be used in the greatest possible way in these days. There is sufficient interest in the principles of non-violence in this country to make acceptable the gospel of peace taught by our Lord if we have the wisdom to present it aright.

4. There is here the challenge of adventure—adventure into the experience of working with and for a new society in the making. Millions of people are in the midst of a revolution—tossed about by many doctrines and philosophies. There is adventure in helping them work out new ways of life. Our old methods of work among them are also under review. New paths are being broken, new approaches to their problems and needs are being sought, new means for building and strengthening the church are being worked out. This is a thrilling time to give one's life and energies in service for the Lord. The areas of churchmanship, evangelism, medicine, social service, agriculture, education, recreation, peace, home-life, are merely some of the challenges which call out the best abilities any of us have.



Dedication required

Without inspired vision and dedication there are difficulties and handicaps sufficient to cause one to become discouraged and hopeless, for the problems are great. At places there is disunity among the Christians themselves; some are immature in Christian faith and experience. Difficulties grow out of administrative policies in effect, and many such things are inevitable drags on the progress one would hope to achieve. Organized opposition to Christian work by a small but vocal and virile group in the country causes concern and difficulties. All these and other problems are, however, not insurmountable. They tend to point up more clearly the needs and cause us to re-examine our premises of faith and action. I can personally say that in spite of the discouragements we face and the odds against which we work, I am thoroughly happy in our work, thrilled with its possibilities, gratified with some response, though at times sobered by rebuffs — yet undaunted in the faith that God is working out His will through the church and those dedicated to that service.

There are those who feel the day of the missionary is rapidly passing. To me this seems a defeatist attitude, demonstrating weakness of vision and faith in the promises of Christ. People here are hungry for the real gospel (the living word) of Christ. If presented in the right way and spirit the gospel is just as attractive as ever before, and just as powerful to save from the sins of our age as of any age. The need is for lives so dedicated to the cause that no kind of hardship—physical, mental, or spiritual—will deter their efforts or dampen their spirits. "A great and effectual door is open to us and there are many adversaries," so said the apostle Paul. The same can be said in our day of India and many other parts of the world. To those who can adapt themselves to the conditions and needs of the day and who are thoroughly dedicated to Christ, there are endless opportunities.

Why Don't We Grow Faster?

Guest Editorial by Moderator A. Stauffer Curry

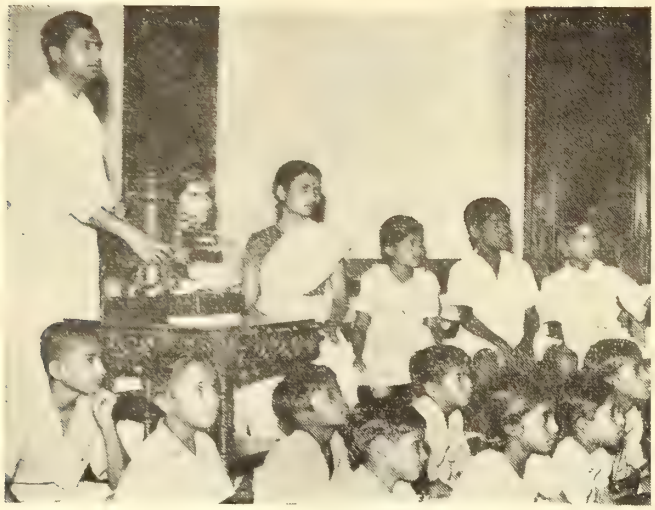
ACCORDING to reliable population figures, released by a may-be-quoted Kiplinger letter, the population of the United States will be 220 million in 1975. It is now 164 million. This would be a 34% increase. Apply this 34% to our church membership and we should reach a membership of 271,154 by 1975. Our present membership is 202,354, according to the last Yearbook. Only about 12,000 of these live outside the United States. In other words, by holding our own offspring for the church we should gain 68,800 members in the next 20 years.

One way to grow is to "hold our own." We lost many thousands in years past by our own youth failing to become members of our church. To prevent a similar loss in the next few decades we should do a much improved job in home evangelism, Christian education, classes in church membership, church recreation, building a fellowship, and the many other things which help hold our youth.

Many have asked, "Why don't we grow faster?" Many reasons are given; one is noted above. Some also say that our traditional plain dress and restricted mode of living over the years have kept us from attracting people to the church. This conceivably might be true, but I would guess our lack of zeal for souls, and perhaps our failure to "make our goodness and simplicity interesting" are larger factors in our failure.

A thoughtful professor once said that our failure to keep up with the early frontiers, while the Methodists sent circuit riders through every forest and across every plain, accounts in part for the rapid growth of the Methodists in contrast to the Brethren. We are older than the Methodists, but one fiftieth as large. The implication is, Let us not fail to keep up with the population trends and shifts in the decades to come. Yet currently our people move to many places where the church is not on hand to greet them, and they are lost to her.

Some have said that our doctrine of nonresistance has kept many from our church. There may be some slight truth to this contention. But one would guess the failure to live consistently with all Christ's teachings kept many more from the church than simply a few so-called distinctive doctrines. In fact, I believe strict and enthusiastic adherance by all our people to all of our tenets and doctrines would bring about phenomenal growth such as we have never known. The world is attracted by integrity and enthusiasm. A complete and enthusiastic following of the total gospel of Jesus Christ will make for growth.



> Surely it cannot be pleasing to God himself if we hold in least esteem those things which are of the greatest moment, while we choose as of higher worth the manifest excesses and the utter anxiety of ignorance, stupidity, indifference.
> Clement of Alexandria

Others have said we lack an evangelical program. There is truth to this, but we have begun a new emphasis on evangelism. It has already borne fruits. But an evangelistic program must be accompanied by an evangelistic spirit. The program must be designed to create the spirit leading to evangelistic activity. A complete realization of Christ in our experience will lead us to tell others. A major reason for slow growth may be in the absence of an evangelistic spirit born of a genuine experience of Christ.

Some have said that the absence of full-time educated ministers through the years is responsible for slow growth. On the whole, full-time ministers should reach more people than those on a voluntary basis. (One is amazed at the vast work done by some "free" ministers, who serve only after work hours and on week ends). With more full-time men now than ever before, we should be launched in a period of new growth.

And others have observed that we do not grow as rapidly as we might because we do not appeal to people who want to see religion made practical. With the coming of a service and rehabilitation program, this objection should be overcome. The development of our service program has attracted many people to the church. It thrills them to see missions, evangelism and education supplemented with practical service.

Some point out that we would grow more rapidly if we would love persons more than we love numbers. Does love of human personalities come first, with the growth of the church a natural outgrowth? Or does concern about growing church organizations come first, with the contacting of people a necessary technique to achieve this growth? The more the leaders and members of the church can develop a primary love of souls, independent of organizational growth, the larger will be the influx of people into the fellowship of the church.

The Changing

"New occasions teach new duties" and so with a new day in India the place of the missionary in the church there is changing.

James K. Mathews

IN THE words of Walter Rauschenbusch, the church is today "set amid the perplexities of a changing order, face to face with a new task." This is nowhere more true than in India. For the "Changeless East" is no longer a proper designation for Asia. It is changing very rapidly and it is in a hurry. Plainly the church must take this into account as it pursues its world-wide mission.

It would be erroneous to simplify the matter by attributing Asian unrest solely or mainly to the onward march of communism. That is only one factor among many others. To many observers it is not the principal nor the most urgent factor in India.

There are a number of other factors. To many Asians continued colonialism or memory of recent experience of it is highly important. Another is the struggle for economic development, a striving for a better life. Still another is a deep urge for equality—that Asians no longer should be regarded as second-class peoples.

Asia's people suffer from wounds inflicted only yesterday by the Western world. Our memories are shorter in this regard than are theirs, so Western man is baffled, because he is not today better received throughout the East which he now confronts with kindlier demeanor than did his predecessors. Americans cannot understand why many Asians do not want to be defended nor participate in defense plans. At a deeper level there is a spiritual struggle between East and West, between Christian ideas and non-Christian ideas, some of which are categorically opposed to each other.

Sometimes we speak of Asia being in revolution. This is true and the term need not carry a bad connotation. In a very real sense the fundamental driving force of Asian revolution is not communism but rather the positive urges for freedom for the better life and for equality which have already been suggested. Moreover, the churches which have helped to release these concepts in Asia bear a responsibility for awakening these basic and quite legitimate drives among people there. Of course, in some areas, as in China, the Communists have misled the people with their specious promises and have corrupted these ends.

India can today be portrayed as a land of change and revolution, engaged in the important activity of nation building. In such a setting the church finds its task. It undoubtedly has an important role to play but it is not always easy to see precisely what its details are. The missionary especially is often perplexed.

Having looked at the background, we may well look at the church itself. Here the tendency may be equally to under-estimate or over-idealize. Christians in India are a minority. Though they number about ten millions that is less than three percent of the population. Moreover they are on the whole desperately poor, so that entire local support of the pastoral ministry is extremely difficult. Most Indian Christians, say eighty per cent, are of lowly "untouchable" origin. Sometimes there is disappointing evidence that some Christians have not moved rapidly enough from their former manner of life. Not more than thirty per cent of them are literate though this is higher than the average for the whole population of India. Most of them live in rural areas, often in widely scattered villages, making adequate pastoral care difficult. Not every Christian is a zealous evangelist; sometimes there is much bickering within the church. Indeed the typical church in India may be more reminiscent of the church at Corinth than at Kokomo, Indiana. This should not be too surprising for in much of India the church is still in its first century.

Executive Secretary, Division of World Missions of the Board of Missions of the Methodist Church

Role of the Missionary

Happily this is not the whole story. It does, however, suggest an unfinished task and the continued need for missionary fellow-workers.

There is another side to the picture. As is well-known, in South India there is a large church of ancient heritage, possibly dating from the Apostle Thomas. Many of the Christians show real maturity. Moreover in nearly every urban center throughout India there are Christian congregations which would compare favorably with an average congregation in the United States. Where pastoral care has been good, the same may be said of numerous village congregations. Some outstanding leaders have emerged; some "saints" have been produced. The church shows amazing vitality in spite of drawbacks. The so-called weakness outlined above may in fact be tokens of kinship with Jesus who was also poor, of lowly origin, at home among the common people. There leaps to mind the words of Paul concerning another church which had among its members "not many wise,—not many mighty, not many noble."

Besides, the Christians exercise an influence out of all proportion to their numbers. One need only refer to the schools, hospitals and other Christian institutions which dot the whole land. Thus an apparently limited, yet potentially influential church confronts a rapidly changing scene in India.

Time was when the missionary was a pioneer beating a path in a "wilderness." If there were Indian workers, they were under the direction of the missionary. This was necessary at the very beginning. Then came a time when the missionary and his Indian colleague worked side by side as "partners in obedience." Let us hope that that period will never be entirely out-grown. In fact, it is nowadays more and more common for the missionary to serve under the direction of the Indian. One missionary who had served in the country for forty years was asked about the most notable change during that period. He replied with approval: "When I first came to this country, at the annual meeting the missionaries did all the talking and Indians remained silent. Now they do all the talking and we remain silent."

Sometimes Americans ask if missionaries are still needed in India. There would be some disagreement among Indians on this question. The most sober-minded non-Christians and Christians too would probably reply in the affirmative. They would then qualify the answer by saying that missionaries of the "right kind" are needed. They would proceed to "spell out" what that meant, not failing to include the quality of Christ-likeness.

If one who has observed the church in India for a number of years may hazard a reply, I would say that well-qualified missionaries are needed for three reasons: (1) to aid in the great unfinished Christian task inside and outside the church; (2) to give spiritual "tone" to the church and to remind it of its evangelistic and missionary obligation; (3) to remind India that the church is not a national organization but that it has a universal character.

By the same token I would argue that we need Christian missionaries too, from India and other parts of the world. They come to us from time to time and do us much good. If the day is coming to an end when the missionary road can be conceived of as bearing only one-way traffic it is becoming more and more apparent that we need each other. The church universal will never outgrow the need of mutual interchange.

The question may also be asked as to whether or not missionaries are wanted in India. On that question, too, the answers would be divided. It is worth pointing out, however, that being wanted and appreciated are unsatisfactory missionary motives. St. Paul was often not wanted; so also was Jesus. If this were the criterion, then the world-wide Christian mission would today be non-existent, for at one time or another it has been evident that in nearly every area missionaries have not been wanted. Only an overwhelming sense that God wants us there is a legitimate foundation for the missionary undertaking.

Certain vocal and active elements in Indian life have made it clear that missionaries are not wanted. The present wave of anti-missionary feeling began in the summer of 1952. For a period of two months that autumn no new missionary visas were granted. Then the pressure eased up, only to be applied afresh in the spring of 1953. Early in April of that year Dr. K. N. Katju, the Home Minister, made a speech in the Upper House of Parliment in which he stated that though medical and educational missionaries were welcome, evangelistic missionaries were not. This touched off a debate that has continued intermittently ever since in Assembly and press.

There is no question but that the tempo of anti-missionary sentiment has increased during recent months. It receives particular stimulus from militant Hindu organizations. Among these are the Arya Samaj, organized during the last century with the aim of reviving Hinduism; the R.S.S., a member of which group assassinated Gandhi; the Hindu Mahasabha, the political party of Orthodox Hindus. Two or three other groups have recently been organized expressly for anti-missionary purposes and to promote shuddhi (cleansing) or reconversion of Christians to Hinduism.

These bodies keep up incessant local agitation; make the most fantastic allegations about missionaries from platform and through newspapers; pose as super-patriots, though their deeds scarcely justify the claim. Much of the press is under control of ardent Hindus.

One naturally inquires as to the reason for all this. The principal reasons are:

Religious News Service

A girl in South India quietly reads her Bible

1. Nationalism. This essentially Western disease has proved highly contagious and it appears today in India in pronounced degree. This is understandable. The presence of foreigners—whether missionary or others—touches the feeling of national pride and self-sufficiency very deeply.

2. Religious Nationalism. In most of Asia nationalism takes a religious turn. These lands have received much from the West and there is a strong tendency to try to preserve the soul of their culture intact. Thus for extremists India is the "land of the Hindus." They are opposed strongly to their country being a secular state.

3. Internal Political Factors. Many Indians fear minorities, for did not the Muslim minority agitate for Pakistan? Each conversion to Christianity is one less Hindu vote.

4. External Political Factors.

American missionaries are especially suspect because of supposed unfriendly attitude of the United States toward India. This factor has been especially evident since the conclusion of the U.S.-Pakistan military agreement, universally condemned in India. Thus American missionaries have in a sense become "whipping boys."

It would be a mistake to picture India as being a-flame today with universal animosity toward Christian missionaries. On the contrary, there is undoubtedly the very deepest appreciation in many quarters for their past and present efforts. To "have a missionary attitude" has a very real and commendable meaning to the Indian mind. If a "Gallup Poll" were taken in India (although this particular form of civilization has not yet reached her shores) there would be registered at least eighty per cent of the opinion favorable to missionaries' presence. Furthermore, even in the midst of much agitation in the press, unfriendliness is seldom encountered on a person-to-person basis, for the average Indian is innately polite and courteous. At high levels of government there have been great efforts to keep the populace steady. Prime Minister Nehru himself has repeatedly showed his friendliness to missionaries and has again and again urged restraint on the part of extremists. He is the champion of the secular state.

On the whole, up to this time the provision in the Indian Constitution for religious freedom has been effective. That specific provision is expressed in the following words: "Subject to public order—all persons are equally entitled to—the right to profess, practice and propagate religion." The government insists that it has made no change of policy officially with regard to missionaries. In practice, undoubtedly the missionaries are being much more carefully screened.

This whole experience has not been entirely unhealthy for the church. Christians have repeatedly risen to defend their own rights and have spoken in behalf of their missionary colleagues. As nearly always is the case, a certain amount of pressure has a purifying effect upon the church. If anything, it has driven Christians to a more whole-hearted devotion to Christ. In a number of areas of India the church is growing today. These events are encouraging also a growth in self-reliance as well as reliance upon God.

In Madhya Pradesh (Central Provinces) the government is investigating conversions in the villages. Village Christians are saying such things as this: "See, we must be important people. They are coming to investigate us. They want to know what we believe. Maybe our Christian religion is important in India. Why else would the Hindu government officials come to us

The Family Counselor welcomes letters of inquiry. They may be addressed: Family Life Department, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Dear Counselor,

This is a matter of health. Do you believe that regular, annual health checkups are important, particularly to older people? We have come to feel so and my husband and I have gone to our regular doctor several times for such. He seems to have the feeling—as I am told many other doctors do—that unless there is actually a pain somewhere, it is better to let well enough alone. Should we insist, or find a doctor who is interested.

Dear Friends,

This is a real problem. We are reminded constantly through the educational processes of the Cancer Society, the Tuberculosis League and other groups interested in the people's health that we should have a complete annual physical checkup. We become convinced that it is wise to do this, as in the case of you and your husband, and we set out to do it.

When we get to the doctor's office, we find often many sick people waiting, some wearing bandages, some with feverish babies on their laps, and others in obvious distress. Here we are without an ache or pain and we begin to feel as though we should not be occupying one of the chairs, that we should not take the time of the already overworked doctor, which is needed for these who are now ill. We quietly get up and leave, all the while remembering that neither cancer nor tuberculosis, in the early stages, hurts nor shows very much. There just doesn't seem to be enough doctors. What shall we do?

Let us not give up too easily. This same busy doctor would probably tell us we are right about having a regular, physical check-up as we grow older. Years pass by so fast, perhaps one every two years would be sufficient, but at least at regular intervals. If we make our appointment far enough ahead, he will surely do his best to take care of our need. On the other hand he may recommend that we go for our check-up to a health clinic which is set up and equipped for such examinations and where they expect people to come for them. Here one need not feel he is out of place or that he is taking time or care that should go to someone of greater need. A good health clinic is a boon in a situation like this.

I should like to suggest too that we avail ourselves of the X-ray service made available by the Tuberculosis League, and the examinations to detect cancer sponsored by the Cancer Society in your community. Prevention is better than cure and early detection makes a cure possible.

I understand it has been a tradition in China for the doctor to be paid more on the basis of his ability to keep his patient well than for his skill in curing him when he becomes sick.

Educational Outlook in Indian Church

Anna M. Warstler

THE MISSION program of the Church of the Brethren in India has laid much emphasis on education from its beginning in 1896. Village primary schools to meet the needs of a rural people were opened everywhere our early missionaries went to work. While no definite figures are available for the number of schools opened and closed from the beginning, yet it can be said that they have been numbered by the scores within a period of fifty-four years. This includes both the language areas of work in the mission. Many times the schools did not produce the expected fruit and so were closed and others opened. But the general trend was a heavy emphasis on primary education until five years ago when the Joint Council of the churches decided to open no more primary schools.

Over above the village primary schools which included the first four years of work, boarding schools for all grades were opened in central places, e.g. Bulsar, Jalalpor, Anklesvar, Vyara, Vali, Khergam, Ahwa, Vada and Dahanu Road. Some of these have been closed through the years as concentration of effort seems more advisable. Because of these boarding schools hundreds of children have been able to complete and graduate from the eighth grade during nearly fifty-eight years of work there.

The Church of the Brethren in India has not opened any high schools but she has encouraged worthy students to go into high school through liberal scholarships. Thus many young people have been able to attend government and other mission high schools. The mission has also provided hostel facilities for any who were worthy and really interested in going on with their education.

The Vocational Training College at Anklesvar has provided many of our young men with the opportunity to get second year teacher training and a three-year approved government course in carpentry. The girls of the mission have been provided scholarships to go to the teacher training colleges of other missions of government colleges, as they chose, with the approval of the educational committee of the mission and Joint Council.

The school of Practical Arts at the Anklesvar Girls' School has laid emphasis upon homemaking courses for girls who did not go into higher education or who wanted the practical help of this course before going on further. This School has also laid emphasis on teaching elementary English in order that girls who desired to do so could go into nurses' training.

The above described educational program has been going on steadily and efficiently in the church in India since its beginning. Thousands of boys and girls, young men and women have been touched by this program and many have completed the courses in very commendable ways and are now serving not only in the church but are in important government and private positions. are the product of the school program in India. Hamilton Satvedi, who is now in America, is another son of our work in India. There are scores of others just like them in India.

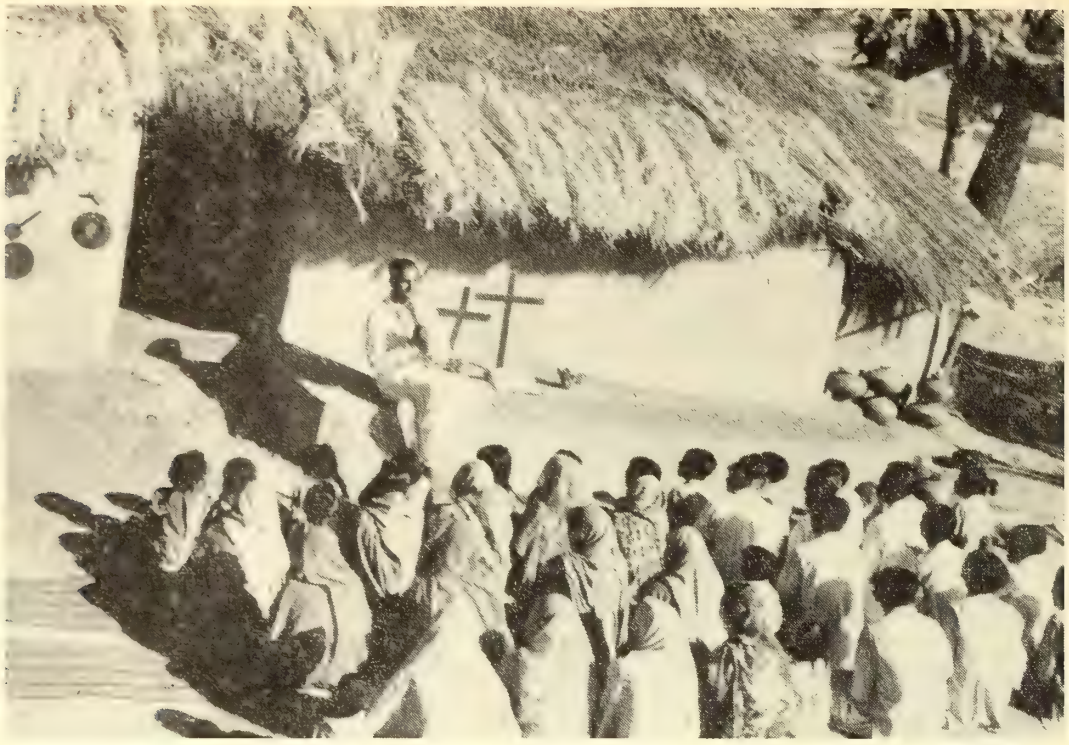
This educational program so long supported by the church has served its day and a new era in educational policies is coming to the front in this great land which has achieved independence. The educational authorities of India feel that primary education is the responsibility of the state, in many places they have taken over the primary schools and are increasingly planning to do so in the future. They too are looking forward to an increased high school and college level program. Since this is true, naturally the direct emphasis which the church has heretofore put upon secular education will be lessened and efforts of the church will be directed into other channels. The new emphasis, which the Joint Council in India is planning, will be centered around the church program directly. Funds and efforts will now be more centered in enriching the church program.

As one evaluates the past program something like the following comes to the foreground. 1. The percentage of literacy has risen among our Christians and their families. The schools have served all castes and creeds as they were willing to take part in the program. 2. Thousands of children in and outside the church have had the advantage of regular Christian instruction. 3. Christian young men and women as well as older people are scattered all over Gujarat and in other parts of India, not only in church positions but government posts. This means a great witness for the church. 4. The peoples of all castes and creeds are appreciative of the good work rendered to them through the school program. On the whole, mission schools have been recognized by the government and have received grant-in-aid. In many places they were the only schools in the village and in the surrounding areas. These are only a few of the values of the educational program heretofore maintained by the church. As we face the future we look in confidence and toward even a richer program full of spiritual values.

Naturally, one of the strongest emphases for the future will be on Christian education for all age-groups of the Christian church. More emphasis will be put on the already established Sunday school. Daily vacation Bible schools will receive increasing attention. Youth camps are becoming a more vital part of the work. Women's rallies are already a very popular gathering for the women of the church. Adult education will receive more attention.



What else does a change of direction or emphasis mean in the church in India? It means that precious time and money heretofore spent in administration and executive work can now be utilized in the work of the church. Who knows better than the missionary the tremendous value of this change?

This is no time for weeping or discouragement in India. It is a day of great challenge—not only to the missionary but to the leaders of the church in India to take up the responsibilities of her increasing membership and the evangelistic program of our Lord. Pray for India—the Church in India, the Church of the Brethren in India—in this great and new day!

Take up your cross, then, both daily and believingly. And all the time be sure to exercise your imagination on your cross. For one thing, imagine yourself in your offensive neighbor's place. Put yourself inside the mind and inside the heart and inside the history and inside all the circumstances of the man who is such a cross to you. For, depend on it, we are all as great crosses to other people as they are to us. He is a hopeless fool who goes on all his life thinking and saying and praying that he is the only injured man and the only insulted man and the only despised man and the only cross-bearing man in all the community.

The Joint Council Plans for

A MOST important political change took place in 1947, whereby our country became independent. We live now in a democracy; and we have to change some of our methods of work to adapt to the times. We are passing through a new age. This is a critical time for the church in India. We are not pessimistic at all; nonetheless much thinking and planning needs to be done to evaluate and re-arrange the whole program of the work in India so that it may proceed without loss.

The Christian work which was carried on by the Mission since 1894, was turned over to the Joint Council in 1946. The Joint Council consists of 21 members elected by both the District Meetings, Gujarati and Marathi. The Joint Council is aware of the changes and trends, and is trying its best to care for the work.

I wish to take this opportunity to explain our plans for the future.

Evangelistic work

Our primary schools have long been considered good agencies for evangelistic work. But since all our primary schools will sooner or later be closed, our attention should be diverted to some other agencies for evangelistic work. Hence it is planned that evangelistic work be carried on directly and entirely through the twenty-five organized churches, and twenty-seven evangelistic centers. A tentative plan has been made regarding the location of the centers. This includes some new "pioneer" areas which have been as yet untouched by the Gospel.

The following types of work may be carried on in the evangelistic centers: "Bible teaching, preaching and selling Christian literature; Sunday schools, worship band, adult education, libraries, kindergarten classes, village improvement, poultry raising, Bible institutes, leadership training classes, laymen's institutes, etc." One cannot prophesy what will be the outcome, but it is hoped that evangelistic interest may be kept and expanded through these centers. It seems to me that more emphasis needs to be put on these centers. We shall learn by experience. The work of the centers will later be reviewed in the light of a few years' experience. It is hoped that the staff at each center will be responsible for religious and social welfare in its vicinity.

Self-supporting Churches

Each organized church should be responsible for the evangelistic work in its area. It is also hoped that they become self-supporting. While the churches' affairs are in the hands of the district meetings, Joint Council has sent a request to the elders' bodies of the district meetings suggesting that all churches should keep pastors. Elders' meetings are also asked to prepare and submit a plan to the district meetings whereby all churches become self-supporting. We sincerely hope and pray that this will be accomplished in the near future. That will enable us to extend evangelistic work in areas where there has been no Christian work, or where there is further need of Christian work.

Educational Work

The Joint Council policy regarding our primary education was adopted some years ago as follows: "To open no new schools in places where government is ready to provide schools; to gradually reduce the number of our village schools and put more emphasis on developing Christian leadership, evangelistic centers, boarding hostels, etc."

In accordance with the abovementioned policy, we closed out schools where the Government or local board authorities opened their own schools. We closed all our primary schools (thirty-five in number) in Surat District by June 1, 1954. It has been decided to close all the village schools in Broach District by June 1, 1955; and if suitable arrangements can be made, all the village schools in Marathi area will be closed or turned over to Government by June 1, 1955. Although our primary schools are closing, the educational activities will not be discontinued entirely. The Vocational Training College, industrial schools, hostels, etc., will be continued.

We have to continue to rethink our educational program and find other patterns of work that will help the church. The need for Christian leadership is no less. In view of that, we plan to keep our hostels for the current year, after which plans for the future will be considered in the light of our experience up to then.

These institutions, to my mind, are quite essential to promote Christian leadership to our village young people. It seems that considerable thinking and planning will be needed to make proper and beneficial use of these institutions. Activities such as regular Bible study, vocational guidance, social improvement, will be carried on regularly.

It is also necessary to provide facilities to assist intelligent, worthy and needy young people to secure higher education. A plan is in operation to award scholarships and to give loans. Our funds are not adequate to fulfill the great need that exists, however.

Increasing emphasis is being placed on Adult Literacy, and village extension services. It is our hope that more people will be able to take advantage of these.

Medical work

Christian Medical services, in the present circumstances, are considered valuable and acceptable to all, Christian as well as nonchristian. There is also a great opportunity for the Christian message through medical work. In view of these and some other factors, the following plan is being made for our medical work: That the Bulsar Hospital become a surgical center; the Dahanu Hospital be continued and a subsidy be given for at least three years; Village Public Health work be carried on through the Rural Service Center, Anklesvar. It is also decided to open two out-centers equipped with qualified Indian medical personnel.

We hold great hopes that the rural health unit will go on tour, throughout the outlying areas, holding meetings, clinics, etc, with a program to improve the whole life, in cooperation with the other phases of the Rural Service Center program.

Christian Education

Now Bible teaching is not allowed in the schools—and most of our primary schools are closed—so suitable ways must be found by which Christian education may be provided to all our children and young people. It requires a careful study to find a proper method. We hope that more attention may be given to Sunday school work. At the same time, we feel the urgent necessity of daily vacation Bible schools. A study is being made as to how to put these plans into operation; still more thinking and planning need to be done on this line. One of the important matters in the field of Christian education is the matter of Bible school education. It is of a great value in these days. The time is such that we have to have more personnel equipped with sound religious knowledge and deep spiritual experience. Time has come that we have to re-think and replan the work of our Bible School. The matter is to be studied prayerfully and carefully.

As I mentioned before, we are passing through a critical time. The Council is aware of it and is very careful as to how to carry out the entire work successfully. We are glad that churches are taking more interest in evangelistic work. It is the desire of many that the church in India may some time in the future be able to carry on the whole work if possible. The church in India is not strong enough to do it, until she gets power from on high. Let us pray that she may be blessed abundantly.

The Changing Role

if they were not afraid of the power of our religion." Christians in an Indian non-Christian society have never been entirely free from a measure of persecution and pressure. Thus God has undoubtedly been preparing them for what may be more difficult days.

It is possible that there will be a gradual reduction of missionaries in India over a period of time. This is not contradictory with what was contemplated from the very beginning of the enterprise there. Fortunately, God has all along been raising up able Indian leaders to engage in the task. One has only admiration for the way in which missionaries have adjusted to these days of transition. As such a process may come about, there are other areas of urgent need to which they may go.

What then are we to do?—(1) We should not be panicky. One recalls that "the Church is an anvil on which many a hammer has been broken." (2) We should not complain bitterly about the Indian government nor seek the intervention of our own. (3) Protest should be registered where possible but this should be done in good spirit and by the churches in India and the National Christian Council there rather than from Boards of Missions far removed from the scene. This is being done. (4) Concerned Christians in India and elsewhere should seek earnestly for what God has to say in the midst of all this. We can rediscover in these events as in so much experience in recent years, that to be Christian is not to be comfortable, but may involve for us, as for our Master, deep suffering which in the end issues forth in resurrection and victory.

Renewal

FLORENCE M. BOLLINGER

"What is in thy hand?" one asked,
And pausing I looked to see.
There were some patches from garments cut,
Some bits of upholsterer's tapestry.
I made of them a blanket warm,
And covered a pillow for rest.

I looked again and saw
A tin of lacquer bright,
And thought
Pantry tins in red and gold, yellow, green and white,
Make a clean and bright sight.
I painted them so.

That blackened stove end, long in use,
Now idly standing in storeroom dim,
Became transformed—
See it gracing a corner, a stool for rest,
Or iron wrought table in silvered crest,
A base of shining lacquered blue.

What can I do with an old felt hat,
Unshapely, battered old felt hat?
I thought of my breakable spectacles,
Of fragile mirror and traveling clock;
And sure enough, in the old felt hat
I found a cover for this and for that.

And so I can think of many a thing,
Trivial, seemingly small,
That with a little thought and work and care,
Put to use
Now fill me with satisfaction rare.

And I believe that the Infinite God
Who maketh all things new,
In his own will can make of me
His instrument joyous and true.

FORTY YEARS IN INDIA

S. Olive Widdowson

THERE have been "high lights" in forty years, but it seems that I have had more to do with keeping the "lower lights burning." The Christian has a Chart; if he starts to deviate from that he gets into endless perplexities. All people have a sense of right and wrong, although their own lives may not conform to it. Where it is not a matter of right or wrong principle, it seems to me one should be slow to decide for others that this is the way or that is not the right way. The people of India were here first, and although they may be illiterate or untrained, they are not without the ability to think and decide for themselves. To show pity or to frown upon their way of doing things is not the way to mutual understanding.

I remember a morning trip with the Bible woman to the edge of the Anklesvar bazaar. We did not have the usual crowd of women and children. Instead of the Bhils—not outcasts, but a people not troubled much about caste—we had a crowd of quick-witted, arrogant Mohammedan boys. I said quietly to the Bible woman, "We had better not stop here now." But she, feeling that was showing the "white feather," started a song in which the name of Jesus occurred frequently. I heard mumblings, "Jesus is not the son of God." They started throwing stones, not at us but not far from us. I started on. The Bible Woman followed, but with a poor opinion of my bravery.

The next morning we had our usual Bhil crowd back. On the edge of the crowd was a fringe of the Mohammedan boys. The Bible woman had carefully selected her song and told the Joseph story. Enjoying both the song and the story, the fringe joined in too, even giving some facts they had learned from their Mohammedan teacher about Joseph. One boy walking beside me said, "I like your story," and I gave him a small book on the men of the Old Testament.

Getting into the lives of people is very necessary. Being able to understand them and having right attitudes toward them helps get the message to the heart. You are like a fish out of water if you cannot understand the conversation around you. But you get ideas across to people in other than spoken words. I was going to a low hill station. Ruth was with me. We took our seats in the Women's Compartment. Ruth, like any child five years old, kept fidgeting and getting a little closer to a high caste lady sitting on the same bench. I noticed the Hindu woman was carefully drawing her Sari around her so that Ruth would not touch it. At once I had Ruth sit at the other side of me, at the end of the seat. Another high caste lady who was evidently getting rid of that great hindrance to progress, caste, said, "Here is a foreign lady taking care of and loving one of our own children and you, a Hindu lady, will not even let your Sari touch her. How will India ever become a free and happy country if we treat our people that way?" But that was 1928. Caste has had some very deadly blows since that, and while it seems to be trying to lift its head again, I think there is too much opposition from India's literate people for it to succeed.

I think the floodlight of Christ's love as manifested in the Gospel is most effective. A heart hardened by the worship of helpless idols and numerous cruel spirits needs softening by the love that never fails and is never exhausted, making a way for the truth to enter. Here is one place where the written Word opens up the mind where the spoken word may close it. The speaker clouds the vision like some substance shuts out the sun. The Bible or a Gospel and a song book should be in every Christian home. Some like the English songs, and they should have them, but the Christian thought to Indian tunes is generally more helpful. There must be a strong, united effort to give Christian instruction to the child in the home if the Christian church in India is to increase in strength. The Bible class in the school is a thing of the past. There is regular Christian teaching in the hostels, but the natural place for the child first to realize that God is love, that he cares for us, and that he never fails is in the home.

The Christian church in India is answering today, "Christianity is not a foreign religion. Our Savior and Master was born in Asia, and we are following the Master who went about doing good. He enables us to be helpful to our country." India needs the spirit of the Lord to make her truly free.

I am thankful for the joy of a long service in India. Until the call comes, wherever I am and as He gives me opportunity, I shall continue that service.

E., Washington, D.C. A program of special interest is being planned to acquaint adults with their government and to learn what Christians can and should do in the area of political action. Preregistration ($4.00 for both phases, $3.00 for Washington phase only) should be made with the Elgin office if possible. Churches should choose their representatives now and encourage lay men and women to attend. Write: Brethren Service Commission, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

News and Comment From Around the World

Most Members Approve Interracial Churches

A study of some 13,597 churches of three major Protestant denominations over the past four years has shown that the average American church member is not opposed to racially inclusive congregations either in theory or in practice. The survey conducted by the National Council of Churches department of racial and cultural relations showed that in 405 churches having minority group members in their combined congregations of 237,000 persons, only twenty-six members left their church because the congregation was expanded to include a nonwhite person. And in every instance of appraisal after the departure of the objector, the minister reported "increased spiritual insight, greater warmth of fellowship or greater human assets to the life and work of the congregation."

Corporation Will Help Mennonite Communities

Ten businessmen in the United States and Canada have organized the Mennonite Economic Development Associates in order to strengthen Mennonite communities in Latin America through projects in industry and agriculture. The new group is an outgrowth of the visit of several businessmen to South America in 1951. Two projects set up in cooperation with Mennonites in Paraguay already have been approved. One is intended to improve the dairy industry in the Paraguayan Chaco through demonstration of better methods. The other is to process hides into finished leather.

Protest Visit of Soviet Churchmen to West Germany

The head of the Russian Orthodox church in Western Germany recently sent a telegram to Chancellor Adenauer warning against visits of Soviet Orthodox dignitaries to the West German Federal Republic. He claimed that the Orthodox church in the Soviet Union is being used as a political tool for the Communist world revolution. His warning followed an announcement by Pastor Martin Niemoeller, foreign secretary of the Evangelical Church in Germany, that leaders of several West German churches were considering inviting representatives of the Russian Orthodox church in the Soviet Union to visit West Germany. Dr. Niemoeller said that the World Council had called upon the churches of countries among which tensions prevail to promote peace and reconciliation by arranging exchange visits.

New Hymnal Published for Japanese Christians

The Christmas season saw the publication of a new Japanese hymn book. Five years ago a Hymnal Commission was asked to make a study of the hymnal. In the new book 155 of the older hymns have been replaced by 117 new ones. The trend has been to include more Japanese Christian hymns. The most controversial aspect of the new publication which may stand in the way of its rapid adoption is that the Japanese words are printed across the page from left to right instead of the usual top to bottom system.

Youth Week Project Seeks Books for Africa and Asia

"Books instead of bombs" became a major project of hundreds of Christian youth councils throughout the nation during the observance of Youth Week January 30 to February 6. Recognizing the almost unbelievable shortage of books that exists in Asia and Africa the United Christian Youth Movement called on youth to unite in collecting books "to meet the cry of needy people of other lands for truth, knowledge and the Word of God." Bibles, Testaments, Biblical commentaries, Sunday-school reference books, church history books, young people's and children's books, good fiction, written from the Christian viewpoint were sought.

Hutterites Have "Fastest Growing Population"

Hutterites, descendants of a religious group of some 443 persons who migrated to this country from Russia in the 1870's, now number more than 8,500 and are the world's "fastest growing population," according to the Population Reference Bureau. The agency said the Hutterite rate of natural increase (difference between the birth and death rates) is 41.5 per 1,000 as compared to 13.9 for the whole United States.

A 1951 report by the U. S. Public Health Service's National Institute of Mental Health said that severe mental illness is rarer among Hutterites than virtually any other group in the country. A study of the sect showed only one suicide, one divorce and two separations recorded since it came to this country eighty years ago, and there have been no known cases of parental abandonment of children, no sex crimes and no incidence of arson, personal violence or attempted homicide.

The Hutterite colonies are completely agricultural, with a smattering of trades and crafts vital to farm life. Life within the colonies is on a communal basis with all property held in common. Hutterites are known for their thrift, general prosperity, remarkable farming skill and their strict adherence to the most extreme simplicity of living, but the sect's beliefs have involved it in many difficulties with local governments in both the U. S. and Canada. These troubles arose over their refusal to take oaths, engage in military service of any kind or send their children to public schools.

Church Agencies Send Food Parcels to Yugoslavia

Some 200,000 food parcels shipped to Yugoslavia from the United States by church agencies were distributed to needy people throughout the country during the holiday season. One-half of the parcels were sent on behalf of the World Council of Churches by Church World Service, and the other by Lutheran World Relief through its American offices. Distribution of the parcels was supervised by the Yugoslav Red Cross under an agreement with Lutheran World Relief and the World Council's Department of Inter-Church Aid and Refugee Service.

Church Workers Report Religious Revival Among Kenya Natives

Victory in the battle to overcome the murderous Mau Mau secret society that has terrorized Kenya Colony since 1952 is sensed by church workers here who report an "overwhelming" religious revival among natives throughout the colony in recent months.

The spiritual resurgence is accompanied by an unprecedented demand for Bibles, hymnals, Testaments, tracts and church services. This is credited to a concerted drive begun late last year in which the Kenya Christian Council as well as other Protestant bodies not affiliated with it, the Roman Catholic Church and the Kenya government all are participating.

Religious workers who have been carrying the moral drive to detention camps, fortified jungle villages and the native sections of Nairobi itself, which is constantly teeming with a fluid population of around 90,000 Africans of many tribes, report surprising success among the 70,000 Kikuyu, Embu and Meru tribesmen confined behind barbed wire in camps and prisons.

Nairobi itself remains, perhaps, the toughest problem churchmen face in the battle against the Mau Mau appeal. The eastern edge of the city is a vast area teeming with natives living in everything from slums to neatly-planned modern housing projects.

To combat the problem, the Christian Council, the Nairboi City Council and the Kenya government have evolved several plans. Community centers are being opened in various parts of the native section at a cost of up to 12,000 pounds each. Each center has, or will have, a hall, class and recreation rooms, showers and a canteen, and each is aimed at the reconstruction of family life, seriously disrupted by the Mau Mau fear and superstition, and the development of a community spirit.

Eventually there will be seventeen such centers, two built by Roman Catholic organizations, six by Protestant and the rest by the city council. Three of the latter already are completed. (RNS)

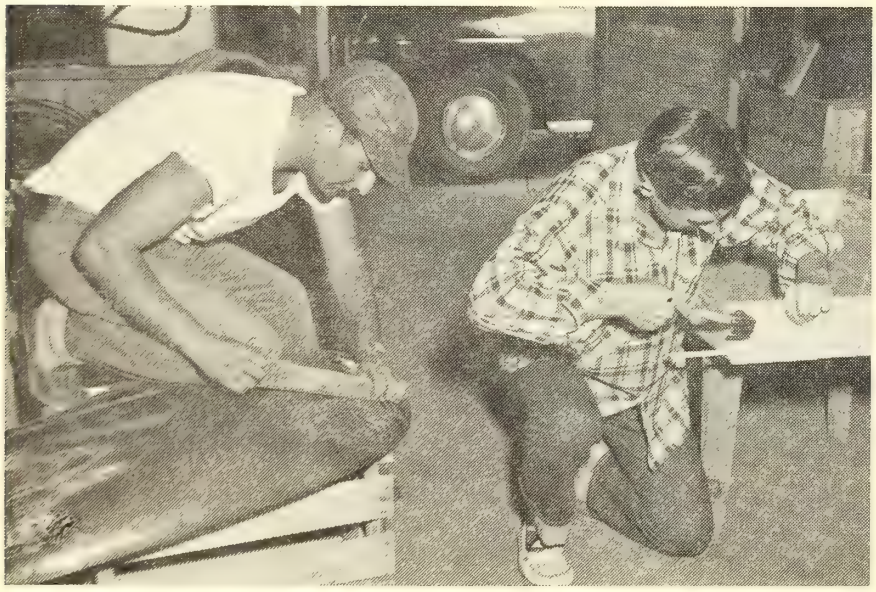
Social Action Report

Ora Huston, Director



This report was prepared and presented to the General Brotherhood Board at its November meeting.

ALTERNATIVE SERVICE

This year, as last, the alternative service program has occupied the major portion of the Social Action Department. The number of men in alternative service has reached what is probably the peak of the peacetime conscription. Since conscientious objectors were not drafted between 1948 and 1952, there was somewhat of a backlog which has been cleared up by now. During the year, 1953-54, the Selective Service System has indicated that farm deferments are no longer essential since there is such a large surplus of agricultural commodities. We had thought that the number coming into Brethren volunteer service during the coming year would probably be less than previously, but because of the cancellation of many farm deferments, it now appears that we will have more coming into the program this year than during the last year.

At the present time there are 250 men in Brethren Service projects and we helped a large number to secure employment in non-Brethren projects. At the present time, 105 men have completed their service and have been discharged from the Brethren Service program. Others are being discharged all the time.

Several new projects during the past year for alternative service men have proved to be quite interesting and worthwhile. Time magazine for September 27, 1954 carried a rather lengthy article on the activities of the Public Health Service at Bethesda, Maryland. While it mentions Quakers as well as Brethren, all of the members of the project have been furnished by the Brethren Service Commission to date.

Two alternative service men, assigned to the Brethren Service project in Falfurrias, Texas, work in the shop. About 250 1-W's now serve in Brethren Service projects

During the summer, the department director had the opportunity of conducting the European work camp tour and visiting alternative service and Brethren volunteer service projects in most of the European areas. I found that they are doing a fine piece of work. They seem to be happy in their work, and from the best information I could secure from the surrounding communities, they are making a very fine witness for peace and the Christian way of life.

BRETHREN VOLUNTEER SERVICE

The Brethren volunteer service program has continued at a high level and some of the finest young people in our church are entering the program. There have been 626 volunteers who have served since the program began in 1948. There are eighty-one serving at the present time on current projects. A number of intermediates are applying well in advance of the time they will be old enough to go into the program. This seems to be a very fine trend and we hope the time will come when most of the young people of the Church of the Brethren can give a year or more in some service project, demonstrating Christian good will. The National Council of Churches has called on the volunteer service program to assist with the American Indian School, Brigham City, Utah.

SUMMER SERVICE

This program has not been as large as in previous years. When you consider the effect of the draft, the alternative service program and our regular Brethren volunteer service program calling for the services of our young people, it is not surprising that there are fewer going into the summer work camp program. This last year there was a total of ninty-five working in summer service projects in the United States.

GENERAL

Several bills have been introduced into Congress to enact Universal Military Training. They will probably be reintroduced at the beginning of the new session. The present Selective Service Act expires in June, 1955 and there will likely be some new draft legislation. Now is a good time to work against all phases of conscription and plans are being made to oppose it in every possible way.

With increased tension and we hope progress in the field of race relations, we trust that the endeavors in this area have been helpful toward a Christian solution to this very great problem. Our work continues with the Negro-migrant community in Fresno, California, and the slum clearance in the Negro community in Baltimore, Maryland. Brethren volunteer service workers also work with the Chinese in Chicago, with the Mexicans in Falfurrias, Texas, and the American Indians in New Mexico and Utah. A number of Negroes took part in the summer service projects and we continue to have contacts with them in a number of areas.

It is the feeling of the Director of Social Action that we have not yet reached our possibilities in the field of interracial work and that we should look forward to increased activity in this area during the coming year.

Letter of Thanks

"I received the package with great joy (T B food package) and would like to express to you my heartfelt thanks for the nice gift which I can use very well. I am twelve years old and have no parents. I have two sisters, aged thirteen and eighteen years. For two years we have been without our parents. Our dear mother died two years ago from tuberculosis and our father did not return from the war. We would have been completely alone in the world if our good uncle would not have taken us to his home. Yes, life is indeed very hard, but despite hardships one can manage to live on; one only needs courage, a strong will and faith in the Lord.

"Our Lord helps everywhere and at any time in the greatest hardship. So we want to thank you once more for the nice gift of food which we enjoyed very much.

"May our heavenly father bless all those who work in your Mission and who care for us and are helping to relieve our needs. Many, many heartfelt thanks once more. I remain with a heart filled of happiness your good girl, Kathi Winkler, Camp Haid."

This letter was received by the Brethren Service Commission in Austria.

At Home and Abroad

AUSTRIA

Frau Dr. Fuss, refugee nurse in the Linz clinic, reports the following happenings in the Refugee Health Program within the week ending November 27. Thirteen patients visited the eye-clinic to be fitted and receive eye-glasses. A mothers advisory class was held in Camp Steyr with twenty-six mothers attending. Food for twelve camp kindergartens was weighed out and packaged.

Three hundred twenty-one food packages were distributed to tubercular endangered refugee children for the month of December. This is the second package the children have received in what will be a six month joint Brethren-Mennonite project. A mother of six children, three of whom are receiving these packages told how helpful and nutritious the 16 lb. package was and said, "when the children asked from whom the package came it was difficult to convince them that there are people in this world who are willing to help others."

Church World Service has shipped to Brethren Service fifteen thousand pounds of butter and thirty-five thousand pounds of cheese, coming from U. S. surplus goods. The Brethren Service Commission askings for Austria for 1955 total sixty tons of butter, cheese, dried milk, shortening and cottonseed oil. In addition to this ten per cent of regular contributed goods sent from American churches to Austria through Church World Service and the World Council of Churches Service to refugees will be allocated to BSC.

CASTANER, PUERTO RICO

The Castaner Church of the Brethren was represented at the Eighth Annual Protestant Youth Conference of Puerto Rico, by five delegates. Delegates were invited from 300 churches, but the attendance was less than 200. As one delegate reported "although the meetings were held in Spanish, the Youth Conference was very similar to those held in the states. The Puerto Rican youth face many problems, and many of the delegates went home with new perspectives because of the Christian fellowship and enthusiasm which was expressed at this great meeting."

GERMANY

Recently Brethren Haus was host to a group of twenty-five from the Jakob Grimm's School for Girls. The girls were seventeen and eighteen year olds and members of an English class in the school. Upon their arrival, tea was served and an introduction was given about our church beginning, Brethren Service and our work here in Europe. Following this Max Snider and Doris Walbridge led the group through the house, explaining the different programs, and in conclusion showed them slides of the various phases of our work here in Germany.

HEIFER PROJECT

During the month of November, the Heifer Project Committee was able to make a total of five shipments, which is an unusual accomplishment. These shipments included a shipment of 25,000 baby chicks for Haiti.

Who are these Refugees for whom assurances are being filed—and for whom more assurances are needed?

They are farmers, teachers, mechanics, doctors, aged parents, little children, couples—just people like yourself, from all walks of life. Some are large families, some are single or widowed, others haven't a living relative left. They are Christians, mostly Protestant and Orthodox, and a few of other faiths.

Guiding Inactive Members Into Service

John H. Good
West Alexandria, Ohio

IT IS an easier matter to win people into the church than it is to keep every one of them actively engaged in a truly spiritual growth and real Christian living" is a statement made by the author on several occasions when speaking of church membership. No doubt this statement calls for a defense or a withdrawal. The writer does not propose to do either, because there is a challenge in this statement which calls for some very definite and prayerful thinking.

Here are some of the short cut answers that are often given when we find individuals in our churches who seemingly do not grow in their Christian experience, and who, instead of going forward seem to be going in reverse: a lack of true conversion; the individual was not immediately given something to do in the church and thus lost interest; the church failed to draw the individual into its true fellowship; the individual grew cold and indifferent because he or she was attracted by too many other interests; etc. Then there is an excuse that the individual may use as his reason for not growing and becoming active in the program of the Christian life. He may say, "Christian profession did not do for me what I thought it would do. I have just as many troubles and temptations as I had before I made a profession."

We do not feel that such answers fully satisfy, for these statements may represent true facts, but they are not in themselves the whole truth. It is unlikely that any one of these statements could be the one single reason. However, it may be right to say that in each there is represented a factor which may play some part in the whole truth of the matter.

Concerning one of the above statements it should be said that no matter what the causes may be for retarded Christian growth the fault does not rest with the Author of Eternal Life, for it is essential that we remember the words of the Apostle Paul when he said, "Being confident of this very thing, that he who began a good work in you will perfect it until the day of Jesus Christ" (Phil. 1:6 ASV) A person making a Christian profession may have conceived some faulty ideas as to the power of our Lord to change life, unless the individual really wants life changed. Christianity is no peculiar magic that changes the world's conditions around us, but rather a power that changes the individuals within the world's environment. Temptations are with us to stay, but the individual and his Lord are a majority. Temptation cannot over-rule when "God and I walk through the fields together."

Minrod

A serious-minded church board carefully analyzes the problems confronting it and then carefully plans a course of action

Inactive members—problem members

Now going back to the original thesis, may we examine it in light of our general church experience. Where is the church that, within the framework of its structure, does not have some "dead timber?" Though possibly not a proper designation, these two words, "dead timber," have been quite often used to signify that there are enrolled within the church membership those who are not contributing factors to the ongoing program of the church and the kingdom of God. They are not growing in grace and the knowledge of truth as the Lord intended that we should grow. They, like members of the Sardis church in the Apostle John's day, have a name that they live but are dead. But do not these descriptive statements characterize all too many of us?

So, instead of visualizing individuals as such, out on the fringes of our churches, may we instead try to visualize the whole spiritual status of our churches—looking upon them and their memberships as living organisms, as bodies, as buildings, as fellowship groups. Each and every member of the church is an integral part and all together they constitute the whole. Thus if any part thereof is ailing, or sick, weak, crippled, or dying, then the whole body is ailing, sick, weak, crippled or dying to that degree. Within our physical bodies we are quickly aware of any condition that produces nausea, a pain, or any other unhealthy condition.

"Dead timber" within the framework of the church's structure may indicate poor workmanship as well as a condition of the material. Any structural material lying on the heap is certainly out of its place, for there is a place for every piece within the framework. Two things could happen in a case like this. The piece could be perfectly happy to be unused or the workman could be very careless in his building. Neither of these two results are within the design of the Master Architect. Unused materials and careless workmanship always help to defeat the Master's plan.

Disinterest, indifference or waywardness within the church is church sickness. We should so consider it. And further, none of us should be satisfied with our own efforts in Christian living as long as such conditions exist, and none of us should ever absolve ourselves from the responsibility of doing something about it.

A local church meets the challenge

Facing these facts as they seem to present themselves to us, we have tried to think the whole matter through and have taken the following steps in an endeavor to remedy the condition as much as can be done through human eflort. Trusting to the guidance of the Holy Spirit and with the willingness to be led and directed by our Lord, our local church has inaugurated the following program of action.

Five class groups have been instituted into our present church program with a sixth being definately planned. The five classes have an enrollment and enlistment of fifty-two persons and go under the following designations: Spiritual Life class, enrolling the local ministers and deacons; Fellowship Cultivation class, enrolling nine carefully selected persons from the church, the chief usher and the remembrance committee; Christian Stewardship of Life class, enrolling the church treasurer, the treasurers of the adult classes, of Men's Work, Women's Work and the CBYF; Christian Education class, enrolling the general and primary superintendents, the Sunday-school secretary and the class teachers; Church Program class, enrollig the heads of departments, such as Men's Work, Women's Work and the CBYF, and directors of peace, temperance, missions, family life, etc. and the presidents of the adult and junior high Sunday-school classes.

These classes are all study, prayer, and promotional classes which meet on consecutive Sundays during the Sunday-school hour and are under the direction of the pastor and the supervision of the Sunday-school Board (Board of Christian Education). Thus it takes five Sundays for one round of the classes, with one class meeting each Sunday. In the meanwhile members of these classes continue their study and attempt to carry out some matter of promotion within the range of the specific study of the class of which each is a part.

The sixth class is a membership class which will meet at various set intervals during the year and the class work will be conducted weekly or twice a week for six or eight sessions, conditioned by the seasons and the prospects for such a class.

These are the steps which we are undertaking in our local church to remedy the matter of a constantly growing list of inactive members (added to over the years). We have launched this program with the belief that the list of inactive members can, by our prayerful efforts and by the help of the Lord, be dissolved to the very minimum. All souls are precious in the sight of God, and it is essential that we not only win people into the church, but must likewise keep all growing and active in the ongoing program of the Kingdom of God. Let us pray earnestly that none shall be lost.

We believe that such prayerful efforts will bear fruit. The first fruitage which we can expect is a growing sense of our individual responsibility and an increasing interest on the part of all in behalf of the spiritually ailing, the sick, the crippled, the dying within the ranks of the church. Never let it be said within or without the ranks of the church what was once said according to Biblical account, "No man careth for my soul." (Psa. 142:4. ASV)

WHAT ABOUT YOU?

In the November Brethren Bible Study Monthly C. Ernest Davis challenged the Sunday-school superintendents with the following message:

"Tag! You're it." And you were it. The responsibility of carrying on was on you. Yes, you remember how it worked in your childhood games. Do you realize that the church has tagged you for a very important job and that the responsibility rests squarely on your shoulders? That job is Sunday-school superintendent. You are it. You are the only one of your kind in your church and there will not be any other—at least not this year. What is done in that office, you will have to do. No one else can do it. You have been tagged for the job. You are it and there is none other. When one realizes the moral implications of every phase of life—government, business, education, industry, agriculture, etc.—and how the decisions made and the actions taken in all these areas affect the lives of millions of people, then he begins to realize how important it is that people be guided by sound moral principles and that there be an effective and unceasing program of moral and spiritual instruction. Giving that basic instruction is what a church school is for. Our social order cannot survive unless the work is well done. You are responsible for what happens in your school this year. You are the superintendent. No other occupies or can occupy your position while you hold it. So do your best.

Everyone else in the church school, then, is playing in the game. What obligations rest upon the participants? First of all, there must be cooperation if the ultimate goals are to be achieved. Good sportsmanship must be practiced, so no one shirks duties assigned to him. Enthusiasm and eagerness for the game and its benefits must be exerted if all enjoy the game to the fullest.

What about you? How do you play the game?

Though the patient had lost much blood the skill of the doctor and the prayers of the medical attendants saved him

An African Christian Spoke His Mind

Violet Pfaltzgraff

I SHALL never forget a busy Monday two years ago in October. Monday is market day in Lassa and people come from the neighboring villages to buy and sell.

We could hear the hum of the buying and selling in our dining room as we ate our rather hurried noon meal. After we finished eating the doctor made preparations to go to Bizinda, a leprosy settlement opened recently. And I gathered my books and notes together to go to the hospital to have a class on survey of the Bible with the medical attendants.

But this particular Monday the boys were not in the classroom waiting for me as usual. I saw them standing in various places in the compound talking together. I went to the classroom and copied an outline onto the blackboard. I thought the boys would be in soon.

However, I finished my outline and waited a while and the boys did not come in. So I went out to them. I approached Ali, who was perched on top of a high sand pile, and asked him what was going on. Ali was listening to the noises in the village. He turned reluctantly to answer my interruptions. There was a fight in the village. It was about a woman.

"I hope that no one gets seriously injured," I said, "For the doctor has gone to Bizinda."

From his post on top of the sand pile, Ali seemed to be able to know just what was going on. A little later he informed me that someone was killed.

"They are bringing him up to the hospital," Ali informed me at last.

"Who are they bringing to us?" I asked, for all I could hear was a babel of noises.

"They are bringing Malam Wadzani. He is dead."

Bible class was forgotten. The hospital workers who were standing at various places on the compound, began to congregate at the hospital entrance where the patient would be brought. When I saw the group from the village approaching in the distance, I got on my bike and went to meet them. Nggari, one of the medical attendants, followed on foot.

I shall never forget the shock I had when I met that group. I always thought, that all men were my brothers. That day I saw that what I said was a belief of mine only because that is what we were taught in Sunday school. Brotherhood now seemed to be quite different and not as easy. It was something that began in the heart—not in the head—something that called for sacrifice.

I went up to the patient who was supported on the shoulders of his kinsfolk. When I looked at the supposedly dead man, he, sensing that a stranger was there, opened his eyes and looked at me. As our eyes met I realized that he was no stranger but a brother—as much as any of my blood brothers.

I got off my bike and gave it to Nggari for him to go and call the doctor. I hoped that something might have prevented his leaving for Bizinda, nine miles away.

There was a mob following the group with the patient, but I did not realize that until we had the patient in the operating room. For while Nggari went to call the doctor, the surgical staff got the patient ready and began to set up sterile tables and the apparatus for giving intravenous saline. We have no blood bank or plasma in Lassa.

Stephen, the head medical attendant, came into the surgery to see if there was anything he could do. After him followed the rest of the medical attendants. I saw that we had to give them something to do if we would keep our sterile field uncontaminated by the group.

I took Stephen aside and told him that I was afraid that Wadzani would die. He had lost much blood. I could get neither pulse nor blood pressure reading on him. Unless God worked a miracle, we would lose Wadzani. There was nothing for them to do but pray. My eyes filled when I looked out of the surgery window and saw the medical attendants filing down to the classroom. I saw a few teachers follow them. They were going there to pray.

Then we had trouble with the mob from the village. They had congregated on the veranda of the surgery. Now they opened the surgery doors and in a wave entered the surgery. Telling them that the doctor could not work if they fill the room so that he could not get in, we pushed them out again. But the mob was impatient and curious. Finally, we were relieved to hear the put-put of the doctor's motorcycle and we knew that he would soon be there.

After surgery, and a long stormy time of convalescing, our brother recovered and again was returned to the church and village. But when he was still recovering, in his illness, he would say things about my fellow missionaries and the African Christians which he would not have said had he been well.

As his sister, I knew that he spoke of things that lie in the African heart but which a well African would not disclose to a foreigner. I was made to see myself as the Margi sees me. And it did not make me feel proud or comfortable. For things that I thought no one noticed or knew about were important in the eyes of these young Christians. If ever I had a course in missionary orientation it was there by the bedside of my sick brother.

Meet Your Missionary

Irven Fike Stern

Don L. Stern
Oklahoma City, Okla.

Irven Stern was born March 8, 1928 at Fredericksburg, Iowa. He is the son of Elder Roy and Ethel (deceased) Stern. His father served for a number of years as a farmer-minister. Father and mother believed in foreign missions and followed with keen interest the activities of their missionary friends.

It appears that a number of things influenced Irven in his decision to become a missionary. No doubt the Christian influence of his parents is one of the most important factors. Many prayers in behalf of missionaries and their work came from the hearts of father and mother. It was not unusual to have guests in the home. Among those guests were visiting missionaries who had come to speak at the Fredericksburg church.

Once the late Frank Crumpacker came on the very day that the Sterns were threshing oats. Brother Crumpacker soon found a circle of men around him asking questions and eagerly listening as the told about conditions in China. The threshing could wait.

One day father brought Dan West home. Dan had recently returned from Spain. He told of the filth, hunger and disease in Spain. One of the crying needs was soap. Another need was dairy cattle to provide milk for hungry babies.

Sadie Miller gathered members of the family around the piano one evening and taught us to sing, "The Great Physician Now is Near," in the language of the people she had been serving on the mission field. These people made a lasting impression upon Irven's young mind.

Summer camp had its influence upon Irven's desire to become a missionary. One summer Harold and Gladys Royer were at Camp Pine Lake. They had recently returned from Africa. Irven was greatly impressed and deeply moved with "Red's" story of the crying need for young men and women who are willing to give their life in service among the black people of Africa.

Richard Burger was one of the young leaders at Camp Pine Lake during those formative years of Irven's life and Irven learned to know and love Dick. Although Dick was still a student at McPherson College he had already decided to go to Africa.

Irven graduated from high school in the spring of 1946 and enrolled at McPherson College the next fall. During his second year at McPherson College he met a lovely young girl named Pattie Bittinger. Her parents, Desmond and Irene Bittinger, had been missionaries to Africa. In fact Pattie was born in Africa. She was enthusiastic about missions and encouraged Irven in his ambitions to go to the mission field. It was not long until they began to make their plans together. In June of 1950 Irven married Pattie Bittinger and what once seemed to be a childhood dream looked more and more like reality. After finishing their work at McPherson College they enrolled at Bethany Biblical Seminary.

When asked how he came to choose the mission field as his life's work Irven replied, "Like my experience of becoming a Christian, my call to the mission field has been a gradual process, the Timothy type. During the past ten years it has seemed that the mission field was my destination. Everything has seemed to point in that direction.

"I really never thought much of going anywhere except to the Africa field. My early ambitions were to go to Africa. I have read much about Africa and missions there. I have learned to know quite a number of the Africa missionaries. I have heard Pattie's parents tell about Africa."

If everything goes as planned, Irven, Pattie and their daughter, Gayle, will find thmselves in Nigeria, West Africa early in 1955. Their dream of being foreign missionaries will have become a reality!

Nicholas Garden Church

A Center of Christian Activity

IN THE summer of 1945 a dream was born in the hearts of a few courageous members of the Church of the Brethren that a new church should be established in the rapidly growing city of Springfield, Oregon. After prayerful consideration a decision was approved by the district board of administration to establish a church in the Nicholas Garden Community, then just east of the city of Springfield. By June 1946 the first unit of the present church building was dedicated. This was a small chapel which also provided limited church school facilities.

The little group outgrew this first unit almost by the time it was completed. Immediate steps were taken to plan and construct the remainder of the present building. Forrest Groff, at present building counselor for the Brotherhood, who lived in the community, did much to guide the planning and building of the Nicholas Garden church. At present there is an adequate sanctuary that has accommodated more than 250 worshipers, a church parlor, a fellowship hall, kitchen, youth chapel, pastor's study and twelve adequate church school rooms. Adjoining the church is a splendid three-bedroom parsonage. These facilities were made possible through the sacrifice and efforts of the members and friends of the church, plus the generous help of the General Brotherhood Board in the form of a grant of $15,000 and a loan of $7,500. The loan is being paid back on schedule by this thriving congregation. The sanctuary was first used on Sept. 7, 1947, and the educational wing was ready for use in 1948. Much of the work has been done by the members and friends of the church.

Forrest Groff was elected as the first pastor with James Parks serving as his assistant. In September 1947 Lee Nelson became the first full-time pastor and served the church until the fall of 1953.

During this time the church won its way into the life of the community and has had a very great influence in the individual and total life of the community. From its inception, the church has sincerely endeavored to be the center of Christian activity and influence in the Nicholas Garden area and not just another denomination, seeking to compete for church members with other denominations. From the beginning the church has sought to become the focal point around which the total life of the community moves. An honest effort has been made to meet the total mental, social and spiritual needs of every individual whether they attended the church, some other church or no church at all.

The church soon became the place where the community came to discuss and solve its common problems and desired improvements. While the church has been careful not to take sides in most issues considered, it has been instrumental in having both sides of every question fairly represented. After the facts had been presented, the citizens of the community made their decisions. Some of the common problems successfully solved in this manner have been the annexation of the Nicholas Garden community into the city of Springfield, the installing of sewers, the installing of a new water system, the covering of a dangerous open drainage ditch, the paving of the streets in the Nicholas Garden community, and other community improvements. Each year preceding election time, public forums are held in the church to discuss the important measures on the ballot. This influenced the percentage of the people who voted from the church precinct as well as sensitizing the conscience of the people as to the real meaning and importance of the measures on the ballot.

Other problems that were common in this new and expanding community were the lack of supervised play and activity for the large number of children, the lack of club and scouting activities, the need to free the mothers of small children for at least one afternoon a week from the constant responsibility of their young families and a means for the many new migrants to become acquainted with one another and to form a sense of community loyalty and to provide employment and housing for new folks moving into the area.

These were met as best they could be with limited resources and leaders of this small but vitally concerned group. Early the church sponsored both Boy Scout and Girl Scout troops and provided leadership and supervision for their activities.

A plan was worked out to conduct a supervised play and craft program on the church courtyard and in the fellowship hall. This began as a one-afternoon-a-week activity and grew until for the past four summers, it has been a five-day-a-week, adequately guided and supervised program which has accommodated as many as 100 children each day.

A community play school for preschool youngsters which originally met for one afternoon a week has grown into a community kindergarten which is taught by an approved and accredited teacher five days a week during the school year.

Contacts with various businesses in the community have enabled the church to help more than twenty-five men to find permanent employment. Similar contacts with people owning real estate have enabled the church to assist several families in finding homes. The church continues to render these and many other significant services in the life of the community.

Because of its Christian witness and impact upon the community, the businessmen and the city officials often come to the church for counsel in business and civic problems and proposals.

Actually the Nicholas Garden church is the only church in a ten-mile area that is seeking honestly and sincerely to be a community church and not a denomination. Already folks from throughout this area have become active in the work of the church. At present there is a real need for a second and even a third church school to be established in this area to serve the needs of the people that are not being served by those churches which are seeking only to advance and promote a particular denomination. If we have the resources and the wisdom to use wisely the opportunity which

God has given us we should have two or three churches of 500-700 members in this area within the next ten years.

Many have been concerned about the effect on our Brethren ideals and practices. They have feared that they would be lost in such a community approach. Let me reassure you the words of Jesus are true, "He who seeks to save his life will lose it; he who loses his life in something greater (the kingdom of God) will find it." The church is much stronger in its peace position, its stewardship witness, its evangelistic witness, its observing of the Lord's Supper and the practicing of Christian baptism than many of our older and larger churches. We have not stressed our Brethren heritage nor our Brethren peculiarities, rather we have talked of our Christian heritage and the uniqueness of the Christian message. We have looked to Christ for our authority in all things rather than to the traditions and practices of a group begun almost 1700 years after Christ proclaimed his message of abundant life.

The church began with three families and had a membership of less than twenty in September 1947. During the next six years more than 160 persons were received into the church, a large number of them by Christian baptism. The growth in the last few years has been between forty and fifty each year.

The church school averaged 100 in 1947; church, 24; giving was $37 a Sunday. In 1953 the church average was 140 a Sunday, the church school, 160, and the giving, $200 a Sunday. This growth has come from the community. These members now are the leaders in this growing, progressive and effective church, as well as the leaders in business, civic and school activities.

In ten years' time the church hopes to be entirely self-supporting —in these first eight years it has reduced its asking for support from more than $2,000 to $600, annually at present.

Under the present leadership of interim-pastor, Harlan Mummert, the church continues to serve the needs of the growing community and seeks for new and more effective ways to maintain its Christian witness in the community.

The opportunities are unlimited—the community is looking to the church for leadership and guidance. The church has helped to create a sensitive and Christian conscience on the part of people and business within the area. The church has developed a large responsibility list for families in the area that have indicated an interest and a need in their life for the mesage and ministry of the church. With proper counsel and supervision from the District, Region, and Brotherhood, and with adequate leadership, the Nicholas Garden Community Church shall become one of the truly great churches of the Pacific Northwest in the next ten years. There is every reason to believe that there can be three or four churches of five hundred members each within this time if we are only willing to cultivate this field which already has yielded so bountifully to our efforts.

Reviews of Recent Books

Books are reviewed here as a service to the church. A review does not necessarily constitute an unqualified recommendation. Purchase can be made through the Brethren Publishing House, Elgin, Illinois. Titles recommended for church libraries are marked with an asterisk (*).—Editor.

When Stones Hurt Your Feet. Karl H. A. Rest. Muhlenberg, 1954. 104 pages. $1.50.

These twenty-six short story sermons are supposed to be suitable for children but are actually more meaningful for youth and adults. Sound religious concepts are given in an interesting way but some are beyond the understanding and interest of children.

Ministers may wish to use this book with older juniors, junior highs and youth. It is not recommended for children's groups of varied ages. — Dessie R. Miller.

Exposition of Ecclesiastes. H. C. Leupold. Wartburg Press, 1952. 304 pages. $4.00.

The author has made a real contribution by underscoring and illuminating one of the books of the Old Testament frequently overlooked by the minister and on which usable helps are all too scarce. After a brief but helpful introduction the author presents the reader with a very readable and clear-cut interpretation of the contents of the Book of Ecclesiastes, finding in it a book suited to our own times with a message directly for our day. Scholarly work underlies the book, but the style throughout is simple and readable, unencumbered by footnotes and scholarly detail. The minister and Sunday-school teacher will find much good material in such a book. — Chalmer E. Faw, Chicago, Ill.

Two or Three Together. Freer and Hall. Harpers, 1954. 188 pages. $2.50.

A manual for prayer groups, this book is a striking continuation of inspiriation and practical help for prayer groups. We may often find books with devotional challenge or others with elaborate methods. Here, the two aspects are put together into a unique book. The "why," "what" and "how" of a prayer group enables any existing prayer group to evaluate itself. It opens up areas of spiritual dynamic which may not have been explored. It discusses the patterns of function which have been most helpful. This section will also help a new person or a group which has never participated in group prayer to know what to seek and toward what to grow.

The larger portion of the book is a series of meditations and helps which any group could follow in weekly meetings. By the end of these thirty weeks a group would be on its own creative adventure with the extensive bibliography to guide it. This book, used together with the Bible, is the best book we have seen including both the techniques and inspiriational material for prayer groups. — Vernon F. Miller, Fresno, Calif.

Church News

Nebraska

Enders—We met in council Dec. 5 with our elder, Bro. Dallas G. Wine, presiding. During the month of January we had a mission study on city missions. At the morning worship hour on Dec. 5 the McPherson quintet gave a concert with Bro. Glenn Swinger bringing the sermon. We were represented at district conference by four delegates. Bro. L. E. Lehman held a week of evangelistic meetings in our church. As a result of these meetings two were baptized and one awaits baptism into our church. The women's work council gave contributions to the children's memorial hospital, to the Nebraska Children's Home and to our service worker. We gave our mission stockings to the Navajo mission at Cuba, New Mexico. Instead of exchanging gifts at Christmas time, we gave to Brethren Service.—Mrs. Albert Applegarth, Wauneta, Nebr.

Oklahoma, Panhandle of Texas and New Mexico

Pleasant Plains—We had a two-week daily vacation Bible school with Bro. Lewis Thomas as director. A program was given by the children at the close of the school with the offering going to the Navajo Indian project. Several of our members attended the district conference. A surprise social was held for our retiring pastor, Bro. Lewis Thomas, and his family. At the September business meeting conducted by Bro. Virgil Weimer, officers were elected for the coming year. Our church has secured a student minister, Bro. Richard King of McPherson, Kansas, for the winter months. We observed home-coming services with Rev. Bill Smith of the Methodist church as guest speaker. Brother and Sister X. L. Coppock of McPherson, Kansas, held a two-week evangelistic meeting. One person was received into the church. At the close of these meetings we held our love feast with Bro. Coppock officiating.—Mrs. Lowell Prentice, Aline, Okla.

Middle Indiana

Bachelor Run — Church officers were elected at our September council. Charles Dumond, Sr., of Flora was elected as elder. One Sunday one of our adult Sunday-school classes visited the Carroll County Home and were in charge of a worship service. Bro. Russell V. Bollinger of Manchester College was guest speaker for our harvest and homecoming service. Our revival was conducted with Bro. W. C. Stinebaugh of the Wabash City church as evangelist. On the evening of Dec. 5 Brother and Sister Paul Halladay were our guests. Bro. Halladay directed a period of worship and singing, and Sister Halladay gave a report of their experiences in Europe. The men of the church planted and harvested a project of corn during the past summer. The ladies' aid meets regularly to quilt, sew for relief and work on the district project.—Lewis Deardorff, Bringhurst, Ind.

Upper Deer Creek — Bro. Edward E. Lyons of the Burnettsville church was with us for a week of meetings. As a result of these meetings and the visiting and personal work eleven persons were baptized into our church. Our centennial anniversary was celebrated on Oct. 4 with Elder Forest Hostetler bringing the morning message and Bro. Walter Stinebaugh delivering the afternoon message. The history of the church was written and read by Mrs. Dorothy Moore. At last council Bro. Ora Yoder was re-elected as Sunday-school superintendent with Samuel Smith as assistant. The aid meets each month to sew.—Grace Walker, Galveston, Ind.

Northern Indiana

Bethel—At our business meeting Bro. Lee Cory was re-elected as elder for the coming year. Our new pastor, Bro. W. Harlan Smith, and his family began their pastoral work with us the first of September. At a morning worship service our pastor was in charge of a consecration and installation service for the teachers and officers of the Sunday-school and church. Extensive repairs and improvements were made on the parsonage. Our fall communion was held on Sunday evening, Oct. 3. The ladies' aid has been quilting and sewing for relief. We have a Bible study and teachers training class which meets each Thursday evening. One Sunday evening, Bro. Lee Cory showed slides of his trip to the Holy Land. On Nov. 26 our church joined with the other churches of the town in a Thanksgiving service. Our revival meeting was held Nov. 28—Dec. 5 with Bro. I. D. Leatherman as evangelist. Sister Leatherman was in charge of the children's work during these meetings. As a result of these meetings two were baptized into the church fellowship. Four letters have been received during the past quarter.—Mrs. C. R. Shuder, Milford, Ind.

English Prairie—At our business meeting in October, the church voted to license Bro. Robert Kranning, Jr. to the ministry. Our communion was held Nov. 3 with Pastor H. H. Hendricks in charge. On Nov. 21 Mr. Joseph Ladd from the Indiana Temperance Union was with us for the morning service. Another Sunday morning speaker was a representative from the Gideon Bible Society. Our men's group harvested corn for Bro. Augustus Pierson who is attending Bethany Seminary. Our trustee board has presented plans for the improvement of the church basement. —Mrs. Lydia Walters, Howe, Ind.

Pleasant Chapel — The last week of October and the first week of November our pastor, Bro. Isarel Gorden, who is also serving as pastor in the Auburn church, conducted revival services in each of the churches. Elder Charles Light presided at our November council meeting. On Nov. 26 we held our communion service. The women's work group has been making bandages for our mission hospitals. Three persons were baptized into our church during the revival meetings.—Mrs. Ocie Hamman, Corunna, Ind.

Union Center—Our harvest meeting was held with Bro. J. E. Hartzler as morning and afternoon speaker. Communion service was observed Oct. 2 with Bro. Fike of the Goshen City church officiating. Breakfast was served at the church on the following Sunday morning. An evening service was presented by those who had attended summer camps and the National Youth Conference. In the absence of our pastor, Bro. LeRoy Fisher brought the message. Nov. 7 closed our services of revival with Bro. Edward K. Zeigler of Elgin, Ill., as evangelist. Sixteen were baptized and three received by letter into our church fellowship. In the absence of our pastor on Nov. 28, Bro. Ralph Schrock of Elkhart was in charge of our services. The women's work group sponsored a chili supper and bazaar at the township school. The Union Center building fund sale which was held at Wakarusa Sale Barn on December 4 was sponsored by the men's work group.—Mrs. Wilson Morningstar, Goshen, Ind.

Northeastern Ohio

Akron, First—The district Christian education conference was held in our church. The food offering was given to help the establishing of the new mission at Painsville in Northeastern Ohio. We sent our youth leaders, Jerry Fuller, and his wife to the National Youth Conference. They were accompanied by two of our young people. Fall meetings were conducted by Raymond Martin, brother of our pastor. Love feast service was held at the close of these meetings. Dr. Albert Denton of Akron was speaker at the banquet honoring the Sunday-school teachers and officers of the past year. The women of the church met one day to pack goods for World Community Day. The women's work group met again to prepare kits for children. During the church year eight were received by letter and eight by baptism into our church fellowship. Guest speakers have included Nettie Weybright, Curtis Dubble, A. H. Miller, Guy Beach, E. G. Diehm, Quentin Evans, Paul Beach and Irvin Stern and his wife. Under the leadership of our pastor, Ralph Martin, and the guidance of our elder, Elmer Brumbaugh, our church is progressing and we hope to contribute toward the maintenance of the mission at Painsville.—Rose Bennett, Copley, Ohio.

Owl Creek—During the first of October we held a one-week revival with ministers from the district in charge of the services. Those participating in these meetings were George Sheets of Ashland, Ohio, Blake Million of Mansfield, Ohio, Rev. Pyles of Ashland Dickey church, Robert Hoover of Danville, Ohio, and George Stausbaugh of Columbia, Ohio. The meetings closed with our love feast on Sunday evening. Nine persons were baptized into the church fellowship. During October the Homemakers' class sponsored the applebutter project. On Nov. 20 the church held its annual turkey supper and program with Bro. W. H. Miley of Ashland as guest speaker. Our Christmas program was held Dec. 23.—Mrs. Viola Lamb, Fredericktown, Ohio.

Southern Ohio

Greenville—Joan Bowman was our delegate to the National Youth Conference. Our CBYF had charge of the devotional period and was host to the district youth rally in October. The Pleasant Valley young people presented, The House on the Sand. Mrs. Raymond Peters spoke to the women's work group in October on seeking first the Kingdom through women's work. A hobby night was featured in November at which six specific activities were illustrated and explained by women who enjoyed them as hobbies and members' hobbies were on display. The church women have had two all-day meetings to sew for Bethany hospital. Our group was represented in the local World Community Day observance. Several from our Sunday school were enrolled in the county Christian leadership training school classes. Our church was represented at the local union Thanksgiving service. Our offering was approximately $300 for CROP. Bro. Leland Emrick of the Pleasant Hill church was our evangelist. During the past two months four have been received by baptism. Pulpit guests the past few months have been H. Jesse Baker, Russell Helstern, Glen Moyer and two Manchester College students. Omer Niswonger recently talked concerning the United Nations. A television set was loaned to the church by a local store the past quarter so that those who desired could watch the "Bless This House" telecast which is sponsored by the Church Federation of Greater Dayton,

May Save Your Life

*SMOKING and CANCER

(A DOCTOR'S REPORT)

by ALTON OCHSNER, M. D.

Much is being said and written about the effects of smoking on the functioning of our respiratory systems. Now after years of painstaking research by many scientists this book has been produced in which the conclusions they reached are presented for the enlightenment of all. Before change must come knowledge and understanding. To that end this book has been written. Youth who read this report will certainly think seriously on the possible effects before starting a lifetime habit that will subtract years from their lives. Habitual smokers should study this report. If they are entirely honest with themselves they may well take the proposed method for conquering the habit. 96 pages. $2.00

Highways for the Gospel

THE angora goats are going one way and a modern automobile is headed another on a narrow mountain pass in southern Turkey. The scene in itself might suggest interesting contrasts but it may stimulate additional ideas if one is told that the pass is in the famous Cilician Gates, in the Taurus mountains not far from Tarsus, the birthplace of Paul. Over these paths went armies of invaders as Assyrians, Greeks and Romans extended their empires. But through the devotion of a local boy like Paul of Tarsus these highways in the hills saw another invasion when Paul and his companion traveled to Asia Minor to found new churches and strengthen others. Traveling for Paul was dangerous and exhausting. Today even a modern car seems a slow way to travel. But just as the trails for invading armies could become highways for the Christian gospel, so can new modes of transportation be used to extend the church and its ministry around the world. What is most needed today is not better roads but the same dynamic that drove Paul on over hazardous routes—the dynamic of a faith that can transform men and remake the world.

Forget About Denominations?

This morning I read the article by Gladys Wood in Readers Write columns of Dec. 4 on the above subject.

From one viewpoint, I agree. From another viewpoint, I disagree. Many times as evangelists and pastors we try (unsuccessfully, perhaps) to explain about "denominations."

Jesus said, "Upon this Rock I will build my church"—not churches nor denominations. A little girl turned down an invitation to another Sunday school because she "belonged to another abomination." And if it is a case of denominationalism—with the emphasis on the "ism" she used the right word—abomination.

Early in our study of ancient history some of us learned that the Egyptians, Babylonians, Phoenicians, and certainly the Hebrews, each made a special contribution to civilization. And in the field of religion could not the same principle hold?

In the heart of God your family is as precious as mine—but not in my heart; for the simple reason that mine is my family.

Moreover your family may make a special contribution to society and my family another—a different type of contribution. One family "runs to doctors and nurses," another "runs to preachers." Let us thank God they are not all doctors or all preachers.

I glory in the Adventists who preach and practice tithing (with an emphasis) as my church does not—or I could wish. Likewise our Methodist friends, evangelism; the Presbyterians place more emphasis, perhaps, on the ten commandments and the sacredness of the Sabbath.

But now, my brethren, can we not realize that we of the historic peace churches can be justly proud of our steeples? or pipe organs? or beautiful liturgy? or divided chancels? No! There are some things of far more importance than those things as civilization seems to dangle "on the edge of a precipice."

A friend of mine, a Dr. Blank of First Methodist, said, "Bro. Sherfy, if you check on us Methodists, you will find that this winter (1946) in the matter of clothing for relief we are following the lead of the Brethren."

That leads my mind to a statement by the governor of Maryland when the first of 6,000 head of cattle were being shipped out (about 1945), to the effect that "friendships and cattle ships are worth far more towards peace than battleships."

Therefore could it be that we of the peace historic churches have come into the kingdom for such a time as this? If so, I would differ a bit from Mrs. Wood; for no other family nor any other church can mean as much to me as "mine."—E. F. Sherfy, Roanoke, Va.

Good Evangelism

The first Sunday we were in Florida we attended the Church of the Brethren in Sebring and enjoyed a good service. The second Sunday, however, we were returning home and decided to stop wherever it was convenient. When I found we were at a Southern Baptist church I decided to look for their evangelistic methods, since it is reported that this denomination has the best record of growth.

The people who parked their car next to ours spoke to us and asked pleasantly, "Won't you all go into the Sunday-school class with us?" In the classroom the names of all the visitors were written and later the class president read them and had the persons stand.

The church service which followed had no loud display of emotion or, on the other hand, any effort toward a smooth polish. A strong plea was made for money for the building in progress, for the building which they were using was too small for the audience. Prayer meeting was announced for Wednesday night, cottage prayer meetings for Saturday night and on Friday night workers met at the church and went out to invite people to the services. Judging from the way the pastor pleaded, it was not easy to get enough people to do this work.

The sermon was on an important text, "To die is gain." During the invitation a girl came forward who had decided for Christ at a cottage prayer meeting the night before, and the pastor reported that two others were awaiting baptism. A number of people spoke to us after the service.

I decided that good evangelism is simply love, manifesting itself in hard work, consistently administered.—William J. Tinkle, Albany, Ind.

Out of Our Abundance

We can

- feed the hungry
- bring hope to the dispossessed
- counteract Communist propaganda

WE ALL know the story of how one young man came to Jesus, seeking the keys to eternal life. It is evident that he had been near enough to Jesus to watch the Master as he ministered to the needs of the people. Now the strategic moment had arrived; consequently, he approached Jesus, asking, "Good Master, what must I do to inherit eternal life?"

Jesus surprised him as he answered, "Why do you call me good? No one is good but God alone." Then he hastened on, "You know the commandments: 'Do not kill, Do not commit adultery, Do not steal, Do not bear false witness, Do not defraud, Honor your father and mother.' "

Then the young man seemed to take new hope and with a ring of pride in his voice answered, "Teacher, all these I have observed from my youth." At this point Jesus looked upon him with love and compassion, for he seemed to be a conscientious young man. "You lack one thing; go, sell what you have, and give to the poor, and you will have treasures in heaven; and come, follow me." Here, the young man was caught in the struggle of decision, standing so near to the kingdom of God, yet just a step from the gates of hell. Finally, his countenance fell, and he turned and went away sorrowful, for he had great possessions.

Several years ago, when I was a child living on the North Plains in the Panhandle of Texas, one of the annual experiences of the family was to travel the twenty-five miles to the South Canadian River. There the family would spend the day. We ate our lunch in the shade of the cottonwood trees and watched the murky, muddy, meandering river as it drifted lazily toward the east. During the afternon our parents gathered wild grapes or plums while we three children played in the great sprawling bed of the river. To the major portion of the American people the South Canadian River is unknown, but to the people who reside in that territory it is recognized as being one of the most treacherous of all the rivers in America. For the entire floor of the river is a great mass of quicksand. In those days when I played there as a child there were many, many times when I felt the bottom of the river slipping, sliding, gliding away from beneath my feet. Soon the river bed seemed to be reaching up with interlaced tentacles, attempting to pull me down with tenacious grasps. Then my brother and sister would come running and rescue me. This is the habit of quicksand.

There are times when I feel that I am once again treading upon a bed of quicksand. For in the river of the world we are standing in a precarious position.

The pages of history tell us that when great masses of hungry people become congregated together, revolution has always developed. If we will take pencils and draw circles about the feverish areas in the world during the last century, we will discover that we have drawn circles around millions of hungry people. For wherever great masses have become desperately hungry, revolution has resulted.

Such was the case in the French Revolution. There is a legend that this terrible revolution was incited in France in 1789 over a broken wine cask. The story tells us that the peasants were starving; their emaciated bodies roamed up and down the streets and through the alleys, searching for a morsel of food. But the nobility drank and feasted and laughed the days and the nights away. One day, as a lowly peasant was delivering a cartload of wine to the home of a nobleman, one of the casks fell from the cart, bursting as it struck the cobblestone pavement. Immediately hungry peasants seemed to come from everywhere. They rushed up, sank on their knees to the gutter and filled their shrunken bodies with the gurgling wine. The nobility merely stood by and laughed at them in their bungling efforts. Soon a chain of reactions was set off which caused blood to flow in France for many decades. Let us pray God that in our little community of the world today, we in America are not listed as those who merely stand on the side and laugh and gloat as miserable wretches around the world jostle for a crust of bread.

By the grace of God it does not need to be so. There is another way. There is another door that no one has had the courage to open, save Jesus. There is another road that we have not dared to travel. It is the way traveled by Jesus Christ of Nazareth. We are his disciples; we claim to follow him; we acknowledge him as our teacher. In this world of cold and hard facts we can dare to dream dreams; we can envision visions; the words of the Lord can be frequently heard by us.

The brutish, practical world will not understand the messages of Jesus. For the preaching of the gospel is foolishness to a society that looks upon life as being only crass materialism. It is not practical to share what we have with the poor. In a world which believes that to the victor belong the spoils it is foolish to talk about feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, visiting the sick and ministering to those in prison. It just does not make practical sense but it is the truth of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Today, the Christian way to dream is to share out of our abundance. For we are a nation of abundance. Our surplus foods have reached a staggering proportion. We have been prosperous. We have torn down our barns and built larger barns. In my home territory ten large wheat elevators have been constructed during the past decade and half, each having a storage capacity of about three hundred thousand bushels. Each of these elevators is kept filled with wheat. That makes a total of about three million bushels of wheat stored in that one small locality. We are paying tremendous sums; in order to stabilize our national economy. Today, we are paying over seven hundred thousand dollars daily for storage costs on all of our stored foods. If all of these surplus commodities could be loaded into freight cars, each containing fifty tons, a train could be made long enough to have the caboose in London, running west through New York, then on through San Francisco, then on through Tokyo, with the locomotive some five-hundred miles west of Tokyo. Let us pray that the hungry peoples of the world are not looking upon us with envy.

One of the brightest rays of light in the darkness has come to us in the form of the recent government action which gives the church the opportunity to distribute these surplus foods to hungry people around the world. For the small expenditure of five cents we can now distribute one dollar's worth of food through our existing agencies. Surely such a small sum has never heretofore purchased so much!

Prospects for 1955

BY WAITING one month before discussing the outlook for 1955 we have had the advantage of learning what business, government, labor and church leaders expect for the new year. In general, they are optimistic. Some note the absence of any major war; others point to increased production and more sales; the stock market reaches for new records, but no one is forecasting another crash. Instead the expectation is that 1955 will be a year of expansion with more customers, more sales, more profits, more jobs and perhaps more taxes.

Many of our churches share in the spirit of expansion. New buildings are rising, new members are joining, budgets will be larger and pastors will be busier than ever. The first crop of war babies born around 1943, will swell membership classes this spring, and many a church will have its biggest "ingathering" and perhaps its most satisfactory budget during the coming year.

These observations should probably make us grateful. In some respects they do. But they also disturb us. The church has its best opportunity to be successful, but success—as most people reckon it—is not the measure of a church. As we grow in numbers we may sacrifice depth of spiritual understanding. As we acquire more resources—buildings, budgets, equipment, trained leaders—we may forget where our dependence lies. Our wealth always increases faster than our stewardship. As we grow in good favor with our neighbors we will find it more difficult not to conform to community standards.

When we are likely to be successful it is a good time to remember that we are not called to succeed but to witness. The church must speak the message of Christ whether anyone listens or not. It must serve where there is need whether it gets credit or not. It must continually pray whether God answers as it desires or not. It must constantly teach whether it stems the tide of unbelief or not.

The prophet Ezekiel was told to speak the word of the Lord so that "whether they hear or refuse to hear . . . they will know that there has been a prophet among them." We pray for a church that will so witness to the gospel of Christ that, whether the world listens or turns away, people will know a prophet has been among them.

We pray for pastors and church leaders who in 1955 will be more bold to stand up for such unpopular convictions as Christian pacifism, total abstinence, disciplined living and sacrificial giving. They may lose a few contributing families but at least their churches will know that "a prophet has been there."

A growing church is good. A witnessing church is much better. The challenge of our time is to grow not merely in size but in courage and power, not merely in favor with men but also in favor with God.—K.M.

How Shall We Adore Him?

"O COME, let us adore him," sang the choir. The preacher told us that the lesson of the shepherds of Bethlehem was that of adoration—adoration of Christ the King.

But how shall we adore him? Some adore the King with the forms of devotion. Their pew is occupied on every Sunday morning; they sing hymns with enthusiasm. Reading a chapter in the Bible is a daily practice. Furthermore, before every meal they say a grace. Yet, somehow, their religion makes little change in their workaday lives; they adore the Christ only with their lips.

Others show their adoration in gifts of money. Asked to do some service to others, they write a check, for, like Sir Launfal, they do not want to take the time to share themselves. Sometimes the gift is a sop to their consciences for the way in which they have made the money. These persons have forgotten that it is not the gifts of silver or gold that bring the richest blessings, but the daily deeds of kindness and helpfulness.

Service to their fellow men is an expression of adoration on the part of some. Their days are spent in clearing out the slums of the world, in seeing that the laboring man gets his just share of the goods he produces, in building bridges between nations, in ridding mankind of all the social evils he suffers and they forget to renew their faith and love and strength at the Source and Inspiration of humanitarian acts. They follow the Christ in going about doing good, but forget that he often spent the night in prayer. And so their service becomes cold and mere duty, not acts of service done joyfully unto the Lord.

How then shall we adore the Christ? True adoration must be a compound of all these—worship, sharing and service. When our worship results in changed lives in the office, the factory, the schoolroom, the store and the kitchen, when sharing means giving of ourselves as well as our money, when service is infused with a joy and a warmth that touches all whom we meet, then we truly adore Christ the King.—E.W.

Protestants in Latin America

FOR more than three centuries the Roman Catholic Church was the only and undisputed religious force with tremendous economic and political power in Latin America. She could never accept the liberal spirit of the Latin American constitutions, which were written mainly under the inspiration of the thinkers who were responsible for the French Revolution and the influence of the North American Constitution. The liberal spirit of those constitutions has been a thorn in her flesh and the effort to eliminate it has been unceasing and untiring, with the result that she has succeeded in many countries in modifying it, so as to regain at least some of the privileges she enjoyed in colonial times. The most recent victories have been in Columbia and Paraguay, as we shall see later.

If the Roman Catholic Church could have as tolerant a spirit as that shown to her by the Protestant majorities in traditionally Protestant countries, then I am quite sure that many of the religious disturbances and persecutions we have had in Latin America would not have existed nor would exist. Because, if we search deep and intelligently, at the bottom of every curtailment of religious liberties, we shall find the direct or indirect influence of the Catholic Church. She is the instigator, the inspirer and the prompter of much of the religious unrest and prejudice which crop up here and there. She is always seeking a favorable moment to cause discomfort and difficulties; and, in doing so, she does not hesitate to use the baneful principle that "the end justifies the means."

Some of the most common accusations brought against the Protestants are as follows: "The Protestants are enemies of the national heritage, because the national heritage is Roman Catholic since the beginning of the conquest." "The Protestants are traitors, because they are sold out to foreign domination; they are a force of disintegration, because they are so disunited; they are a dangerous crowd, because they are spreading adulterated Bibles"; and so on. Another fallacious assumption is that almost the total population of Latin America is Catholic. One clergyman, for instance, in December, 1953, wrote in an Argentine newspaper: "The Argentine is Roman Catholic and she wants to stay Catholic."

Every sensible citizen knows that even though it may be true that the Roman Catholic Church is the strongest church traditionally and numerically and that it maintains a strong economic and political domination, she can by no means count with even the majority of the population. We know, through data given us from a reliable official source, that at least five million, out of a population of eighteen millions in Argentina, are affiliated with other religious associations. In this figure are not included those who do not belong to any religious group, either because they are antireligious or irreligious. The religious situation in The Argentine is illustrative of what happens in almost all of the Latin American countries. But, though they are not the quasi totality of the population, they constitute even so the largest religious group and, consequently, they are in many instances the determining factor in national or regional elections. Generally, the political parties need their support in order to get into power or to stay there, after they have assumed it. The result is that in recompense, sometimes, they have to bestow on Roman Catholicism certain privileges, such as making obligatory Catholic religious teaching in public schools, or curtailing religious liberty to other Christian bodies. If we can understand this attitude of the Roman Catholic Church in Latin America, we shall understand more easily the reason for some of the things which are happening there. Of course, this does not mean that this is the only anti-Protestant force. There are others, but they would not be so significant and strong, if it were not for the weight thrown into the scales by Roman Catholicism.

We would not be surprised some day to find other groups discrediting Protestantism on the ground that it has been the spearhead of Occidental imperialism in Latin America. That has been said by the Roman Catholic Church, as stated before, but now some liberal minds, who are also severely critical of this religious congregation, are asking themselves if Protestants are not really in Latin America as agents of imperialism.

There is no doubt that the attack on Protestantism by the Roman Catholic Church is following the lead of the Spanish hierarchy. In 1952, Cardinal Pedro Segura y Saenz, Archbishop of Sevilla, stated in a pastoral letter (according to a dispatch of the United Press received in New York, Sept. 18, 1952): "In our times the worst kind of liberty is presented as the success of our times, because liberty of thought, of teaching or the press . . . in reality are liberties for perdition, whose origin is a poisoned fountain from which the worst evils of the world flow. . . ." He also stressed that "the liberty of worship is reckoned as a privilege or prerogative of the modern world," but he reminded that the Roman Catholic Church "condemns this liberty in a decisive and energetic way." In line with this philosophy, we have seen lately religious liberties restricted in a way unknown since colonial times in a country like Columbia. Similar efforts are being carried out in Paraguay, under the lead of the Archbishop Asuncion Monsgr. Anibal Mena Porta, who started the campaign with a pastoral letter of sixteen pages, on June 29, 1952. We mention these countries, because they are those where critical situations have arisen or are arising in a more acute form than in any other parts of Latin America. We are already familiar with the struggle in Columbia and the acts of cruel vandalism to which our Protestant brethren have been subjected.

In synthesis we can say that the general religious situation

A young native Protestant evangelist speaks at a youth service in Colombia, South America (top)

A young missionary reads Bible stories to a group of interested children in an interior village of Colombia. Sometimes neglected and undernourished children are given medical care as well in Latin America is as follows:

Complete liberty of action for all religious bodies: in Chile, Uruguay, Bolivia, Brazil, Central America and the Caribbean republics. In all of them the Roman Catholic Church has some special privileges, which, though not written in the laws, she obtains by means already set forth.

Restrictions with a tendency to remain as they are or to increase: Peru, Ecuador, Venezuela and Paraguay.

Restrictions with tendency to decrease. Argentina and Mexico. About Argentina we can say that, at present, the Protestant churches, after five years during which they could not broadcast by radio, have gone back on the air. There are restrictions in military zones, where only the Roman Catholic clergy are permitted to perform religious ceremonies. The committee appointed to investigate if there were foreign cultural and political implications in the missions in certain zones of the country, especially among the Indian tribes, has not reported, though the report was due a long time ago. We can say that for other things generally there are no restrictions. Propaganda can be made everywhere, in streets, plazas, public places, and all kinds of Evangelical literature is published and distributed. The present speaker during the first half of this year has gone with a traveling church all over Argentina and has spoken in the open air without difficulty; authorities have been courteous and in some cases helpful. When, on the first of May, the National Congress inaugurated the sessions of the present year, and the president made the opening speech, outstanding religious authorities of all cults were invited to attend, with especially designated seats. A similar invitation was sent a few days later, when the newly elected vice-president was put into office.

This tiny Presbyterian church stands in a jungle clearing deep in the Amazon River valley, an oasis for spiritual devotion in the heart of the wilderness. Parishioners are mostly families of workers who roam the jungle tapping trees for rubber sap

About Mexico, we transcribe some paragraphs written in a letter by Dr. G. Baez-Camargo: (1) At present, a great deal of legislation about religious matters is a dead letter, or it is observed in a very general and nominal way. The Roman Catholic church at present enjoys practically all of the liberties, even to the point of maintaining openly schools against the law. In a certain way we also (i.e., the Protestants) have been subjected to a less strict enforcement of the law, except in such things as the opening of new churches for public worship. . . . (2) The opposition on the part of the Roman Catholic Church still continues, though, it seems, that lately there have been less open attempts of a criminal nature. (3) The work of evangelism with the exception of some local acts of hostility, in faraway regions, is carried on with a fair amount of liberty. Our educational work, on the other hand, is very limited. We can say that, in general terms, there are as yet many openings left, geographically and socially, which will give us larger opportunities of service than we have been able to offer up to the present." (Written on April 9, 1954, from Mexico City.)

We regret to have to say these things in an hour when we would like to have a brotherly approach with every Christian in the world. But there is no hope of a common Christian front in the world, until the day when the Roman Catholic Church retraces her steps and extends to us the right hand of fellowship as brothers on equal terms, brothers who are trying, with human limitations, but with a sincere desire to obey the Lord of us all, to proclaim the eternal gospel of the cross and of the resurrection. Till then, we shall pray that God may give us strength and brotherly love, so that we may go on with our work and never act with our Catholic brothers as they act with us, when they take advantage of their numerical strength to play with political powers to their own advantage. Our only strength is in God, the Father, and our only victory will be in our Lord Jesus Christ.

Surely the mite has never had a more golden opportunity. For now we can say that our Christianity is more than empty idealism, expressed in shallow platitudes. In the name of him who fed the multitudes we can now do as he commisioned us to do: We can feed those who are hungry.

Among the writings of Alfred, Lord Tennyson there is a poem entitled Northern Farmer, New Style. It is written in a difficult dialect but once the dialect has been mastered the poem certainly merits our consideration. For in the verse an old farmer sits astride his horse, lecturing his son who is just coming into maturity. For some unknown reason the son has been courting the parson's daughter and this action worries the old man considerably. For, to him, parsons were always poor and without means. Now, he reasons with the young man, it is possible to direct one's amorous pursuits to the extent that one can marry wealth just as easy as one can marry extreme poverty. He merely asks his son to be reasonable. Then, as the old man prepares to ride away, he states, paraphrased:

"Don't you hear my horse's legs as they canter (along and) away?
Proputty, proputty, proputty, that's what I hear them say."

There are a lot of people in the world today who can hear no sound, who can see no vision, who can feel no compassion, except, it be garbed in the cloak of property, property, property, for their possessions are great.

Let us remember that God loved the world enough to give his Son for its salvation. Can we give to others as God has given to us? Let us express our gratitude to God for the love and abundance that he has showered upon us by giving of our abundance to our fellow man. Let us, in this hour of our great challenge, take our abundance and distribute it among the poor. Then, when the hour comes when we shall stand and meet our Savior face to face, we will not turn and pass down the long and lonely corridors of eternity in sorrow, for our possessions will not be heavy; rather, we will hear the voice of our Lord when he says, "Come, O blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom. . ." for our treasures in heaven will be great.

A Chain of Prayer Around the World

Geraldine Sartain

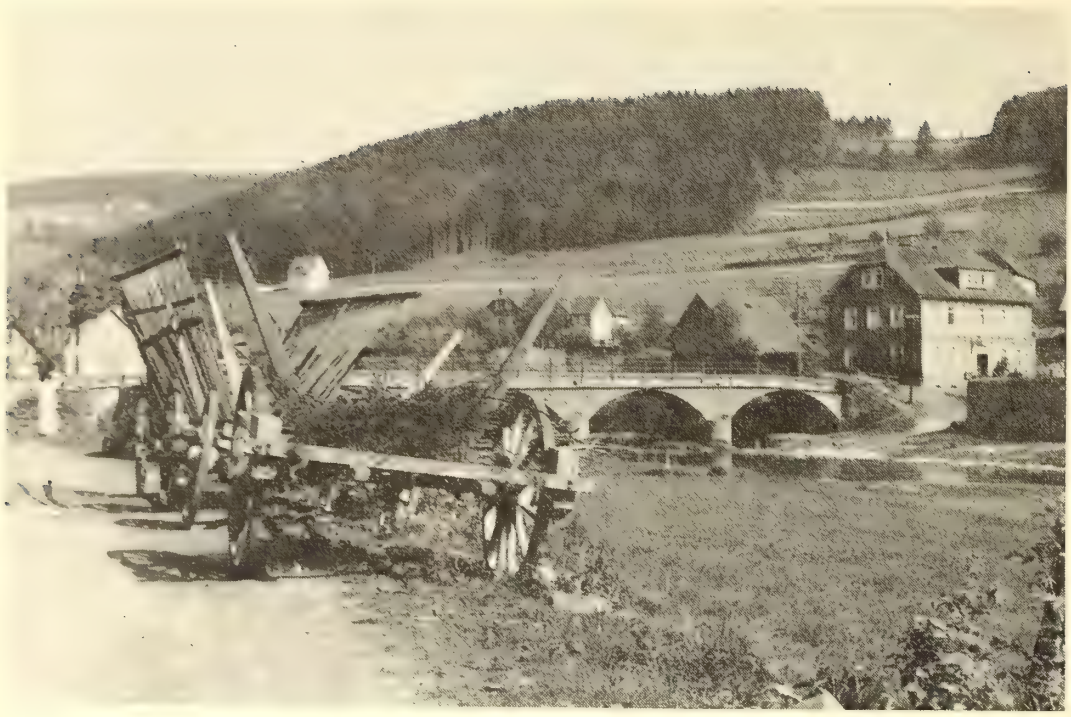
A BUILDING rises, brick by newly baked brick, in the heart of the Belgian Congo, where young girls, now tending the kilns, will soon learn how to fight disease in their homeland. This is the new women's center at the Protestant Medical Institute in Kimpese. . . .

Women and their menfolk, who have just learned to read, eagerly pore over pamphlets on the rearing of children, on sanitation and health, on how to increase their crops. They read in Mayan, Arabic, Amharic, Persian and Otetela— in the languages used in the follow-up booklets for new literates. . . .

The Harvester rolls up and children tumble out of shacks, running toward it to clutch a doll, to splash water in the homemade sink atop an orange crate, to play and sing and listen to stories told by the chaplain-community worker. Twenty-two of these churches and play schools on wheels seek out the camps of America's wandering fruit and vegetable pickers, as only one part of the churches' migrant ministry to nearly 300,000 homeless. . . .

In India, Pakistan, Tokyo, Korea, the Cameroons and many other spots on the globe, young men and women study in interdenominational Christian colleges so they can give leadership to their own people in education, medicine, welfare. . . .

All of this and much more is happening around the world because of the prayers and gifts offered in the United States and 128 other countries on the World Day of Prayer.



As dawn breaks over the Tonga Islands on the other side of the international date line on February 25, 1955, stately Queen Salote will lead her subjects in the first service. And as the sun passes through the heavens, waking other lands to the new day, their Christian people will pour forth praise of their Maker in more than 1,000 languages and dialects. All day long, until night closes on St. Lawrence Island in the frozen Arctic, this bond of universal prayer will encircle the globe. Just this year Czechoslovakia, Timor, Gibraltar, Nauru, New Britain and Togoland have been added to the golden prayer chain.

Under roofs thatched with palms, in African kraals and in vast Gothic cathedrals, supplications will rise. In the United States 20,000 communities will observe the day, 1,900 of them called to prayer by local councils of church women. Factory workers will bow their heads in daylight services, men and women in offices, schools, hospitals and colleges will hold special services, together with communtiy groups. United Church Women, a general department of the National Council of the Churches, representing 10 million women, sponsors the American observance.

This has been a natural outgrowth, for women have prayed for a better world through the centuries. In 1887 it was a Presbyterian woman in Boston who established the nationwide day of prayer for foreign missions. A few years later a day chosen by Baptist women for prayer for home missions; in 1919 the two days were united and the first Friday of Lent selected as the Day of Prayer for missions. Travelers and missionaries spread the movement and eight years later, in 1927, it became the World Day of Prayer.

The year 1955 will mark the sixty-ninth observance. The theme will be "Abide in Me" (John 15:4).

As the observance has spread, so has its purpose deepened. From praying for home and foreign missions, participants have come to the realization that, together, they form the world Christian community. Today they also pray for the expansion of their faith around the world and for the safety and peace of all mankind.

Heritage of Faith and Freedom

Donald F. Durnbaugh

IT HAS been said that the Brethren take a perverse pride in possessing no theology. The same might be said of the heritage and tradition of the Church of the Brethren. Little stress is laid on the adventure in faith which was the beginning of our fellowship of believers. The expansion in the Germanies, the difficult emigration to the New World and the development within the land of religious liberty are all closed books for many of us. We sing Faith of our Fathers with vigor, but neglect to learn what that faith was.

Our friends in the trinity of historic peace churches, the Society of Friends and the Mennonite denominations, are different. The Quakers are known over the globe, despite their small numbers, largely through their articulate presentation of their faith, their leaders and their way of life. The diary of George Fox, Barclay's Apologies, and John Woolman's journal are literary classics; the writings of the late Rufus Jones are widely known and respected.

The Menonites have taken an extensive interest in documenting the origin and history of their predecessors. Some of the materials for Brethren history can be found among the careful researches of the Mennonites. Their research efforts are now being culminated by the production of Mennonite encyclopedias in both English and German.

Among the early Brethren, the value of the written word was recognized. Among their number were some of the most prolific writers and poets on religious topics among the German sectarians. Five years after the founding of the fellowship in Schwarzenau on the Eder, two basic documents were published in the small German town. These have become known as Rites and Ordinances of the House of God, by Alexander Mack, in dialogue form between a father and son; and Ground-Searching Questions (or better Basic Questions), written by a "sincere member" of the church, probably Mack. The former is a concise statement of the principles and tenets of the Neo Baptists as they were called; the latter is a series of thirty-nine questions proposed by Eberhard Gruber, a leader of the Inspirationalists, a rival Separatist group, and answers to them.

It is said that Mack and other Brethren contributed to the publication of the famous Berleburg Bible, published in 1726 near Schwarzenau. The eight-volume work is marked by the detailed interpretations and explanations of each verse.

Director of Brethren Service work in Austria

The culmination of early Brethren efforts in this field was, of course, the Sower press in Germantown, Pennsylvania. Christopher Sower, Sr., of Laasphe, near Schwarzenau, was most probably a member of the Church of the Brethren and at any rate very close to them. He became one of the leading men in Pennsylvania through the great influence of his press. He established the first German language newspaper using German type, one of the first magazines in 1764, innumerable religious works and hymnals and, most important, an issue of the Holy Bible in 1743. This was the first Bible in an European language published in the colonies, and has won for Sower an undying place in the history of American literature and religion.

In 1774 Christopher Sower, Jr., an illustrious son of his famous father reprinted Mack's Rites and Ordinances with a historical preface by Alexander Mack, Jr. This was based on papers left by Mack and Peter Becker and oral statements by the deceased leaders and other Brethren. It is the best account of the origin of the church and was written for the express purpose of informing "their dear youth that they may have a plain and simple exposition of the truth. . . ."

We will quote key sentences from Mack's preface, as translated by the great Brethren historian, M. G. Brumbaugh which illumine the facets of our heritage, illustrating them with incidents from the history of the Brethren in Europe.

Heritage of Discipleship

"Under these circumstances, some felt themselves drawn powerfully to seek the footsteps of the primitive Christians, and desired earnestly to receive in faith the ordained testimonies of Jesus Christ according to their true value."

Here is an expression of one of the unique and central characteristics of the early Brethren—a conscious, dedicated effort to pattern their lives and religious actions after primitive Christianity as revealed in the New Testament. Dr. Floyd Mallott emphasizes in his recent studies in Brethren History that Brethrenism is imitative primitive Christianism,"

This literalism was a reaction from the coldness, legalism, pomp and formality of the three established churches in the Germanies of the early eighteenth century, from which background the Brethren came. The Pietist movement which influenced the group, as developed by Spener and Francke, sought to recover the individual piety and personal religion so lacking in the ecclesiastical structure. Ernest Christoph Hochmann von Hochenau, the noble Separatist whom Mack followed, gave up his career and aristocratic privileges to follow Christ and show others the way.

The treasured ordinances of the Brethren—trine immersion, feet washing, love feast and communion, anointment, believer's baptism—stem from this heritage of discipleship.

Heritage of Freedom

"These eight persons covenanted and united together as brethren and sisters into the covenant of the cross of Jesus Christ to form a church of Christian believers."

The key words are: covenanted and united together in this quotation. The emphasis is upon voluntary action and free will. We learn that their decision was made only after long and prayerful study and visitation of many groups in Germany.

Another scene from Schwarzenau, probably near Alexander Mack's mill

"No exercise of force in religion" was a tenet of faith upon which the Brethren were staking their happiness and lives of their own volition.

Brumbaugh shows how this principle permeated their belief. Holding this belief that force must not interfere with matters of the spirit, they rejected infant baptism, often carried out with the coercion of the military; holding this, they rejected oaths, the established churches, state-appointed and state-supported clergy and, certainly, they had to reject participation in war as the epitome of force and violence. Under the provisions of Augsburg in 1555, the principle of Cuius regio eius religio temporarily ended conflict between Catholic and Protestant. Under this agreement, each ruler of the hundreds of petty principalities could decide the religion for that area. Those subjects holding the opposite view had to leave their homes and find an area of their faith. "Glaube oder Heimat," "Faith or Home," was the choice given. Those finding no spiritual salvation in either camp were vigorously oppressed by both groups. The Brethren anticipated the now accepted principle of religious freedom for all and challenged this practice.

"And when they had found, in authentic histories, that the primitive Christians. . . (baptized by trine immersion) . . . they examined diligently the New Testament, and finding all perfectly harmonizing therewith . . . . (they were eager to follow the example of Christ)."

The Brethren were students. They searched church histories, they "examined diligently," they compared and analyzed and sought for the truth where it could be found. Mallott points out that the Brethren were much influenced by the writings of the mystic professor Gottfried Arnold, who developed the historical method of research in the field of church history, and showed how the witness of the early Christian church had been twisted and distorted by the prejudiced church writers.

It has been said that Mack knew the entire Bible. Whether this is literally true or not, a quick reading of early Brethren writings reveals thoroughgoing mastery of the Scriptures. The texts are laden with Biblical quotations and allusions.

The Sower press was a pioneer in this field too. They published numerous grammar, language and edifying books; one of the first books on pedagogy by Christopher Dock was issued. The printed Sunday-school cards used by the Brethren several years before Robert Raikes began his Sunday-school work came from the Sower printing plant.

The Brethren were great hymn writers. Mack, Peter Becker, Johannes Naas—almost all of the early leaders—were active in glorifying God through writing. Alexander Mack, Jr., in America was one of the most polished and prolific authors and deserves great recognition. The fact that the writing was in German has prevented more appreciation of Brethren literary efforts.

Statue of Liberty

F. C. Neumann

WITH a boatload of immigrants, I arrived at the shores of this free country one April night. I was fascinated by the sight of the Statue of Liberty. Another immigrant's little daughter, Mary, asked, "Mr. Neuman, what does this Statue of Liberty mean?" I answered, "Mary, this Statue of Liberty was a gift to the United States from France. The little lamp in her right lifted hand, has for many years meant liberty to all those who have been coming to our country from behind the Iron Curtain, from concentration camps, slave labor and uranium mines."

I told Mary that the Statue of Liberty meant hope for me, for her and for all who were in the ship. I said, "Mary, the secret police and the gas chambers are over, forever. We are going to live in a free country now." Mary's eyes beamed with happiness. But after a little pause she said, "Mr. Neumann, must this lady hold the big lamp night after night, always by herself? I am afraid she will get tired and drop the lamp. Shouldn't we help Miss Liberty to hold the lamp in the darkness?"

After embarcation I said goodby to Mary and my other friends and went to a hotel. Throughout the whole night I thought of this girl's words, "Shouldn't we help Miss Liberty to hold up her lamp in the darkness?"

And there was darkness, pitch-black darkness not only in my hotel room. There was darkness all over Europe, from which I had just come. Light after light had gone out in Russia, Poland, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Portugal, Spain. In the Western Hemisphere the lights had gone out in Argentina, Peru, Bolivia. The lights of freedom go out wherever dictators rule. Even in our country, the land of the free, the lights are turning desperately dim. There is a growing worship of the state here, the concept that the state is the master and not the servant of the people.

I realized how right Mary was, in asking, "Shouldn't we help Miss Liberty keep that light burning in the darkness?" If her lifted arm sinks, the lighted lamp will splash into the water, and darkness will reign over the world.

How are we going to help Miss Liberty to keep the lamp burning? The first thing we can do is to keep our own lights burning. The Bible gives us the secret of freedom. Man, created in the image of God, is free. That implies that our freedom is not dependent on weapons of war, upon our government, upon the color of our skin, our bank account or position. Everybody under the sun is free, in being God's child.

Why were all the dictators, from Nebuchadnezzar to Stalin, always so anxious to suppress the Bible? Because across the ages the Bible has been the most powerful messenger of man's freedom. Moses led the Israelites to freedom, out of Egyptian slavery. Joshua, Isaiah and Nehemiah preached freedom from inner enslavement, from sin.

The world into which Jesus came, was abominably dark. Like Miss Liberty Jesus was the only light shining in the darkness. There were two kinds of people in the Roman Empire at his time: the masters and the slaves, the oppressors and the oppressed. Freedom of speech, worship and assembly were forbidden. Rome preferred timid "Yes"-men and smug conservatives for whom "everything is just perfect." Rome wanted intellectual slaves who glorified the empire, and Rome wanted manual slaves for the construction of their blood-stained arenas. Every Roman housewife had twenty living slaves. Every American housewife has twenty mechanical slaves. What is the difference?

Jesus saw this Rome with the eyes of a Christian. He saw the Roman Empire sinking more and more into mud, into sin, day after day, year after year. He wanted to save her because he loved man. He preached the gospel of love and mercy and prophesied a new world of freedom, by seeking the truth.

But his political bosses did not like his revolutionary ideas of freedom. They said, "Jesus talks too much. Let's stop his talking." And they crucified him, but not his ideas. They spread through the world with the speed of light, creating man's hope and faith everywhere.

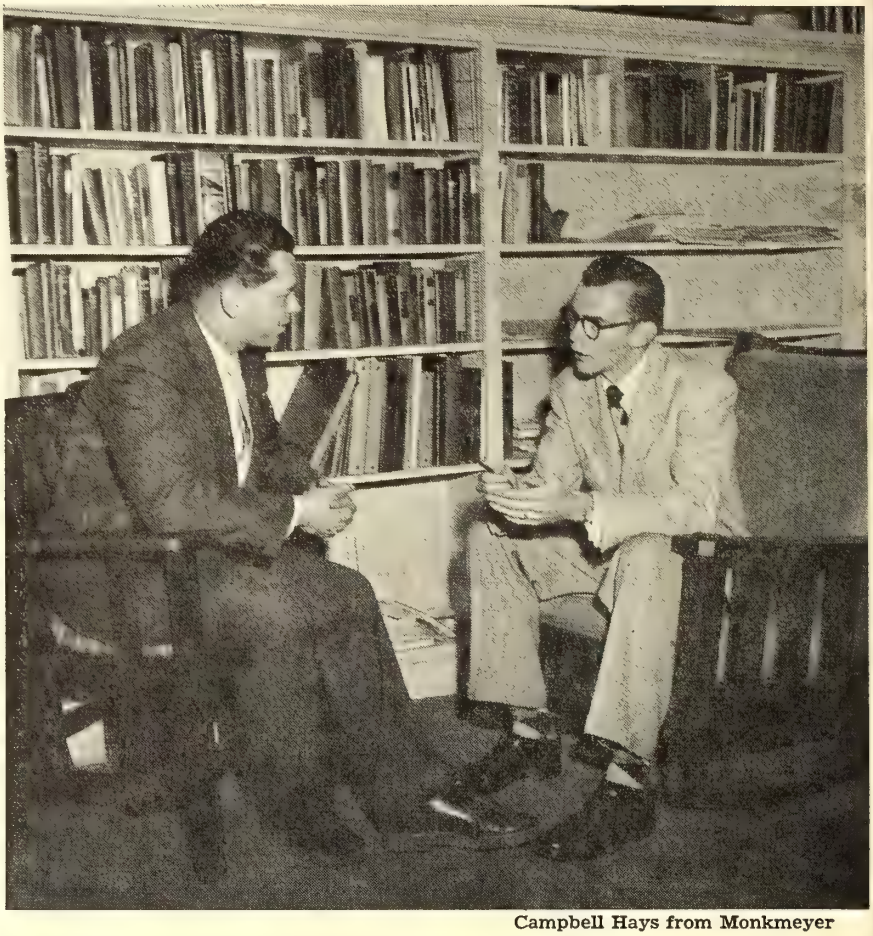
If our country is still strong and free, it's because Americans believe in freedom as a divine and inalienable right of man. Freedom is precious, tender and beautiful like a flower. Both you have to nourish with light and with your strength and care, so that they may blossom.

Where does freedom start to bloom? In our homes, where we read the Bible with father and mother; in our homes, where the spirit of God's holy word fills our hearts. In our homes, where Johnny and Jane learn how to respect each other as free individuals. Freedom is wherever people meet in the fear of the Lord.

And as long as America is a God-fearing nation, our little friend Mary does not need to be afraid that Miss Liberty will drop the lamp. For our fear of the Lord will keep Miss Liberty's arm strong. Our love for freedom will keep her face shining and our faith in Christ will keep her lamp burning.

GATEWAY TO THE DAWN

ORA W. GARBER



This truth each one of us must clearly know:
Life's sun remains but briefly at high noon,
And, having passed its zenith, all too soon
Behind that western curtain it will go.

The universe is God's. Of His design
Are both this present life and that to be.
As shadows lengthen we by faith can see
A brighter path beyond our day's decline.

When to that future life our thoughts are drawn
We sense new joys beyond the twilight rim.
To those who have committed all to Him
The sunset's but a gateway to THE DAWN.

You Can Build This Bridge!

An open letter to a Brethren Layman

People are hungry to talk about Christ and the Christian faith; a quiet friendly talk with a trusted neighbor may win him

Campbell Hays from Monkmeyer

DEAR HENRY:

You were quite right in the concern you expressed in our conversation last week. The church seems to awaken all too slowly to the great possibilities for reaching all the people around us and winning them to Christ and good churchmanship. Your church, like so many others, is disturbed because so many new people have moved into the community and built their homes, yet have not become a real part of the community life and do not come to church.

And I can see why the present emphasis on evangelism in our church has disquieted you, after the things you revealed in your talk with me.

First, let me assure you, Henry, that evangelism is a far bigger, better, more Christian thing than the forms of it against which you understandably rebel. In our time we have found that there are better ways than the noisy and often disgusting forms of revival techniques about which we spoke. And to witness does not mean to go around buttonholing strangers to ask, "Brother, are you saved?"

Let me tell you, too, that good evangelism must not be confused with the frantic huckstering of the radio "hot gospel" racketeers, of which there are so many. Most of them are not church-sponsored, and they buy time to shout their pleas for more money at all who will listen. On many stations, nine-tenths of the so-called religious programs are not worthy of our listening, to say nothing of support.

And another thing, my brother! When we talked about this matter of winning the new people in the neighborhood, you thought that your pastor, who is deeply interested, and Brother Bucher, who will hold an evangelistic meeting for you next spring, could do all that anyone can do to win them. Their deep consecration and experienced skill in winning people will be a great asset. They will present the gospel ably and persuasively to those who come to church. Do you think they can reach the many who will not attend the meetings?

Henry, it is you who must do it! Indeed, you and Ivan and Floyd and your wives are the key to the whole situation. No doubt you have looked up in your Testament the passages I suggested about witnessing. Just as a reminder, let me put them down here — Matt. 28:19-20;

Luke 9:1-2; Acts 1:8. As I told you, there are many others, but these are sufficient to show that in the plan of Jesus, all of us really are to be witnesses, not only the preachers.

In our time, we have found, too, that people will take a minister's visit to be his duty and will respond much more freely to a layman's call. I think you will find that people are far more hungry to talk about Christ and faith, more eager to have their children grow up Christian than ever in our lifetime before. It does not require a vast knowledge of theology to win your neighbors. Too much theological talk would scare them away! But the quiet friendly talk with a trusted neighbor who says, "I find that Christ helps me thus and thus in my daily living; won't you come along with us to him?" really wins people.

Our church is setting itself to win enough new people to Christ and to help them to become good members of the church, so that we will have 250,000 members in the Church of the Brethren by 1958. Won't that be an excellent way to celebrate our 250th anniversary? Actually that means that the average church will have a net increase of only 5% in membership each year. And your church, with 240 members now, and with all those new people around you, should easily reach 300 or more in four years, don't you think?

I have talked with your minister, Henry, and I know how much confidence he has in you. He will be able to give you and the other laymen and the deacons some practical help in a few training sessions when you start. And the easiest way to learn how is to start out and win some one. Frankly, I do not know any activity in the Christian life more rewarding than this business of going out two by two, or one by one, to share Christ with others.

It gives you a wonderful feeling that you are really doing what Christ wants you to do; it is the best kind of sharing with our neighbors, it builds up the church, and it does something for us personally that is fine and enriching.

So, Brother Henry, I am sure you will find that the best way to meet that situation, and to put something really good in place of the less worthy forms of evangelism, is to go out with your good wife, Lois, or with one of the other men of the church, and start winning those neighbors yourself!

You are the one who can build a bridge of faith across which they will gladly walk—to Christ and his church!

God bless you as you go!

Your brother in sharing Christ,
Edward K. Ziegler

Winter Thunder. Mari Sandoz. Westminster 1954. 64 pages. $1.50.

This slim volume is an extended short story reprinted from the Saturday Evening Post. It is the exciting narrative of a school bus marooned in a blizzard and the heroism of the young teacher in keeping her charges alive for eight days under the most desperate conditions imaginable. Winter Thunder is as exciting and adventure-packed as a story can be. It would make very entertaining reading for older youth and adults. — Vernard Eller.

You Can Be Healed. Clifton E. Kew and Clinton J. Kew. Prentice Hall, 1953. 186 pages. $2.95.

Clifton E. and Clinton J. Kew are identical twins who have written a book which says "You Can Be Healed." In their book they emphasize the simplest and oldest type of healing method, the "group therapy." Dr. Norman Vincent Peale says in the introduction that no longer do people shy away from the psychologist. The Kew brothers have substantial evidence of that. As the medical doctor works with the healing of the physical life, so the Kew brothers are healing the minds and personalities of men.

A new and wonderful life awaits the person who will take this book and sincerely take to heart the help offered in it. Fear, hostility, grief, loneliness, guilt, etc., are given treatment in the actual case-studies which are presented in such unique and delightful ways. The person reading these chapters finds himself one of the group where the problem is considered. As each chapter closes the reader feels a definite satisfaction in the help offered. This book is not merely offered to the ill, but the layman and leader alike will find it most delightful. Its pages are full of ideas of how psychology and religion work together in bringing about the salvaging of the whole of the personality.

A most penetrating and clarifying discussion of many of the modern and age-old problems of doubt. It was first a Sunday evening series of dialogue sermons in Cathedral of St. John the Divine, carried on by Dean Pike of the Cathedral and Chaplain Krumm of Columbia University and covered and broadcast by ABC in a nation-wide network.

They are unique in the fact that the Skeptic raises his doubts and the Believer answers them. In such give-and-take the uncertainties and doubts are thoroughly aired. They cover (1) Faith and Reason, (2) Isn't Religion Unscientific? (3) Which is the True Religion? (4) Isn't Ethics Enough? (5) Doesn't Evil Disprove God? (6) I Have My Own Religion and (7) The Way of Faith.

A splendid book for the honest doubter, young or old, who is fairly intellectual.—Charles E. Zunkel.

KINGDOM GLEANINGS

Roy E. Clark was re-elected elder of the Johnson City church, Tenn., instead of Roy White, as was stated in the Jan. 15 issue. We are sorry for this error.

J. E. Keller, for many years treasurer and business manager of Bethany Biblical Seminary before his retirement, died Jan. 18, at his home in Oak Park.

Through Home Missions of the Brotherhood Fund fifteen full supports are provided for home missionaries, twenty-four half supports and seventy-one partial supports ranging up to $900 each.

Some 317,000 food parcels shipped to Greece from the United States by Church World Service were taken over at the port by church officials. The Orthodox Church in Greece will distribute most of the parcels, and the Greek Evangelical church will handle the balance.

Space is still available in the Holy Land tour being conducted by L. W. Shultz from March 24 to May 23. Time will be spent in several European countries, as well as in Palestine. Those who are interested should contact L. W. Shultz, Milford, Ind., immediately for further information.

The All-India Conference of Indian Christians protested to the government that attacks on foreign missionaries had "degenerated into an attack on the Christian religion and culture." The conference is made up largely of Protestants. The conference resolution asked the government to institute an impartial inquiry into charges made against foreign missionaries.

Methodist colleges and universities received a record total of more than $28,000,000 in special gifts during 1954, according to an announcement by the Methodist Board of Education. In spite of the upward trend in giving, Dr. John O. Gross, executive secretary of the board's division of education institutions, warned that many church related schools will continue to face financial difficulties.

The Federal Reserve Bank of Philadelphia has recently exhibited a collection of coins in circulation in Biblical times—denarii and drachma, shekels, mites, gold pieces and bronzes. The coins epitomize the Bible story from the days of Abraham and the development of Christianity to the reign of the Emperor Constantine. The display will be made available later to the Federal Reserve's 600 member banks in the Philadelphia district.

They Also Serve, a new filmstrip on the alternative service program in the Church of the Brethren, is now available. This filmstrip shows the many areas in which young men now work as they serve for peace, as well as giving information regarding the present alternative service program. In black and white, this filmstrip runs approximately twenty minutes. Narration on 78 rpm records. Rental, $1.00; purchase price, $5.00. It is Arthur Hess, who will begin the work in the Painesville area of Northeastern Ohio, not Arthur Hunn as was erroneously given in the Jan. 29 issue of the Gospel Messenger. Bro. Hess has been a pastor in Ohio and has resigned his pastorate to take up this work in a new field.

A new record for contributions in 1954 was set by the Southern Baptists, who gave $16,895,373 to the denomination's various causes, according to the report by the secretary-treasurer of the Convention's executive committee. This total is ten per cent greater than the 1953 amount. The foreign mission board received nearly nine and one-half millions and the home mission board nearly three millions.

Dr. E. Stanley Jones, noted Methodist evangelist and missionary in India, has predicted that India probably will reduce the number of American missionaries to about half the present total. He says that he does not believe that India is antimissionary, but the fact that the number of missionaries in India has risen sharply since the end of World War II from about 3,000 to almost double that number has worried some Indians who are sensitive about their national indeperdence.

Robert Richards, pastor of the Long Beach church in California, was the unsuspecting featured guest on the This Is Your Life television program on Jan. 12. Merlin Garber, who had been pastor at Champaign, Ill., when Bob became a member there, and other friends appeared on the program. Since the gifts presented at the time of his appearance were intended to aid his ministerial work, the Southern Pacific Association of the Amateur Athletic Union ruled that his amateur status as an athlete was not jeopardized.

Clyde E. Weaver, formerly chaplain at Bethany Hospital in Chicago and a teacher at Bethany Biblical Seminary, has recently been appointed chaplain at the Chicago Parental School. The school, under care of the Chicago Board of Education, has been set up to care for boys who have a record of truancy at their neighborhood schools. The Protestant chaplaincy is maintained by the Council of Church Women of Greater Chicago. Bro. Weaver conducts two services each Sunday, one for the older group and one for the younger. Helping him are six to eight students from Bethany, who teach in the Sunday school, lead the music or prayers or take turns preaching.

Applications are still being accepted for international work camps in Germany, Austria and Greece, sponsored by the Brethren Service Comission of the General Brotherhood Board. Several camps will have construction work in needy areas as their main project; one camp will conduct a recreational and social program for children in a refugee center; another one will be in the form of a peace seminar. Camps will last for five weeks with an opportunity for campers to include also a three-week tour of several European countries. Approximate dates: June 8 through Aug. 31. Cost: approximately $700, including the tour. If you are eighteen years or over and want to spend a worth-while summer, write immediately to Brethren Service Commission, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

A. C. Baugher was re-elected chairman of the Eastern Region board at its meeting on Jan. 17. Other officers are Carl Myers, vice-chairman, M. Guy West, secretary, Ray L. Fyock, treasurer, who was also re-elected.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr. has given $20,000,000 in securities to strengthen and develop Protestant theological education in the United States. The gift is believed to be the largest single grant ever made for religious training purposes.

Kansas leads all other states in the Christian Rural Overseas Program drive for 1954. Although in past years Texas has been the top-ranking state with Kansas second, the Kansas total had been achieved despite widespread drought in the state during the summer.

American churches spent more than $588,000,000 on new buildings in 1954, according to estimates by the Departments of Commerce and Labor. Government economists predicted that more than $600,000,000 worth of construction would be undertaken by churches this year.

The top hymn among five selected by the Hymn Society of America in a hymn-writing project co-sponsored by the United Christian Youth Movement was O Master, Who in Days of Youth. The author is a young North Carolina Methodist minister, Rev. H. Glen Lanier, who has already written 300 poems. The hymn-writing project was part of the celebration of the 1955 Youth Week.

Paul W. Kinsel, pastor of the Trotwood church, Ohio, was elected a member-at-large of the board of directors of Heifer Project, Inc., at the annual board meeting on Jan. 12, at New Windsor, Md. The board also set goals of 1,200 cattle, 500 goats, 400 pigs, 100,000 chicks and 400 packages of honey bees for overseas shipment during the coming year. Thurl Metzger, executive, reported that during 1954 twenty-eight shipments were made to fourteen different countries.

The presidents of the colleges and the seminary, A. C. Baugher, Warren D. Bowman, Desmond W. Bittinger, Calvert N. Ellis, Harold D. Fasnacht, V. F. Schwalm, Paul Robinson, and Dr. Glenn L. Clayton, president of Ashland College, all attended the meeting of our Committee on Higher Education in Washington, D. C., Jan. 10 and 11. Paul H. Bowman, chairman of the Christian Education Commission of the General Brotherhood Board, and C. Ernest Davis, executive secretary, were also present. A. G. Breidenstine, dean of Franklin and Marshall college, addressed the group on Our Brethren Colleges and the Liberal Arts. Moderator A. Stauffer Curry read a paper, A Look at Our Brethren Program of Higher Education, which he has promised to provide for the Gospel Messenger. Dean Morley Mays of Juniata and Dean John W. Boitnott of Bridgewater also attended some of the sessions. The college men all stayed for the meeting of the Association of American Colleges, the program of which had an exceptionally high spiritual tone. President Eisenhower extended greetings in person and significant addresses were given by the Rev. Edward L. R. Elson, Mrs. Peter Marshall and Sir Roger Makins, the British ambassador.

A total of more than $18,000,000 was appropriated for foreign and home missions by the Methodist Board of Missions at a recent meeting. It exceeds the last year's figure by more than $500,000.

There are now more than 70 interdenominational Union Protestant churches serving an estimated 25,000 Americans and other English-speaking non-nationals in 35 countries around the world.

A Greek refugee tends beans which have grown from seeds supplied through the Seeds of Hope project

National Council of Churches

SEEDS OF HOPE

John Shonk
Lafayette, Indiana

SEEDS OF HOPE has been an emphasis that has "caught fire" in many of the churches of Southern Indiana and has challenged many of our congregations to greater achievements in sharing. Seeds of Hope is a project that appeals to all age groups. Even small children know something of the miracle of seeds. The churches make this a most meaningful sharing experience for everyone by having the seeds on hand. Thus even a small child comes to realize that his small contribution buys a packet or two of seeds which may bring hope and joy as well as food to some unfortunate person.

There are still millions upon millions of refugee peoples scattered from Korea to Western Europe. Many of them are in camps or on small plots of reclaimed lands. They suffer through no fault of their own, only because they are victims of circumstance. Through these seeds, these underprivileged people will sense a message of hope because it comes from Christian friends in America. Since these seeds also enable these people to help themselves, we have regenerated their faith in themselves. Sending seeds is probably one of the most efficient means of helping meet the needs of these peoples. A few dollars' worth of seeds plus the miracle of God brings forth an abundant increase.

Each church sponsors the project in a way adapted to its particular organization. It is logical that in many churches the local Brethren service director promotes and interprets the project. In others, Sunday-school classes, women's work, men's work or some other interested group promotes it. Whoever sponsors the project should have the approval of the church board, pastor's cabinet or council meeting, depending on the local situation, in order that it may be carried out as an experience of the entire church with the support of as many people as possible.

Securing the seeds locally in January and February is generally difficult. Many churches responded enthusiastically for the first time once this problem was solved. Some churches solved it by having a committee secure the seeds that in turn are purchased by the individuals participating.

Most of our churches responded after the problem was solved on the district level. A seedsman was found who was willing to quote a special price of $1.40 on the family-size collection of packets, which had a catalogue value of $5.00. An order blank was planned with the seedsman and each church was mailed copies to use in ordering their seeds directly.

The fact that this seedsman was willing to sell these seeds at approximately his cost and was willing to have his business used to help get some of the Lord's work done made a special appeal to the people. Each church or district could likely find a seedsman near them who would give a substantial discount.

The climax of this sharing experience should come in worship. Through a well-planned dedication service, what might have been just another worthy cause becomes an act of Christian sharing with spiritual significance.

John Shonk is the peace and Brethren service director for Southern Indiana.

ADULT SEMINAR

THE 1955 Washington-New York Adult Political Action Seminar has been scheduled for Feb. 28 through March 5. Headquarters for the seminar is the Church of the Brethren, 4th and North Carolina Ave., S.E., Washington 3, D. C. The first three days of the conference will be held in Washington and a day and a half will be spent in New York.

Highlights of the Washington phase will be visits to Congress, committee hearings, visits to embasies, discussions and sessions with congressmen or senators. The New York phase will center around the United Nations — its activities and its organization. The purpose of the seminar is to acquaint Christian citizens with their government and how it operates. Some vital issues will come up in Congress this year including the extension of the present draft law.

Cost: Registration fee and travel insurance — $4.00 for both phases of the seminar (Washington and New York) or $3.00 for the Washington phase only. Lodging, $2.00 per night; food, approximately $3.00 per day, small amount for transportation in Washington and New York—taxis, bus, etc.

Room assignment begins Sunday evening, Feb. 27 at 6:00 p.m. or Monday morning, Feb. 28 at 8:00 a.m.

For more information or to register, write: Brethren Service Commission, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State Street, Elgin, Ill.

Just Eighty Cents

Dale Aukerman

WHAT is a mere eighty cents anyway? Enough for a movie perhaps, or a modest meal in an inexpensive restaurant, three gallons of gas, or one four-millionth of the price of a bomber. But for a certain refugee it meant a layer of leather between his socks and the snow.

It was a chilling, slushy day in March. A young Yugoslav refugee entered our office. Large and bony in build, blond-haired, he had a well-formed but haggard and discouraged face. He could speak only fragmentary German, and it was a little while before we understood his situation. He pointed to his feet. He was wearing no shoes, only a pair of probably borrowed rubber sandals fitting snugly over several pairs of socks. "Cobbler . . . . 20 schillings (80c) . . . . no shoes." The gestures and the words began to fit together. His one and only pair of shoes had begun to fall apart. A cobbler had repaired them for him, but now refused to give them back except for the twenty schilling payment.

There are sly fellows among refugees but he did not seem like one. I offered him a loan saying that he could, in any case, pay it back after he had emigrated. He became hesitant and confused. What if he did not get to emigrate, he asked. After further assurances he took the money and hurried away.

The next Sunday at the close of the service in a little refugee Methodist church I was amazed to turn around and see behind me my Yugoslavian friend. He was astounded also. We bravely tried to communicate a few ideas. He showed me a picture of his Methodist church in Yugoslavia. In the aisle he pointed to his oldish, wrinkled, black shoes with shy happiness. Then we were silent. What did it matter that we could hardly speak to each other? We were brothers in Christ.

Two Sundays later I saw him in church again. A young woman was seated near the front of the church beside him. The minister announced that all in attendance were invited to stay for the wedding following the service. At the proper time the two of them went forward.

What a remarkable wedding it was! The first remarkable detail was the apparel of the couple. Both wore overcoats as did everyone else in the cold church. The bride wore a grey overcoat and a red scarf. Both the bride and groom had recently fled from Yugoslavia and could understand little German. The pastor, a Volksdeutsch refugee, could not speak Yugoslavian. However, he did speak Ruthenian; and this obscure Slavic language, the general tenor of which the couple could follow, was the language of the service.

Everything was so tragically cosmopolitan: place, Austria; pastor, German refugee from Russia; bride and groom, Yugoslavian; language, Ruthenian; congregation present, refugees from half a dozen Eastern European countries. The two stood during the service and then kneeled for prayer. I looked admiringly at the shabby soles of the bridegroom's shoes. What faith in the future! Two weeks earlier he had not had eighty cents and he probably had not become richer since. Helpless exiles in an unfriendly land, these two Christians were uniting to face the darkness of the present and follow the fleeting radiance of the future.

Midsummer came. One day the Yugoslav walked into the office and laid a 20 schilling bill on the desk. He looked thinner, wearier, more haggard. His German had improved somewhat. How were things going? Well, it was not even any use looking for work. And as for emigration (how they had counted on it!) the commission said to wait until next year and they might have a chance. Stomach ulcers were weakening him. "In the camp we are given what we have to have," he smiled with sad resignation, "room, meals from the common kitchen, occasional cans of soap powder, yes and 15 schillings a month spending money." He soon fled in apologetic haste.

I fingered the bill and put it into my billfold. A diffuse indictment streamed through me; I felt almost like a robber. That trifling eighty cents was more than one month's income for him. He and his wife must have saved it schilling by schilling during those four months. He would never need that money worse. Yet with it he bought not bread, but his honor!

Executive Secretary
Southern District of Ohio

IT HAS come to be taken for granted that good church administration demands the assignment of responsibilities with the result that we have an organization of sufficient proportions to direct the activities which result in good Kingdom building.

In this total structure, no one is assigned a duty that can be more productive of good results than the nominating committee, for these are the persons who present the names from which the leadership of the church will be chosen. Since the results of their work is so far-reaching, it is important that this committee be formed with the greatest of care. It is generally agreed that the principle of democracy should be observed in good church administration. The formation of this committee should be no exception. It would seem that at least three of these members should be selected by a vote of the church with terms expiring at different dates. In order that all interests of the church be represented, a number of persons should serves ex officio, e.g., pastor, directors of men's work, women's work, youth work and children's work.

The work to be done by this committee would seem to involve the following phases:

I. To survey the membership of the church for talent to lead in the various fields of work.
2. To evaluate the qualifications of potential talent.
3. To find and nominate willing and qualified persons.
4. To prepare and present the ballot to the church for voting.
5. To collect the ballots and act as tellers.

In the attempt to locate available talent, each member of the nominating committee should be provided with:

1. A complete church membership list—preferably classified as to age.
2. A manual of church officers with their duties.
3. A complete list of present church offices and officers.
4. A list of members who are ineligible—by tenure rule or otherwise—for the various offices.
5. A copy of the ballot used at the last church election.

This task could also be facilitated by the use of interest finders, asking the members to suggest their special interests and their willingness to serve. It is quite possible that further help could be secured by asking the church for suggestions of talent.

In the matter of evaluating the available talent, it will require kindness and frankness, also courage and vision. A professional attitude must be maintained so that this discussion is kept on a high level and all judgments expressed held in confidence. After the committee has located its talent, it would seem to be only fair to consult these persons, presenting to them the opportunity for service and securing their consent for their names to be placed on the ballot for election.

Preparation of Ballot

In the matter of preparing the ballot, care should be used to make it attractive. Overcrowding and careless duplicating should be avoided. In many cases an expenditure for printing would be fully justified. Adequate instruction for the voter should appear on the ballot. The names for the offices might be placed in alphabetical order one year and be reversed the next year in order to reduce the bad results of "blind voting" to a minimum. If all the names placed on the ballot are numbered consecutively, telling will be simplified by reporting numbers rather than names.

The presentation of the church ballot should not be a "surprise

The work of the church is a shared task. The nominating committee discovers leaders who help guide the church families into enriching lives of real Christian growth and service attack" for either the nominee or the voter. Therefore, I lean strongly toward the position of presenting the ballot ahead of the time for voting so that prayerful study can be made. Family groups could make good use of such an opportunity for family prayer and consideration. Our belief in the principle of democracy demands that there should be opportunity for further nominations to be made from the floor or space provided under each office for the insertion of another name for whom the voter desires to cast a ballot. The time for casting the ballot also becomes a matter of great importance. Since the percentage of the membership attending the business meeting is so low, some churches are presenting the ballot at the Sunday morning service in order that a greater number of members participates in the election. There are advantages and disadvantages to either plan. The decision will need to be made in favor of the plan offering the greatest number of advantages in a given situation.

H. Armstrong Roberts

Since the nominating committee has spent much time in the selection of nominees and in the preparing of the ballots, they should be equipped with additional skill for the collection and counting of the ballots. This is a time-consuming task and should not be required at the time when the ballots are cast. The problem of the breaking of possible tie votes could be solved by entrusting this task to the committee and presenting the entire results of the ballot in printed or mimeographed form at the following Sunday service.

It is obvious that the work of this committee cannot be done in a single evening. This means that the nominating committee members must be prepared to spend enough time to do their complete task well.

Congregation Shares in Task

Since the results of the work of the church depend so largely upon the leadership selected from the ballot prepared by the nominating committee, every effort should be made to have the entire church assume some responsibility for sharing this task. This may be achieved by announcing the times of meeting for the committee requesting the church to pray with the members for divine guidance in their task. No work of the church can ever be totally assigned. It is always a shared task. And how true this must be in the task of presenting a ballot for the church election!

Church Membership Classes

The following two stories relate actual enriching experiences in two local churches during the Lenten period of 1954.

For Children and Their Parents

For many years I have conducted classes on church membership for juniors and junior high youth. These classes were held weekly for approximately three months prior to Easter. In making plans for a class at the beginning of 1954, the idea of having the parents attend with the children seemed to be worth considering.

This called for the consent and co-operation of the parents. For a trial school, it was decided to contact the parents of the third-year juniors. A call was made in each home to present the idea. The plan received the approval of the parents; so classes were arranged for each Wednesday evening at 7:30 during the months of February and March (nine weeks.)

The course was called The Christian Way of Life. The fundamentals of the Christian faith were studied. Each one was asked to hand in written questions without names attached. Each question was handled in connection with the place it fit into the course of study. This means of searching for the answer to questions created interest in the class.

As truths were discussed, there was an attempt to put them into life's situations and since parents and their children were studying together, a special note was made of how the discoveries fit into the life of the home.

The discussion of the lesson around the table at home brought parent and child together in conversation on new issues in the building of life. God, Christ, the Holy Spirit, the meaning of salvation, the Christian witness and many other topics were of common interest.

It is my conviction that this approach will accomplish much more than classes for juniors without the parents. In a session with some of the parents and their children after the course, a number of benefits were listed:

1. The parents had a clearer understanding of the meaning of the Christian way.
2. The children found it easier to speak to their parents or raise questions on spiritual topics.
3. In some homes, a new approach to family worship was discovered.—Clarence B. Fike, pastor, Goshen City church, Ind.

For Adults and Youth

For several years the writer has been conducting preparation-for-membership classes for those coming into the church, either by baptism or from churches other than the Church of the Brethren. Such classes had been including the adults with the children. Educationally, this may not be considered good practice even though the family where all ages are mixed is considered a fairly good educational institution. However, this past year the two classes were separated.

Those who state their intention of coming into the church membership by baptism or by letter and who feel that they would like to know about the history, beliefs and practices of the Church of the Brethren are invited to enroll in the class. Several of the deacons who are in the visitation program also came into the class for the instruction and to give a fellowship basis which proved to be quite valuable. Laymen in such a class also can give valuable insights and slants on practices and beliefs.

The class for adults and young people met on Sunday mornings during the church school period with the pastor teaching. The study manual entitled The Way, the Truth and the Life was used for this past year's course. Sessions were held each Sunday from January through Palm Sunday. The children's class met on Saturdays.

Baptism was on Palm Sunday evening, with a reception for new members following. Each new member had a "sponsor," in most cases deacons or visitors in the evangelism program, who introduced the new member, or members, if they were in the same family, to the congregation, telling where he lives, his jobs, his hobbies, his special talents, etc. Light refreshments were served while people had opportunity to visit with the new members. The sponsoring families have kept their interest in the new members and helped them through the year to get acquainted and assimilated into the church fellowship. This has been a good experience in our church and we expect to repeat it.—W. Glenn McFadden, pastor of Elgin Church, Ill.

Progress at Kaurwatikari

Leland S. Brubaker

SATURDAY morning, Dec. 18, we left Lassa for Chibuk, traveling with Stover Kulp in his jeep station wagon the thirty-three miles on what we folks in America would call bush paths. Ten miles from Chibuk we stopped at the little village of Kaurwatikari. I was eager to visit in that village because I distinctly remembered when we were there seven years ago. At that time we met in the little religious instruction building. That morning seven years ago it was so crowded that it became stifling hot inside the church in a short time.

The old building is still in use. But there is also a good school building there now in addition to this old one. They have rather a small number of pupils—twenty-five in the first and second primary grades. It is a regular school recognized by the Nigerian government.

The thing that thrilled me the most, however, was the fact that there is now an organized church in the village. Seven years ago there was only a class for religious instruction, which had begun in 1943 with forty-six people enrolled. Ira Petre reports that of the original number fifteen stayed by, continued to be interested and were later baptized into the church.

Now there is in this village of one thousand people a church with a membership of forty-seven. Twenty-two more people have taken the covenant and will, after a period of religious training, be received into the church through the rites of baptism. The "church committee" spearheads the work of the church in the village. It is composed of five members and really acts as the executive committee of the congregation. All matters of importance are decided by them together with their missionary-pastor.

As we greeted the crowd that filled the school-church building, I congratulated them on the advance they had made in the past few years. Seven years ago there was not even a parent church at Chibuk—only a group of people interested in the church. Since then the Chibuk church has been established, with the result that their missionary outreach has established the church at Kaurwatikari. Surely this is a place where the seed has fallen on good ground.

Bush Preaching

SUNDAY afternoon, Dec. 19, we went with Ira Petre from Chibuk to a little village for an afternoon service. We bumped over bush paths in Ira's jeep for about three miles and then we parked the jeep under the shade of a tree and took to walking. At the first compound (cluster of houses belonging to one man) we inquired for the best and shortest path to the village of Hirpaya. One of the young men of the compound immediately volunteered to lead us there and he promptly offered to carry my camera bag and away we went.

We walked alonk the winding bush paths. In places we went through their little farms. Other times we walked along paths where the grass was higher than our heads. Finally after about a mile, which really seemed much further to me, we came into an opening in the bush and here we began to see the first compounds of the village itself. But we went to the chief's compound where they have been having Sunday afternoon preaching services for quite some time.

Close by his compound there was a blacksmith at work. A little girl was using goat skins for the bellows and with them produced a very hot charcoal fire. Women were hulling peanuts. Village life went right on until the service was ready to begin and then they all stopped their work and sat around in the yard listening. Jacob, one of the primary school teachers at Chibuk, led the service. He had two other Nigerian young men with him. They sang a song, led in prayer and then Jacob gave the people a very fine talk.

About seventy-five people sat in the chief's compound and listened. They gave very close attention to the service of worship. They were most appreciative of the fact that visitors had come to their village to greet them.

The walk back to the jeep and the bumpy ride to Chibuk did not seem so far after this service. This is sowing the "good seed" and in faith we cannot help but believe that some day there will be a church there with a goodly group of believers. It was really a thrilling afternoon! Such visits produce mutual understanding and friendship and give an opportunity to get at what we would say are the "grass roots" of village life here in Nigeria. From them come the churches of the future.—Leland S. Brubaker.

Christian World Facts is a very informative 64-page booklet on foreign missions published annually by the Division of Foreign Missions of the National Council of Churches. Several of our Brethren missionaries have contributed to its pages. Pastors have already received copies of the 1955 issue of Christian World Facts. A limited number of copies remain for those who request them. Order your copy from the Foreign Mission office of the General Brotherhood Board, Elgin, Illinois.

I Went to the Women's Work Meeting

Mrs. Leland Brubaker

Photos by Leland S. Brubaker

THE district meeting of the Church of the Brethren in Nigeria began on Dec. 2, 1954, and continued through the next Tuesday. More than six hundred people attended including many women. The Garkida church, the leper colony church, and one of the nearby village churches were responsible for providing for the people who came from afar. The women were busy for many days collecting firewood, cooking pots, grain and grass mats for shelters for those who came. They helped clean the church, replastering much of it. They redecorated the pulpit area and redid the mud cross on the wall back of the pulpit in a beautiful way. One was certainly reminded of our women's groups at home as they worked with a will that the meeting should be a real success.

In the afternoons of Friday, Saturday and Sunday the women had their meetings. They gave reports and transacted other business. Sister Clara Harper presided. Many of the women reporting had a baby on the back and were timid about appearing before the group. However, they had a story to tell and they told it. Some of the reports were given in Bura and some in Margi. An interperter was at work so that all could understand and one of the missionaries whispered the English to me. Most of the women reported that their groups had meetings twice a month. Nearly every group had a women's school in which they studied arithmetic, hygiene, reading (using the Bible) and sewing. Many of the groups reported that they go out into the near-by villages on Sunday afternoons and hold services for the women. The president of one of their groups is very ill with cancer; so her co-workers harvested her grain and brought in her vegetables. Whenever there are sick among the members they go to help. They also try to have some one at the dispensaries to tell the people who come of the Great Physician.

Some of them raised their money by having a church farm and others decided to set aside a certain per cent of the produce of their individual farms. It was interesting to hear of the ways in which they put their money to work. Some contributed to building funds for their new churches. Others help to pay the eighty teachers who staff the literacy centers which are located in the outlying villages. Some are saving money to help build a school that their children may have a place to go. One group pays school fees for children who would otherwise be unable to go to school. This group also bought a bicycle for their pastor and gave a generous amount to help a woman whose home was destroyed by fire. Several groups reported that they set a sum aside each month to help the sick among them.

Valley View Church
A Community Church

Lee G. Whipple

IN MANY sections of the United States the residential areas around many cities and towns are growing so rapidly that neither churches, schools or business can build adequately to take care of the vast areas of new homes.

The vicinity of Whittier in Southern California, about twenty miles east of Los Angeles, is one such community. There are more homes outside of the city limits than there are inside—a population of 50,000 outside the city limits. Many of these have been built within the last three years. Churches have just now begun to move out into the new residential sections.

The reason for starting the Valley View Community church near Whittier was not to keep up with the Brethren moving to the city or from one part of the city to another. The Church of the Brethren in the district of Southern California and Arizona realized the need for more churches and was encouraged and persuaded to assume some of the responsibilities by the Southern California Council of Churches.

The Valley View church was started by the combined administrative and financial efforts of the district and General Brotherhood Board. The district committee determined the location in co-operation with the Southern California Council of Protestant Churches.

This committee also purchased the property, determined policy procedures and personnel. A house-to-house community survey was made and the community was kept in touch, by mail and doorstep flyer, with all developments in the project from the purchase of the property to the developing of building plans and the starting of the program.

The community people were invited to serve on the building committee and to participate early in all and any activities of the church. They were welcome irrespective of their church background or devotion.

The community has responded well to this free and open invitation and it appears, to date, that this freedom has been appreciated and is one of the contributing factors in our success and, to our knowledge, has not yet caused any known problems in our church fellowship.

Our open confidence in the sincerity of people has been rewarding. We have assumed that people have a feeling and a basic conviction that all Christians should be one and that there is not the difference in denominations that there was once. It is my personal observation that people do not have the prejudice towards denominations that our fathers had.

Another basic assumption has been that everyone interested in church was interested in Christ and, therefore, we kept him central.

We have also assumed that we all want a place in which to work and worship and no one talks about where they came from or how they did it over there.

We also assume that no one denomination or person is perfect or has all the answers or a corner on truth. We humbly admit that we are all seekers of a way and the truth and are students together.

The Brethren are willing to share their basic philosophy, convictions and truth, believing that if we really have it others will know it and want to accept it.

Historically the Church of the Brethren was not afraid of freedom, of the mind, the open Book and the guidance of the Holy Spirit and of Truth.

The first nine months in the history of the Valley View Community church has been one of real joy and satisfaction. It has also been filled with problems and difficulties, but has been a very worth-while and rewarding enterprise.

The first public services were held the first of April 1953. We were officially organized in October. The church is oganized on the commission plan with seven commissions. The seven commissioners are elected by the church and assume the chairmanship and responsibility for the seven commissions. Every member of the church is asked to volunteer his service on one of the seven commissions.

We have ten Sunday-school classes with about sixteen Sunday-school teachers, with the average Sunday-school attendance for the last quarter of 1953 being 130. Our official church membership is seventy. We have two church services each Sunday morning. The first service is designed for the entire family and is an abbreviated service to help give a church-training experience for the children. It is one of the most popular and well-attended services of our entire program, with the average attendance for the last quarter being 109. The eleven o'clock church hour is more of the traditional and formal type, and the attendance for the past quarter has been seventy.

We are very happy with the financial policy that has been pursued in the establishment of the Valley View church. I feel that the response and general interest in finances both indicate that our policy has been wise. Very little or nothing was said concerning finances until after the church was formally organized, and even since then it has been only a normal routine matter in both our organization and in our promotion. The Sunday offerings for the past quarter have averaged $95. Ninety-eight per cent of our giving is made in the weekly offering envelopes. Three fourths of the membership have signed pledge cards, ten families are tithing and a number of other families have pledged a half of a tithe.

The church is instrumental in transforming the lives and habits of our people, perhaps not in any great and dramatic fashion, but it is changing the habits of families from nonchurch attendance to church attendance, from little thought for religion to that of considerable time and energy and financial contribution to the church and to things of the kingdom. You can see by the fact of our organization and need for teachers and other leadership that we have had to have considerable commitment and devotion, and it has been largely by the people right in the community who have assumed these responsibilities, many of them never before having been active in such endeavors.

We now have three choirs—an adult choir, a junior choir and a children's (cherub) choir. The first two perform regularly each Sunday with the children serving occasionally in either of the Sunday morning services.

I Went to a Women's Meeting

You will be especially interested in the women's group from the leper colony church. They had a co-operative farm from which they realized about $18. They use part of their money to help the patients who are too ill to work. They visit in the different sections of the colony. They have a school and study the same subjects as the other women. They too meet twice a month. They are a real influence for good among the people who come from more than forty tribes and speak about that many dialects.

The women's meeting closed with a tea. The fellowship was wonderful. Praise God for these who are serving the Master devotedly and so well in Nigeria. Our prayer is that he will abundantly bless them and all of the women of the church that even greater work may be done.

The Family Counselor

The Family Counselor welcomes letters of inquiry. They may be addressed: Family Life Department, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Dear Troubled,

It has not been possible to print your question because of space. The intensity of your problem has caused me some hesitation in giving specific counsel. However, I suggest the following for your thoughtful consideration.

I find it difficult to accept your analysis that the real problem you are confronted with is a choice between your duties to the church and your loyalty to your husband ("before the day is over I must make a choice between them"). Admittedly, the present point of disagreement centers upon your public work in the program of the church, but this is merely a leverage to get at the bigger problem which exists between the two of you. More precisely, the competition and even antagonism is the result of your awareness that your husband has not been all that you believed he was (against advice to the contrary) at the time of your marriage. In the intervening years physical disease and personal unhappiness have tragically revealed the truth which you find difficult to accept. You first lost rapport, then respect and now love. Your personal relationships have disintregated into spatting and feuding which is now simplified in your thinking as being a mere choice between working at the church and satisfying the whim of your husband that you stay home.

Your letter gives evidence that you are a woman of tremendous energy and perhaps you are superior to your husband in the ability to work with people and get things done. You have cared for the responsibilities of a sizable family by modern standards. Also you have carried your share and perhaps more at the church. In this effort to compensate for these achievements, coupled with his strong sense of guilt in having deceived you, he fights back with temper tantrums, threats to drink, the intimation of infidelity and the sham of suicide. He is using what tools he has in the struggle for which he is obviously out-manned.

It is not to be denied that you have suffered much across these years. Many aspects of your letter trouble me concerning your own moods and motives, as well as your recital of the bad temper of your husband. There are overtones of bitterness evidenced in an inability to understand his problems and some revelation of an unwillingness to try. It is true that the church needs more evangelism, but it is likewise true that such evangelism begins at home with ourselves and those whom we love. I have some concern also that you seem to have an aversion to your home and are driven by a compulsion to believe that you can do the will of God better at some other place than in your own home. The instinct to provide for her family is strongly associated with marriage and motherhood and you alert me to your own shortcomings by your almost desperate attempt to escape these responsibilities by embracing the duties of the church as an alternative.

A review of your long letter reveals that you have many assets for a happier life and many compensations for the distresses which you face. Apparently, in spite of his premarital freedoms, your husband has been faithful to you since your marriage vows. Also, you have four splendid children in whom both of you have a certain pride and satisfaction. Likewise, you have a comfortable home in which all the material needs of life are supplied. In addition to this, your husband gives nominal support to your interest in the work of the church and accompanies you himself on many occasions.

No human situation is perfect. When two persons promise to love each other for better or for worse they do so in the awareness that certain compromises with the ideal must be undertaken. The quarter of a century which you and your husband have shared together ought to provide many areas of common interest and concern. If in the future you find it advisable to curtail some activities in order to achieve a more amiable relationship with your husband you may discover that it will pay satisfactory dividends. May God bless you as you continue to work out your problems with courage and love.

Fiscal Year in Focus

An interpretation of contributions of money and materials to Brotherhood programs

Harl Russell
Secretary, Brotherhood Fund

THE sharing of members during the fiscal year which ended Sept. 30, 1954, is a chapter of significant achievement in Brethren history. To look discerningly at the record on the opposite page is to experience a warm glow of appreciation for what has been offered willingly and, in many instances, sacrificially.

The five per cent increase in Brotherhood Fund giving last year over the previous year reflects a resurging sense of responsibility for the world task of the church. The increase is the third annual gain in Brotherhood Fund sharing. These gains are all the more notable having occurred while numerous congregations were drawing heavily on their resources to make major additions to their plant facilities.

Four Regions Ahead

All regions but one contributed more funds last year than in the former twelve-month period. The largest gain, eight per cent, occurred in the Southeastern Region. The increase in other regions registering gains was: Eastern, one per cent; Central, six per cent; and Western, three per cent. Congregations throughout the Brotherhood experienced a new sense of achievement from having contributed more money for the world task.

Thirty-three Districts Gain

In some districts gains were realized where economic conditions were not conducive to larger giving. More vigorous stewardship teaching and wider use of effective techniques for systematic sharing were primary factors in lifting the level of support for Brotherhood work in the majority of our churches. Larger district Brotherhood Fund goals and more earnest activity toward the attainment of self-allocated objectives were predominant incentives in most of the thirty-three districts whose contributed totals were above the previous year. Eleven of them were in the Southeastern region. Other districts registering gains were two in the Eastern region; eight in the Central region; nine in the Western region; three in the Pacific Coast region.

Organizational Advances

The youth of the church enlarged their Brotherhood Fund giving almost fourfold in response to a spirited challenge of the National Youth Cabinet. Never before were young people so captured with an awareness of their responsibility for the support of all causes and services within the framework of the Brotherhood Fund. Their enthusiasm served as a stimulus to other age groups for Brotherhood Fund giving.

Again the women of the church voluntarily set their Brotherhood Fund objective and surpassed it in their total response. From them $65,451.18 came to apply on commitments the General Brotherhood Board had made in administering work authorized by Annual Conference.

Material Aid Augmented

Materials were also offered in greater quantity. The 567,457 total was an increase of 15,715 pounds. Without the materials with which to minister to those devastated by war, our works of love along today's Jericho roads would have been much less effective.

Support of the program of Heifer Project, Inc., continued at the high level of previous years. Besides the thousands of dollars Brethren contributed for this agency's work, they gave only two less animals for shipment in the year ended Sept. 30, 1954.

A Spiritual Adventure

Our church is well along in the first of two years wherein the theme Seek First His Kingdom will impel us to reappraise our stewardship. Among the fruits of practical action that should arise out of the theme is that of more generous offering of treasure to the Lord of life. As we inventory our resources of material blessings it appears the challenge of a Brotherhood Fund goal, only $25,000 above last year's, is a modest claim upon the giving potential of 1,040 congregations. We are called to a great adventure. New achievements are ahead, if we earnestly desire them.

Church News

Northern California

Empire—A farewell dinner was given in honor of Brother Paul K. Brandt, who had completed five years as our pastor, and his wife. The men of our church helped with the building of their new home in Paradise, Calif. The first of September Brother and Sister Harley Stump and their two sons moved into the parsonage. Brethren I. V. Funderberg, regional secretary, and Floyd Yearout, district ministerial director, were with us to conduct installation services for Brother and Sister Stump. In the evening, Bro. Leland Nelson, pastor of the Modesto church, preached. Following the worship service a get-acquainted reception was held. The month of January was used for the study of our missions in India. On the evening of Jan. 23 Sister Ella Ebbert, retired missionary, talked with us about her work on the India mission field. Three of our young people attended the National Youth Conference. Our church joined the Modesto congregation on the evening of Dec. 12 to hear Sister Sara Shisler tell of her work on the Africa mission field. — Anna Kathryn Heisel, Empire, Calif.

Southern California and Arizona

Phoenix—Two of our young people, Billie Kay Wyatt and James Miller, attended National Youth Conference at Anderson, Ind. Our love feast was held Oct. 31. Our pastor, Bro. Harold Wagner, and Sister Mildred DuVall attended district conference as delegates. Our men's work group is erecting church signs along highways and will help with landscaping of the new Lynnhaven parsonage yard. Our women's fellowship is helping in relief work and sponsored the January school of missions. Bro. Harry Fields showed slides and talked of his work in Puerto Rico. One Sunday evening Bro. Ernest J. Cline of La Verne, Calif., showed pictures and lectured on the Holy Land. Brother and Sister Heckman from Nigeria, Africa, were with us on Dec. 12. Our Christmas program was presented on Dec. 19. Our deacon board has an evangelistic visitation committee organizing a fishermans club which works through the Sunday school. On Sunday evening, Jan. 9, Hansi Goebl, a high school exchange student from Germany who is living with Brother and Sister Coffman at Glendale, was guest speaker in our church and showed pictures of his native land. Our next membership class is planned to begin the first of February. — Flora Schmitt, Phoenix, Ariz.

Washington

Seattle, Lakewood—Guest speakers in our church have been H. O. Jacobson, Dr. Clayton S. Rice and Rev. Olaf A. Stoeve. Twenty-five workers attended our annual retreat at the Covington church. Attention was called to the youth program which will be under the leadership of the Christian education commission, the Christian guild and the parents. Registration Sunday was observed in our Sunday school where the children and their parents were given an opportunity to meet their new teacher and were served a breakfast. A second session of Sunday-school is being held at eleven o'clock to accommodate parents with small children wishing to attend church services. Our choir is under the direction of Mrs. Victor Bendsen. An effort is being made to complete work on the parsonage in October. — Mrs. J. W. Ralston, Seattle, Wash.

Colorado

Haxtun—At the morning service on Oct. 10, our pastor conducted a consecration service for all the newly elected church and Sunday-school officers and teachers. On Oct. 17 Bro. James Renz of Elgin met with us. The offering from our annual birthday dinner was sent to the Navajo Indian mission. For the ladies' aid Christmas party, each member brought kits for the Navajo children. The offering was also designated for the mission. On the evening of Oct. 31 we were host church for a singspiration service which was followed by a period of fellowship. Church membership classes are now in progress for both adults and children under the direction of our pastor. Annual union Thanksgiving services were held in the Assembly of God church with our pastor, Bro. Ralph Anderson, as speaker. A number from our church attended the district youth rally at Rocky Ford. The home mission offering of Nov. 21 will be credited to the support of our missionaries, Brother and Sister Harold Royer. The McPherson College quintet was with us on Dec. 5. Bro. Glenn Swinger from the college brought the evening message. An offering was received Dec. 12 for the American Bible Society. On Dec. 12 our church was invited to the Methodist church to hear a recorded address by Bro. M. R. Zigler, Brethren Service representative in Europe, before the National Convocation of Town and Country, held at Salina, Kansas. This program was followed by a fellowship hour.—Mrs. August Bjorklun, Haxtun, Colo.

Wiley—During the past year we have received thirty new members into our church. A Negro minister was in charge of our revival meetings. We believe that the entire Brotherhood has appreciated this interracial venture in Christian brotherhood since congratulations have been received from so many sources. During the year we have completely redecorated and remodeled the interior of the church and improved all our property. A year ago our church adopted the envelope system of giving; even the Sunday-school children have their envelopes. This fall we adopted a new plan of organization in which the responsibility of running the church is divided among small boards and committees. At our annual home-coming day observance Dr. Raymond Flory of McPherson College was guest speaker. The freshman male quartet from the college sang several times during the day. Our love feast was held on Sunday evening, Nov. 7.—Nora E. Crumpacker, Lamar, Colo.

Northern Iowa, Minnesota and South Dakota

Root River—Our aid is sending new and used materials to New Windsor for relief. With the adult choir project and individual gifts we purchased new hymnals. A special gift was also sent to the Bethany Hospital nurses' home. We sent a box of new sewing materials and school supplies to the Lybrook Indian mission. The men's work group erected road signs on highways leading to our church. Bro. Ray Zook was in charge of the ordaining of our pastor, Bro. Warren W. Hoover, into the eldership. Our aid contributes each month to our church library. We were host church to the district conference. Our pastor shows films at the aid meetings of the missions, their work and problems which helps to make our work more meaningful. The aid is placing the Gospel Messenger in two local hospitals. The string sextet of McPherson College gave a concert on Dec. 6. —Mrs. Clyde Gill, Harmony, Minn.

Worthington — Our church was host church to the district youth rally. Our week of vacation Bible school was directed by Miss Elsie Finckh. Consecration services were held for several children. A two-week revival meeting was held by Bro. I. D. Leatherman. Four persons were baptized into our church at this time. The McPherson ladies' quartet was with us for a Sunday morning service. We held our harvest festival service in October followed by a basket dinner at the noon hour. The women have been collecting clothing for relief. A number of our women attended the sectional women's work rally at Kingsley. —Mrs. Beull Adolph, Worthington, Minn.

Northeastern Kansas

Richland Center—Our church met in regular council meeting on Dec. 5 with Elder Earl Jarboe in charge. Bro. Jarboe was re-elected as elder for the coming year. Our church was host to the district conference. The ladies' aid group meets every two weeks the year around. Bro. Jarboe is to be our pastor for a three-year term. The men's organization sponsored the Lord's Acre project this year. Charlie Williams was chosen Sunday-school superintendent for the new church year. The ladies' aid prepared Christmas boxes for the older people and the shut-ins. It was decided to have our open communion on Easter Sunday morning and our regular love feast in the evening.—Mrs. Charlie Williams, Summerfield, Kansas.

Southeastern Kansas

Mont Ida—The CBYF group presented the play, Home Sweet Home, in our church and later presented it in the Scott Valley church. A fellowship supper was held in the church basement to welcome our summer pastor, Bro. David Webster, and his family. Our vacation Bible school daily offerings were sent to the Navajo Indian project. Bro. R. E. Loshbaugh was re-elected elder for the new year. Bro. Loshbaugh and Norma Jean Watkins attended the National Youth Conference. Brother and Sister Donald Wiley were delegates to district conference. A new intermediate class was organized on Promotion Day. Our neighboring Methodist church extended and we accepted an invitation to attend their church on Temperance Sunday.—Mrs. Carl Wiley, Garnett, Kansas.

Parsons—Our church met in regular council with Elder Shenefelt presiding. Officers were elected with Bro. Francis Shenefelt as elder for the coming year. Our pastor and his wife, Brother and Sister Robert Teegarden, attended the regional conference at McPherson. On Nov. 21 dedication services were held for the new Sunday-school rooms and the recreation room. Bro. G. A. Zook, state executive secretary, brought the afternoon dedicatory address. In the evening of the same day, the film, In His Name, was shown. Bro. Zook also brought the messages on Monday and Tuesday evenings.—Mrs. Julia Jones, Parsons, Kansas.

Northern Illinois and Wisconsin

Mt. Morris—In the absence of our pastor, Dean Frantz, the Methodist pastor, Rev. Hopkins, spoke at a morning worship service. Several from our congregation attended regional conference. Bro. Alvin Brightbill conducted a music institute in our church. The pastor is teaching a class entitled Know Your Bible. We were host church to the district adult and junior high rallies. On the evening of Nov. 17, the women's fellowship was host to the entire church at a potluck supper. At this time Brother and Sister Robert Blough of Polo showed pictures of their European trip. We participated in the Council of Churches' Thanksgiving program, which was held in the Christian church. One Sunday evening, Julian Gromer showed his film, Along the Pacific Coast. Open house was held at the parsonage on Dec. 5. At a special council meeting in December, it was decided to employ the Wells' organization to assist in our campaign for funds for our building

The World of
ALBERT SCHWEITZER

(A Book of Photographs by Erica Anderson)

This 80th birthday anniversary picture story presents vividly the interests of a truly great man. Primarily a book of superb photographs, it has also enough biographical and factual text to provide a clear understanding of Dr. Schweitzer's thought and activity. For those who respect and admire the man, this book will prove to be an additional source of inspiration and enlightenment. The pictured activities show both work and play in the life of one who has tasted and savoured life in nearly all of its aspects —cultural and primitive. The size of the book is 9 x 11 inches with 144 pages of quality textured paper. The 169 photographs are reproduced in photogravure. Bound in two-tone cloth and paper combination. $5.00 program. The research group is studying the book, Discipline and Discovery, by Day. Seven have been received into our church by letter since our last report. —Mrs. Robert Fridley, Mt. Morris, Ill.

Polo—Six of our young people attended the conference at Anderson, Ind. Our pastor attended the regional conference at North Manchester, Ind. Clarence and Lucille Heckman have returned to the States from the mission field. They have brought us inspiring messages. Our love feast service and father and son banquet were not held because of the disrupted conditions made by construction of the new church. On Sunday, Nov. 21, special services were held for the laying of the cornerstone. Brother and Sister David Wieand talked and showed pictures of their trip to Palestine. The children held Sunday school in their new department for the first time and presented a program for Christmas.—Mrs. Maynard Wisner, Polo, Ill.

Rice Lake — Installation services were conducted for our new pastor and his wife, Brother and Sister Thomas E. Shoemaker, by our elder, George Hunn, with Bro. Frank Allen of Menomonie bringing the message. Our fall evangelistic meetings were held with Bro. Homer Kiracofe as speaker. Two persons were received into our fellowship by baptism. The ladies' aid completed the furnishing of the parsonage. Recently the temperance film, Any Boy, U.S.A., was shown to the children in the Sunday school. The young people had a hymn sing on the life of Christ. The proceeds from the young people's white elephant sale was used to send a representative to the rec lab at Manchester College. Two Christmas projects of the young people were the building of a nativity scene in front of the church and the giving of food and toys to a family.—Carol Walker, Rice Lake, Wis.

Yellow Creek—On World Communion Sunday we observed our love feast service. Brother and Sister Boyd Wingert and Brother and Sister R. Earl Farringer were installed into the deacon's office. Deeter Thram, an exchange student, is making his home with the Harold Mantzkes. The women of our church sponsored a supper with the proceeds going to the church remodeling fund. The men's work group has taken the project of remodeling our church.—Mrs. R. Earl Farringer, Lena, Ill.

Southern Illinois

Astoria — Our regular council meeting was held with Bro. Dewey Cave as moderator. Installation services were held for workers of the church and Sunday-school for the coming year. Brethren Charles Harshberger and Merle Stutsmen of Peoria brought messages on evangelism. Clara B. Myer, former missionary to Africa, was guest speaker for the all-day union harvest meeting at the Astoria church. Union Thanksgiving services were held at the Nazarene church with Dale Ferris as speaker. As a result of the evangelistic meetings held in our church by Bro. David Schechter of Detroit, two persons were baptized into our church fellowship. One Sunday Bro. Paul Weaver, junior high and camping director for the Brotherhood, was guest speaker in our church. Rev. Stanley E. Jones was speaker at our church on Oct. 29. Our pastor and his wife attended the regional conference at Manchester College. The women's work group sent food packets to our boys who are in service. —Mrs. Lizzie Riebling, Astoria, Ill.

Panther Creek — Bro. Amos Yardy opened our council meeting on Dec. 4. Installation services were held during a morning worship service for the newly elected Sunday-school and church officers.

Our evangelistic meetings were conducted by W. T. Heckman. Four of our young people attended the National Youth Conference. We held harvest meeting services with Bro. John Blough as guest speaker for the day. Sister Jessie Yardy was leader for our Sunday evening mission study. Two of our young men are attending Manchester College. Our aid has been making comforters for relief work.—Mrs. J. E. Small, Roanoke, Ill.

Northern Indiana

Blissville — Eight members have been added to our church by baptism since our last report. From the time Bro. Robert Swank left his work as part-time pastor in our church until the time our new pastor, Sister Opel Pence, began her work, our services were conducted by home and neighboring ministers. Bro. B. D. Hirt of Monticello, Ind., conducted our fall revival meeting. We reorganized our church with Bro. Homer Kiracofe of Plymouth as elder. Sister Ruby Hayse was delegate to district meeting. Our Sunday school was represented at the different camps at Camp Mack during the summer months. The men's work group held a public sale with the proceeds being used to finish the ceiling in the church basement. This group also decided to erect church signboards throughout the neighborhood. The Thanksgiving service was in co-operation with the other churches in the community.—Ethel Haag, Walkerton, Ind.

New Salem—Our young people presented the Christmas play, A Child Shall Lead Them. The chorus gave a cantata on Dec. 19 entitled The Story of Christmas. At an evening service, Mrs. Braxton, woman bass singer from Kentucky, and her Negro quartet gave a program in our church. Our ladies' aid has been working on several relief projects. Bro. T. Wayne Rieman of Manchester College conducted our Bible study and discussion the last week of November. Owing to the growth of our young married people's class, the board of Christian education recommended that we make a new class for our younger married people.—Edna Tom, Milford, Ind.

Middle Pennsylvania

Martinsburg — Bro. Harrison Frantz talked on behalf of the nurses' training school for Bethany Hospital. At the Juniata College league meeting, which was held in our church, Miss Emma Snyder talked and showed slides of mission work in Africa. A new constitution was adopted at our October council meeting. Bro. Rufus McDannel was guest speaker at our harvest home services. Food contributions were given to the Morrison Cove Home. In the absence of our pastor, Brethren Daniel Brumbaugh and Arthur Croyle were with us. A program was presented in our church by the Door of Hope of Altoona, Pa. The women's community mission study group held a meeting in our church at which time the book, God, Man and the City, was presented. Evangelistic meetings began Nov. 4 with local ministers preaching until Nov. 8, when Bro. Guy West of York, Pa., conducted the services until the close of the meetings on Nov. 14. Sixteen persons were received into the church by baptism. The union Thanksgiving service was held in our church. One Sunday, Dr. Charles Weaver of Manheim, a representative of the Pennsylvania Temperance League, spoke on the problem of alcohol. A district leadership training school was held in our church for a period of six weeks with our pastor, Bro. Forney, as dean of the school. There are two groups of young people meeting this year—the CBYF and the junior high fellowship. A cantata, The Child Jesus, was presented by the mixed choir. The CBYF was in charge of the candlelight service.—Mrs. C. O. Beery, Martinsburg, Pa.

Florida and Georgia

Ft. Myers—We held our council meeting in November with Elder J. L. Miller presiding. Our love feast will be held on Feb. 5. Pennsylvania Day will be observed on Feb. 13 and Florida Day on Feb. 27. On these special days visitors of those states (or any other state) meet with us for services and a basket dinner. Recently Bro. Fred Hollenberg of Sebring brought our morning message. Sisters Maggie Miller and Dora Jean Wynn were delegates to district conference. Our ladies' aid is making quilts and plans are being made to help with the feed bag project and baby clothes for Puerto Rico. —Mrs. Dora Jean Wynn, Ft. Myers, Fla.

Eastern Virginia

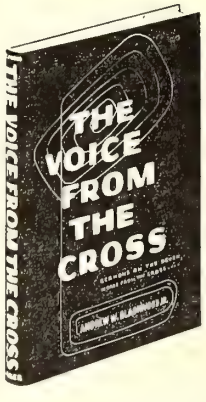
Western Mt. Carmel—Since our last report five persons have been received by baptism and two by letter into our church fellowship. Communion was observed at the Evergreen church on World Communion Sunday, and at the Shiloh church on Nov. 7. Brother and Sister I. S. Long, former missionaries to India, were recent guest speakers in the Evergreen church. Dr. Jacob Huffman of Dayton, Va., was guest speaker in the Evergreen church one Sunday. During the winter months, Brother and Sister Albert Saul, students at Bridgewater College, are assisting in the work at Shiloh two Sundays each month. A union Thanksgiving service was held at the Evergreen church in cooperation with the Congregational Christian and the Episcopal churches. Rev. Douglas Pitt was the speaker for this special service. The picture, Holy Night, was shown on family night at the Evergreen church. It was also shown at the Mountain Grove and Shiloh churches. Recently the fourth picture of the St. Paul series, Ambassadors for Christ, was shown at all three churches. A number of our young people attended the youth rally at the Midland church. The young people of the Evergreen church and the Mountain Grove group are working jointly this winter.—Nelie Wampler, Geer, Va.

First Virginia

Green Hill—The first of September we welcomed our new pastor, Bro. Fenton Platter, and his family from Front Royal, Va. We have remodeled and added some additional rooms to our parsonage. A number of our members attended the district superintendents' banquet at the Hollins Road church. Our men's work group sponsored a waffle supper with the proceeds being used for a lighted church bulletin board for the church lawn. Our revival was held in November with Bro. Merlin Garber, pastor of the Central church in Roanoke, conducting the services. Eight were baptized and eleven received by letter into our fellowship. Our church participated in a community Thanksgiving service at the Fort Lewis Christian church.—Charlotte Ann Coon, Salem, Va.

Roanoke, First—For our evening service on Nov. 7, Bro. D. P. Hylton was our guest minister. One Sunday the young people had charge of the morning worship. The youth choir sang and the guest speaker was Bro. Jay Bower, a member of our church who is a ministerial student at Bridgewater College. In the evening of the same day, Bro. Ernest F. Sherfy was speaker. Our men's work organization purchased and sent a heifer overseas for relief. Several young people assisted the pastor in the Thanksgiving service. The offering was used for the building fund. Breakfast was served by the youth department following the services. On Dec. 5 seven new members were received by baptism and six by letter into our church. In the evening the Monroe junior high school choir directed by Frank Beahm, Jr. gave a music concert in our church. A children dedication service was held during the morning worship on Dec. 12. In the evening the children presented their annual Christmas program. On Dec. 14 the women's auxiliary had a covered dish luncheon honoring the older members of the church. The annual white gift service was a part of the morning services on Dec. 19. That evening the choir gave the Christmas cantata, The Christ Child. On the evening of Dec. 26 the young people's department gave the play, The Littlest Shepherd.—Betty Jordan, Roanoke, Va.

Second Virginia



Forest Chapel—We had a dedication service for our new parsonage with the morning sermon by Bro. Rufus King of Bridgewater. At the afternoon service, Bro. Nelson T. Huffman, accompanied by Ruth Weybright, brought a musical program. The women's work group sponsored open house at the parsonage following the afternoon service. Our regular council meeting was held Dec. 1 with Bro. Ernest Wampler in charge. The women's work group sponsored Mrs. Rufus Bowman as guest speaker one Sunday. During our pastor's vacation in the fall, Jimmy Ross, a student at Bridgewater College, was in charge of our morning services. Two of our CBYF members attended the youth conference at Anderson. Our CBYF sponsored a musical program by the Springdale Mennonite chorus of Waynesboro. — Mrs. B. J. Blessing, Crimora, Va.

The Voice From the Cross

"This book differs from anything else in print. It ought to interest and help many pastors, seminary students, and lay readers. Each chapter brings a message from Golgotha, and shows the bearing on life today. These truths all are helpful at any time of the year, and especially during the Christian harvest season before Easter."—Andrew Blackwood, Sr.

A Study in Light and Dark

A PHOTOGRAPHER pays close attention to lights and shadows. He knows that no matter how interesting a face or an object may be in itself, it needs the benefit of contrasting colors to highlight it. Here is a picture in light and dark. The white girl wears a dark coat, the dark girl wears a light coat. They provide the contrast but they also suggest the unity that is just as essential for a picture. More than that, they represent the kind of unity amid contrast that ought to mark our Christian fellowship. God made no mistakes when he made us of different skin, light and dark, pink and brown, but we have been slow to admit his artistry. He has provided both light and dark keys on his keyboard in the interests of harmony, but we have sometimes refused to accept his music. We have stained glass windows of many hues in our churches. Why do we insist that the membership be white? We ought to rejoice rather in the beauty and the significance of a church in which all races and colors worship and work together.

READERS WRITE . . . to the editor

The Gospel Messenger welcomes letters commenting on editorials, articles and news. Letters should be brief and brotherly.

Never Interfere

I am eighty years old and have read the Gospel Messenger as long as I can remember. I think it is getting more interesting every year. Enjoy reading it and get much inspiration from it. I am a widow. Have four sons and six daughters, twenty-four grandchildren and eighteen great-grandchildren. When in 1938 we celebrated our fiftieth wedding anniversary all our children and grandchildren over ten years of age had been baptized into the Church of the Brethren, but time has changed things. Some have passed on but our group has grown and now there are Catholics, Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists, but more Brethren. But when we all get together at our family reunions there is unity, peace and harmony and we have a wonderful time. So I would just like to say to the Brethren grandmother, if you want to be happy, never interfere with your children's religious or domestic affairs and to the Lutheran mother, be patient with grandmother. Remember she is old and perhaps like most old people set in her ways and you too may be old some day and perhaps just as firm in your convictions.—Reader.

Losses or Leaven?

As a Quaker subscriber and reader of your Gospel Messenger I have been interested in the reasons which Merlin Clark (1-8-55) gave for city-ward migration losses. Since the unprogrammed meetings with which I have contact "speak to the condition of city folks" in contrast to the pastoral churches in the rural areas of Indiana, North Carolina and other states affiliated with the Five Years Meeting, I have some observations which may prove relevant.

In our college town the head of the chemistry department is now active in the Congregational church. I learned from a Presbyterian, now head of the forestry department at the Wooster Experiment Station of Ohio, that the chemist was brought up in a rural parsonage of a historic peace church to which the forester belonged.

I am wondering why there should be a concern about "losing" these two men? I regard them as "leaven" in the Christian loaf. Their influence is wider because they are active in the peace work and work of reconciliation in their new church affiliation. Should we be concerned about preserving our sect or advancing God's kingdom? What about the seed that gave up its identity and produced fifty, one hundred or one thousand fold?

John Woolman expressed this idea thus: "There is a principle which is pure, placed in the human mind, which in different places and ages hath different names. It is, however, pure and proceeds from God. It is deep and inward, confined to no forms of religion nor excluded from any, where the heart stands in perfect sincerity. In whomsoever this takes root and grows, of what nation soever, they become brethren, in the best sense of the expression." — Imre Domonkos, Oberlin, Ohio.

Practice Patience

Your recent editorial, "The Courage to Be Patient," gave such rich information and pertinent suggestions that I wish it could be published in every magazine in the country. The art of patience could be practiced by our troubled world and the Christian church to a much greater extent with profit. Many problems, much misunderstanding and difficulties in the home, the church and the world would be averted if the art of patience was understood and practiced.

I am glad you called our attention to recent happenings which we might have overlooked and which might have led to conflict had not our President exercised the art of patience. We should be thankful he displayed such wisdom and patience in seeking peaceful relations among the nations of the world—William E. Thompson, Dixon, Ill.

A Message for Our Day

If more of our ministers, to say nothing of our members, would spend an hour reading the Messenger each week we would have stronger sermons and a better church program across our Brotherhood. The work of evangelism, missions, service and stewardship would all move forward more rapidly. We do have a message for our day and we need to give it more effectively and convincingly as well as more enthusiastically—Guy E. Wampler, Bassett, Va.

Have we not all one Father?
Has not one God created us?

The Race Problem As Seen From Overseas

Roland E. Wolseley

The author here gives the Indian view of racial tensions and Negro-white relationships in the United States

NO MATTER what speciality they may represent, no matter how remote they may be from the race problem, Americans in India, Pakistan, Ceylon, Burma and other countries in Asia always are asked questions about the relations of the Negro and the white in the United States.

My main assignment while in India for fourteen months was to teach and practice journalism, not sociology or anthropology. My public speeches were about the press of India or of the United States or about the American educational system. I could be sure, however, that after I had concluded my presentation of a lecture one of the first questions would be one of these:

"You Americans talk a lot about democracy, but when are you going to treat the Negro people of your country democratically?"

"Are the Negroes of America any better off than they used to be?"

"What are you doing about the race problem in the United States?"

"Is it true that you lynch hundreds of Negroes in a year in America?"

Sometimes the questioner puts sarcasm into his voice. Sometimes he (it was just as likely to be a she) was clearly belligerent and asked the question, not in search of an answer, but just to embarrass me. On a few occasions the questioner asked about other matters and the line became clear enough. These were not always friendly inquirers. Those who were not were hardly friends of the United States. They were not simply Indians aroused in behalf of the people of color because India is a nation of such people. They were Indians who followed a line which members of the Communist parties of the world have been told to pursue. A few times my hosts later were able to identify certain of these questioners as ardent members of India's small but noisy Communist group.

More often than not, however, the subject of racial tension in the U.S.A. was raised by persons who were hoping to hear that we are making headway in solving the problem. They wanted facts from a person who was fresh from a country about which they had only second-hand information. Whoever the questioners and whatever their motives, I noticed that anti-Semitism was rarely mentioned, probably because it is not an issue to which India has been related. Indians also realize, as many Americans do not yet realize, that anti-Semitism is not actually a matter of race. Nor can I recollect a single question about discrimination against the Chinese, Japanese, Koreans and other Oriental peoples against whom we certainly have discriminated. The focus all is on the Negro.

Whatever the motive of the question, whatever its source, it was always embarrassing to deal with. Honesty required admission that despite our principles and our constant and easy worship of the theory of democracy, we had not brought an end to the discrimination and the attitude of domination by the white people. Indian Christians who asked about race in America were more difficult to answer than were Hindus or Moslems because Indian Christians expect so much more in the way of Christian behavior and attitudes.

After a few question-and-answer periods I decided that more good could be done by admitting our faults of the past, describing our efforts to improve racial relations and asking for patience and understanding by drawing a comparison with India's own difficulties in eradicating the caste system; more good, that is, than by trying to argue that we were completely in the right.

"You in India who are trying to do away with caste distinctions know what a slow process that is," I said. "So you will know why we in the United States are moving so slowly in getting rid of racial discrimination."

Calling attention to India's own painful problem of caste and untouchability, however, appeared to me, when I and others used it, as being a stratagem that merely shifted the spotlight. It was, to be sure, successful at times in gaining greater understanding of us and explained our slowness in getting results. It engendered patience where patience might not have existed before.

But it did not free Americans of responsibility. Persistent and acute questioners reminded us of that. Two wrongs do not make a right, as one of them reminded me, and he asked, "Do you think what you are doing in America is enough?" Of course, it wasn't enough then—or now. The Americans thus put on the spot usually admitted that and said they were hoping for more progress.

We got it in the spring of 1954, when the Supreme Court handed down its decision about segregation in public schools. In India this was a far more convincing piece of evidence about our intentions and hopes than any number of State Department or Fulbright speakers, Negro or white. The Voice of America quickly took full advantage of it and informed at least that part of the world that can or may listen. This great news was widely disseminated in India. What was the result in that country?

The people who are friendly to the U.S.A. or disinterested, which is the more common position, rejoiced. The enemies of the U.S.A. were disconcerted and sought to describe the decision as mere window dressing. When people later heard reports of violence resulting from the decision, of the defiance of it, of the antics of the fantastic organization, the National Association

Is Your Religion Only Skin-deep?

SEVERAL months ago one of our pastors listened to discussions pro and con about segregated churches. He came from a part of the country where segregation was practiced, but he was thinking about the whole matter from the standpoint of his Christian convictions. Most of the arguments for separating Christians, even at worship, by the color of their skin left him unconvinced. He jotted down his conclusion on a postcard and sent it to the editor. Here are his words: "People who discriminate on the basis of the color of a man's skin have a religion that is only skin-deep."

Most of our readers will say Amen. Obviously a Christian, if his religion is to be taken seriously, must be color blind. Of course he recognizes the infinite variety of God's creation—even in people. He knows that psychological and cultural differences are never taken lightly, but he knows also that such distinctions as are made by the pigmentation of skin are really on the surface. He has the confirmation of physiologists for his understanding that God made of one blood all nations, all races, all colors. He knows that Christian doctrine makes no distinction between men on the basis of their racial or national origin—all are sinners; all need the grace of Christ; God so loved the world and sent his only Son that whosoever would believe could have eternal life; and in Christ there is neither Jew nor Greek, slave nor free— "you are all one." The Jesus of Nazareth who disregarded the prejudices of Jews and Samaritans in his day surely gave no support to segregating worshipers on the basis of their skin color.

These things have been said before; they must be emphasized again. So much progress has been made in recent years that there is just cause for thanksgiving. A number of church organizations, especially at the national, regional or community level, have taken forward steps in helping their members accept integration in the schools as required by the Supreme Court decision. Many ministerial associations have set an example for local churches to follow in making their fellowship interracial.

But the critical area where religion is still only skin-deep for some Christians is the local church. It is here that we are least like our Lord. It is here that we need a religion of greater depth. And it is here also where most of us live. If Christian brotherhood ever is to become a reality and not merely an ideal, the transformation must take place in the fellowship of a local church.

We believe most Christians want a religion more than skin-deep, a faith that gets below the surface of prejudice and finds fellowship where God wants it—on the basis of brotherhood. If we settle for something less, we deny our Lord and miss some of the richest experiences he would give us.—K.M.

New Support for a Communist "Line"

IF TWO recent news releases can be considered typical, the propaganda aspects of the cold war must be mighty confusing to nations that do not claim to belong in either camp.

The Voice of America recently broadcast President Eisenhower's inaugural prayer. It was carried in his own voice over the English-language service and translated in thirty-seven other languages. It must have impressed listeners with his sincere faith and his concern for spiritual leadership.

About the same time a news report from Cairo, Egypt, revealed that the Communists were supplying newsstands there with copies of American "girly" magazines, whose lurid covers and illustrations would suggest to Arabs that Americans are immoral. According to the news item, it is part of the Communist line that Americans are indecent and vulgar.

In most other cases when Americans are discovered to be aiding "the Communist line" their activities are regarded as perhaps subversive—or at least questionable. It has been only a short time since ministers and church leaders were under suspicion if they spoke for peace—a Communist objective—or for peaceful coexistence—a term originated by the Communists.

Does this mean that the publishers of indecent and sensational books and magazines, having supplied the Communists with an effective weapon in the cold war, will be publicly censured? Or will this threat to decency, to morals and good taste, be overlooked in its effect abroad as it is ignored at home?

Perhaps it sounds old-fashioned to say so but surely a righteous nation, concerned about standards of decency, concerned about its moral values, concerned about guiding its youth away from filth and toward clean living—surely such a nation is its own best propaganda. Along with the President's prayer, let's export our best literature and our cleanest, finest young people as ambassadors of goodwill. And if we can clean up our newsstands here, the literature we export won't look so bad in Cairo.—K.M.

The church membership class of the Salem Lutheran church of Park Manor, Chicago, is an example of the interracial character of its membership

The Furious and the Godly

That integration of Negroes in a church and a community can take place when there is a leader with courage and conviction is demonstrated by the Salem Lutheran church in the Park Manor community of Chicago.

Kermit Eby and June Greenlief

A STORY needs a hero—or a heroine. This story has both. Our hero and heroine are both charming, hard-working, good-looking people. They have a home and two delightful children who get into the normal amount of mischief—even though Father does happen to be a preacher.

If Father had not been a preacher, maybe this story would not have happened. Or maybe it would have. The important thing is that Father is the kind of man he is.

A story should also have a villain. This one has a collective villain—the fury in the hearts of men, the fury which is translated into things like mob violence and race prejudice, into petty hates and grandiose fears, into the twisted face of cruelty.

Here, then, is our dramatis personae: Rev. and Mrs. Philip Johnson of Chicago's Salem Lutheran church. And here is the scene: Park Manor, running from 67th to 79th Streets, and from State through to Cottage Grove. And our villain, I am sure, is well-known to all of us: the cunning stupidity, the animal fury buried deep in the heart of Everyman.

The Rev. and Mrs. Phil Johnson came to Salem Lutheran church in September of 1949. They had experienced their first lessons in racial violence before their move to Chicago, when they were located in a Riverside, California parish, during the period of Japanese "relocation." They had taken a young Japanese girl to live with them, in order that she might have a chance to finish her education rather than live in the camps. From their Japanese protege they learned a little of what it feels like to be the victim of unreasoning fury.

Several weeks after Johnson accepted the pastorate at Salem Lutheran church, the first Negro family moved into the hitherto lily-white Park Manor community. (The previous minister had reported that it was likely that "it would be at least ten years before the community would be concerned with an interracial condition." The statement went the way of peace in our time and after me the deluge. For it was in August of 1949 that violence broke out in the Park Manor area when a Negro family moved into the 7100 block on St. Lawrence Avenue.)

Violence caught the community with its guard down. Park Manor was poverty-stricken organization-wise; there were no respected groups either capable of or willing to deal with racial tension. In this vacuum, the new minister of Salem promptly took leadership. He distributed mimeographed letters to residents in the area "reminding them that their duty as Americans and Christians required them to demonstrate friendliness and a sense of fair play." Johnson lost no time in making contact with other churches in the community; letters were sent to the ministers urging their co-operation in preventing violence. Meetings were held, and in these meetings the real social forces at work were discussed: housing, depreciation of land values, community disorganization and ways and means of integrating Negroes into the churches.

The letters Pastor Johnson received in return reflected sheer panic. The ministers described an "undercurrent wave of readiness to sell homes quickly and soon: that panicked inclination to run away from impending inevitability and let somebody take the hindmost." One pastor wrote in despair, "How far we are from the kingdom of God!"

At some of the first ministerial and community meetings organized by Pastor Johnson, representatives were intimidated by roving gangs of White Circle Leaguers. Other churches in the Park Manor area chose either to "stick it out" and remain lily-white or to merge with other congregations in faraway areas and "let the Negroes have their church." A Salem Lutheran church report describes how it came about that almost all the "white" churches have disintegrated, are approaching death or are potential customers for real estate brokers.

Pastor Johnson's full achievement can be gauged only in context. While he was quietly and stubbornly integrating his church, four other ministers (and one priest) collapsed: heart attacks, illness, nervous breakdowns. One breakdown case is still in the hospital; several are dead. Says Mrs. Johnson of these men: "They knew the Lord's word, but they were not strong enough to live by it and to bring their congregations to live by it."

When Brothers Dwell Together in Unity

A Message for Race Relations Sunday, February 13, 1955, from the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the United States of America

ALL LIFE is one, created and sustained by the power and the love of God. There is a kinship among all living things that is prior to all separateness. This unity is at the heart of life because life is the creation of God. Man, in addition to being a child of nature, a child of life, is also, and precisely, a child of God. "And God saw everything that he had made, and behold, it was very good." The acceptance of this fundamental belief that man is a child of God by creation carries with it a deep and abiding responsibility for all men of whatever faith or religious insight, to dwell together as brothers in unity.

The Evanston Assembly of the World Council of Churches stated: "It is Jesus Christ, who revealed God as Father, and who died for all men, reconciling them to God and to each other by his cross. From every race and nation a new people of God is created, in which the power of the Spirit overcomes racial pride and fear." This new people of God has laid upon them an even greater moral imperative to dwell with all men as brothers.

As a child of God, a man is a member of one family, the human family. Whatever increases the sense of kinship one with another, brings man closer to his Father; whatever destroys this feeling of oneness, drives man away from his Father. Any and all attitudes, moods, concepts, feelings, customs, practices, laws, personal and collective arts, that arbitrarily separate men are against the human family. If they are against the family, they are opposed to the will of the Father. If they are against God, then, whatever may be the bases for them—ignorance, fear, prejudice or aught else—they are sin.

Racial prejudice in any and all forms is contrary to the will and the design of God. Racial prejudice, with the long series of unhappy incidents that flow from it, is not merely bad, unfortunate, unrighteous—it is sin. Let this teaching be proclaimed. He who wrongs his brother, sins against God.

Many individuals and groups are struggling to overcome the sin of racial prejudice in our society. The barriers erected by prejudice are being breached in many areas of life. The unanimous decision of the United States Supreme Court declaring racial segregation in public schools unconstitutional, marks the promise of a fuller life for all people in the nation. This is cause for rejoicing.

"Behold, how good and pleasant it is when brothers dwell in unity!" This, many churches have yet to discover. There are signs that they are on the way, but time is running out. God grants the churches grace to become a dwelling place for brothers.

The race was not for the weak. While these things were going on, Pastor Johnson was going directly to his congregation. He wrote editorials in The Messenger (Salem church newspaper) emphasizing the importance of decent race relations. He preached sermons on tolerance. ("In those days of tension," Johnson recalls, "a Biblical text on brotherhood would hit out across the assembled congregation like a whiplash.") There were frequent meetings of the congregation in which everyone was encouraged to air his real fears. In one of his circulars, Procedures for a Church in an Area of Racial Change, Pastor Johnson listed his almost irrefutable arguments for church integration, arguments drawn from the Christian faith (the moral order of the universe, the doctrine of creation, doctrine of redemption, doctrine of the church, justification by faith) and from the American heritage (Declaration of Independence, the Constitution, historical necessity).

But the pastor did not stop here. He knew that neither great words, principles nor documents could insure racial amity among frightened people. He went into the homes of his flock to discover the pressing half-expressed anxieties which lay beneath their resentment to Negro move-ins.

"It was strange," says Johnson. "Some of the members I interviewed said to me, 'I agree with you, Pastor. I know that you are acting according to God's Word. But I can't go along with you. I am not that strong. I will have to move out of the community.' "

Johnson found out that the real fear was intermarriage. One of the members with whom Johnson talked reported that the church women especially "feel that their daughters must be protected from Negro boys." Although she (the member) personally does not think intermarriage a good thing, she stated that this is no valid excuse for not having Negroes in the Salem congregation.

Another woman said that most of the women are fearful that if they admit Negroes into their Women's Federation, then to the circles and finally into their homes, the contact would be so close that intermarriage would result. She stated that if you accept, you accept all the way. Therefore, if Negroes are accepted into membership of the church, they should have an opportunity to join the Women's Federation and the circles. This has, of course, occurred, and Negroes are now active in all church groups.

Pastor Johnson opposed these traditional obstacles with facts. Facts were presented at meetings and mimeographed in open letters to the congregations: facts concerning the Supreme Court decision on restrictive covenants; facts relating to the concentration of Negroes in Chicago (at that time Negroes lived in 38 of the city's 50 wards, and in 230 out of 275 suburban census tracts); facts pertaining to the rise of the Negro in America, socially, economically, politically ("Negroes being placed in better paying jobs. Employment of women in skilled and professional capacity. Able to purchase homes in better and better neighborhoods"); and, above all, the fact that the issue could not be avoided: These people must have homes.

In the end, the pastor won his fight for church integration and he had his effect in stabilizing the Park Manor community. Though tension was prevalent in the area for months, it was never as explosive as the racists had hoped it would be. "Salem," says the official church report, "played no small part in this accomplishment." And in an article appearing in the Chicago SUN-TIMES for January 8, 1950, Pastor Johnson's role in quelling disorder was contrasted with the unchecked violence of the Peoria Street riots occurring at the same time. In the end, many of his congregation have remained in the Park Manor area, a fact due, in the words of the church report, "in no small measure to the intelligent approach of Pastor Johnson. . . . Instead of inflicting his will upon them . . . Pastor Johnson chose the more difficult method of tact, sincerity, and intelligence. The result was a peaceful acceptance of Negroes into the Salem congregation."

The community itself remains interracial. Originally composed of Irish, Germans, Swedes and a smattering of other ethnic groups, it is now, roughly, seventy-five per cent Negro. But it has not turned into a slum—nor is it likely that it will. It is richer in community projects than before the Negroes moved in. During the time of trouble, Pastor Johnson and his wife helped to develop interracial groups such as the Park Manor Neighbors. Such efforts at community awareness have had effect. Out of previous chaos and indifference has come some attempt at order and neighborhood solidarity.

When I visited Mr. and Mrs. Johnson in the fall of 1954, they told me that other Lutheran churches on the South Side are presently engaged in church integration programs, with results as yet unknown. Francis McPeak, of the Mayor's Commission on Human Relations, has estimated that there are some twenty to thirty churches all over Chicago which have some degree of interracial integration.

That some degree is important because it can mean all things to all men. People like the Johnsons know that if you accept God's Word at all, you accept it completely; there is no some degree about it. And to get the full effect of what a really integrated program means, you have to visit Salem Lutheran church of a Sunday, now that the trouble is over and life has become comparatively smooth again. It is most of all the lack of tension in the congregation which hits you—the complete naturalness of the interracial worship. You feel as you walk out, "But how could it be otherwise? Is there any other way?"

Negro members of Salem Lutheran view the church as a heartwarming phenomenon; white members view it as a phenomenon and their pastor as an extraordinary man. There are nothing but words of praise for his calmness, his courage, his tact.

But neither Johnson nor his wife see it quite this way. What all his admirers seem not to understand is his matter-of-fact viewpoint. What makes him extraordinary is that few men with a position to maintain and heads of their own to safeguard —whether churchmen or otherwise—have dared stand against the fury in its American, anti-Negro form. The fact that Pastor Johnson not only dared to stand —but was successful in gaining his objectives—gives cause for amazement. Most of the people who are amazed know, intellectually at least, that the only way to fight the devil is to look him straight in the eye and to give no sign of fear. But Pastor Johnson knows this fact not only intellectually, but emotionally.

"Fear is an instructor of great sagacity. . . . One thing he teaches, that there is rottenness where he appears. He is a carrion crow, and though you see not what he hovers for, there is death somewhere. . . . He indicates great wrongs which must be revised."

—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

SOME JEWISH CHRISTIANS insisted that, in order to benefit by the gospel of Christ, one had to be born a Jew or become a Jew by accepting the rite of circumcision and being adopted into the Jewish people; but they were not arguing against Gentiles on the basis of race. Any foreigner who accepted circumcision and who was so adopted was readily accepted. Here we must draw a sharp distinction between Jewish segregation and ours. The kind of segregation or exclusiveness practiced by the Jews generally and by the Jewish Christians differed widely from modern segregation based on caste, color and race. A non-Jew could become a member of the local Jewish group. He could qualify by meeting the conditions. But in our time where segregation is based on race or color there is nothing one can do to qualify. He cannot qualify even when he accepts the same creed, practices the same ritual, prays to the same God and partakes of the same culture. Segregation based on color or race makes it impossible for the Christian of color to qualify, for one cannot change his color and he cannot change his race. And this restriction is tantamount to penalizing one for being what God made him and tantamount to saying to God, "You made a mistake, God, when you made peoples of different races and colors. . . ."

If the church can find no support in science for ethnic and racial tension, none in the Bible for segregation based on race or color, none in the practices of the ancient and medieval church, and no basis for it in Christian theologies, the questions naturally arise: How can segregation and discrimination in the church be justified? What can the churches do to put themselves in line with the gospel, the practices of the ancient and medieval church, and in line with the findings of modern science? If the churches cannot practice full Christian fellowship in worship and membership, how can they preach the prophetic word to secular organizations that discriminate on grounds of race, color and caste? To answer this question is our task at Evanston. . . .

His Kingdom Is Power

Roy Johnson

A fellowship in which all share with one another their joys and sorrows, their problems and victories marks a church with power

OURS is a power-conscious age. Daily we hear of everything from power brakes and power steering to atomic power. Sometimes we have too much power—more than we can handle safely. Strangely enough, however, in this power-flooded age, there is one quarter where great claims of power are not being made. The church today has boasted proudly of its statistics of giving and membership, but yet no one has claimed any great power. Indeed, the church appears oftentimes quite powerless in the face of the many secular and evil forces which play upon it today.

When Paul wrote to the church in Corinth, he wrote to a church which was like ours today in many ways. The Corinthians had grown and prospered and they were proud of their many successes. But the apostle knew the rest of the story also. The Corinthians were becoming too smart for their teacher and their pride had even caused divisions among themselves. In a burst of arrogance they proclaimed that Paul was in error and that they knew the truth better than he.

Consequently, he wrote them a letter. Among many sharp admonitions, he said he would come to see for himself what fruits of the Spirit were being displayed. "For the kingdom of God does not consist in talk but in power" (1 Cor. 4:20 R.S.V.).

Paul could come to us in the same way. He could look at us and say, "You claim to be a New Testament church, where is your power?"

It is time then that we ask ourselves about this power we ought to have, this power of the kingdom. For the Brotherhood theme, "Seek First His Kingdom," could easily result in a good deal of talk but not in power.

The early part of Acts tells of the church while it was still under the powerful and moving spell of Pentecost. Especially in the last part of Chapter 3 do we find what the real "power church" was like. First of all, we find the members devoting themselves to the apostles' teaching. They devoted themselves; they looked upon learning as a sacred duty, not to be taken lightly. Strangely, no mention is made of quarterlies. Would it be dangerous to suggest that quarterlies are a substitute for power?

Fellowship is the second of the fruits of a "power church." This too was something to which they devoted themselves. We Brethren know what this is and we ought to rejoice that we have a strong emphasis at this point. But if I read correctly, the term is the "apostles' fellowship." This is a special kind. It is not a flippant class party. It is fellowship with Peter and James and John and the other apostles. Would their presence within our fellowship make us uneasy?

In the third place, those who had been baptized and received the Spirit of power devoted themselves to breaking bread and prayers. This they did daily according to the Scriptures. It is amazing that the Holy Spirit could get Christians together not just once a week but every day for love feasts and prayers. This sounds like too much of a good thing. But the power of the Holy Spirit is amazing! Apparently it was so strong it overcame P.T.A., basketball, bowling, club meetings and whatever the first century equivalent of TV was. Of course, we could say there were no such things then. But historians tell us that ancient Rome had its distractions and pleasures just as our day does. The church does not really compete with these things. The Holy Spirit overcomes them; the church, when it is the "power church," has no trouble.

But this very concise description of the pentecostal church continues. In the fourth place, the church distributed goods and possessions to the needy. Does this mean that the Brethren Service program is a good barometer of the power of the kingdom? Yes, it does, certainly. But we ought to notice that the distribution to the needy meant a real sacrifice on the part of those who had enough. As one reads the passage it seems as though the people rose up joyfully and with no self-consciousness about whether they had more or less and gave their possessions. They had glad and generous hearts. With little doubt, we can say that it is yet true that it is the glad heart that is generous. The church that knows the kingdom of power is a glad and joyous church, so glad that its joy must spill over and feed others who have less.

How could such a joyous gathering of people not win the favor of the populace? To be sure they did. As far as we can tell they made no distinction between laborer and manager; between white or black. Later there was trouble between Gentile and Jew, it is true. But the difficulty was treated forthrightly and not glossed over. It is also true that the Christians soon were persecuted. But this was because the power of the kingdom began to threaten the powers that be, the authorities of the status quo. The people still were in favor of the Christians who displayed love and kindness and humble, joyous living wherever they went.

It is not a surprise then that the last evidence of the power of the kingdom was that "the Lord added to their number day by day." There is no mention of an evangelistic campaign, no organization whatsoever. It does not even say that they went out after converts. Does it mean that everything about these "power Christians" spoke of our Lord? Does it mean that it was no more possible to keep a Christian from winning people than it is to keep the light of day from spreading over the earth at sunrise? Would one dare entertain the thought that all our fuss over evangelistic campaigns is another indication that we do not know the power of the kingdom? Or have we had to develop them because they are better than our mere emptiness without his power?

Yes, his kingdom is power, power that we are without, power that we need. Will we dare pray that we might seek his kingdom and find its power for the church and our lives?

The church distributes to the needy but is it with the same joyous generous spirit that was shown by the first century church?

Courage in Action

GEORGE FOX the Quaker discovered for himself that God is within and that the inner light can be trusted for guidance in all man's doings. Whereas the Catholic Church placed authority in the church, and the Protestants looked upon the Bible as the seat of authority, the Quakers trusted the still small voice of God within their own souls.

George Fox was born in 1624 in Leicestershire in England and died in 1691; thus he lived in the days of Cromwell and the Civil Wars, the Restoration, the plague and the great fire of London. The itinerant preaching which he began at twenty-three was continued until his death, forty-four years later. He was not married until the age of forty-five. In 1671-73 he visited America, and some years later preached in Holland and Germany. The Toleration Act did not come until just two years before his death, and so rigid was orthodoxy that throughout his lifetime he was subjected to bitter opposition and ruthless persecution. Eight times he was imprisoned in unspeakably vile cells and dungeons, with the result that his health was broken and the latter years of his itinerant preaching were possible only because of intensity of religious conviction and power of will.

If you want to see sheer courage in action, take a good look at George Fox. To an almost unequaled degree he was driven forward by a sense of duty. When a conviction was reached through the prompting of the inner light, he went about doing what he believed to be right in the sight of God. He was not afraid of any man, not even Oliver Cromwell. The flame of religious zeal which burned within him was passed on to the Religious Society of Friends.

A Heritage of Witness and Sacrifice

Donald F. Durnbaugh

AFTER this [baptism] the eight persons were more and more strengthened in their obedience to the faith they had adopted, and were enabled to testify publicly in their meetings to the truth; and the Lord granted them his special grace, so that still more became obedient to the faith. . . ."

Once again a key sentence from Alexander Mack's preface to his papers points up an aspect of our Brethren heritage.

The pentecostal experience of baptism brought strength to witness for their faith to the founders of the church. They were on fire with the good news of the Lord and their enthusiasm and conviction found ready response among the searchers who were dissatisfied with the pallid offerings of the organized churches. With a zeal for evangelism which should shame us, the Brethren crisscrossed central Europe despite hardship and physical danger to spread these tidings. They pressed into Switzerland, northern Germany, Holland. One is amazed at their energy and the space covered in that day of poor transportation and intolerance.

Johannes Naas, one of the most eloquent and active among the early leaders, was on a mission in northern Germany, accompanied by Jacob Priess in 1715, as Brumbaugh relates. Seized in Krefeld by recruiting agents for the King of Prussia, then controlling Krefeld, Naas refused to become a member of the sovereign's personal guard. He had attracted the attention of the agents by his stalwart stature, which was a prerequisite for the honored position in the bodyguard. Even severe torture did not shake his conviction and he was finally brought before the Prussian ruler. When asked why he did not accept enlistment, Naas replied that he had already enlisted in the best army and could not be a traitor to his King.

"And who is your captain?" inquired the king of Naas.

"My captain is the great Prince Emmanuel, our Lord Jesus Christ. I have espoused his cause, and cannot and will not forsake him," was the resolute answer. And the king, impressed, rewarded him and set him free—the heritage of witness.

Heritage of Sacrifice

"But as they found favor with God and men . . . there were also enemies of the truth, and there arose here and there persecutions for the Word's sake. . ."

The calm statement reflects imprisonments and fines, beatings and scorn, hearings and expulsions which only strengthened faith and caused rejoicing that they could suffer for Christ. Christian Libe, a vigorous leader, was chained for two years as a galley slave for preaching in Switzerland; the Ephrata Chronicle relates that Mack spent his large inheritance in paying fines for members and was left with nothing for himself; it is recorded that a Dutch brother, the nobleman Adrian Pfau, gave 100,000 guilders annually to assist Brethren.

The Juelich imprisonment of the six Solingen Brethren is perhaps the most inspiring demonstration of the Brethren spirit of sacrifice. Devout members of the Reformed or Presbyterian church in Solingen, the six, Johannes Lobach, Wilhelm Grahe, Jakob Grahe, Luther Stetius, Johann Friedrich Henkels and Wilhelm Kneppers, were "awakened" by Hochmann von Hochenau and baptized in the river Wupper in 1714 by Brethren from Marienborn or Wittgenstein. The pressure of the clergy resulted in their arrest on February 1, 1717, and transport to Duesseldorf for trial. Jesuit priests and Lutheran and Reformed clergy used every means to induce or force them to repent of their stand but to no avail. They were forced to listen to the agonized screams of persons tortured on the rack and threatened with the rack and scourging but they remained firm.

They were sentenced to lifelong imprisonment at hard labor in Juelich in the mines and began their term on December 4, 1717. They had to work forty feet below ground, moving earth. As prisoners they were greatly trusted and often some of them worked outside of the city walls without being guarded as it was well known that no one would desert the others.

In 1719 the constant temperature change between the hot sun and ice cold dungeons caused the illness of all six. Much to the amazement of the townspeople, a constant stream of visitors brought comfort and encouragement to the prisoners in their hard lot. Alexander Mack, Peter Becker, Johannes Naas, Michael Eckerlin and other Brethren came, as well as many Mennonites from Krefeld. Wilhelm Grahe, who wrote the detailed account of their imprisonment, reported that the Juelich citizens said that such concern never occurred among them. The Brethren must have a special bond of love. Two visitors even offered to change places with two of the Solingen group.

When two Dutch friends visited Juelich, they left money and intervened with the Dutch Estates General, who exerted such diplomatic pressure that the German authorities were forced to release the Brethren after nearly four years imprisonment. The happy men divided their mean possessions among their fellow inmates, who were joyous with them for the good fortune. The chronicle relates that even the prison officers and the town clergy shook their hands and wished them Godspeed. Hiring a wagon, as some were too weak to walk, they journeyed to Krefeld where they found shelter.

Such is the heritage of sacrifice among the early Brethren who faced dungeons with steadfastness and won the hearts of their captors.

Discipleship, freedom, study, witness and sacrifice—these are perhaps the most important parts of the legacy which is ours from the early Brethren. Because of their beliefs, the history of the Brethren is a chronicle of migration for conscience's sake. They chose Glaube rather than Heimat. Because of this they had to leave the Palatinate beginning in 1706 and found refuge in Wittgenstein and Marienborn. They had to leave Marienborn in 1715 for Krefeld only to emigrate to the land of freedom in 1719. The Wittgenstein group, forty families "of whom no one had heard anything bad" left Schwarzenau in 1720 and sailed for Pennsylvania in 1729.

Johannes Naas left for America in 1733 and has given us (in a letter to his son) a detailed account of the hardships involved. Nineteen weeks of storm alternated with dead calm in a packed sailing vessel, with rotten food and crawling water, is a far cry from the luxury of modern transatlantic travel. Naas reports nine deaths which is much lower than on many ships of the time. Without exception the passengers regretted leaving the Germanies, no matter how miserable their previous condition.

Mack closed his preface with these words: "This simple testimony of truth we commend to the good and wise God for protection, and as an offering, we lay it at his feet of mercy. . . .

THE LORD BEING MERCIFUL

LUCILE LONG STRAYER

Stern was the word that came to them: "Depart!"
They looked at one another all aghast,
Thinking of home, of friends. With trembling heart
Each clung to what he knew the best—the past.
But there was scant time to think, to re-adjust.
An angel urged them out into the sweet
Light of the morning, and with emphatic thrust
Turned toward the mountains their unwilling feet.
"Do not look back!" The warning comes today
Merciful still. Each golden memory
We cherish, cling to, a triumphant faith
May transmute into strength for the long way
The pilgrim soul must walk alone. But he
Who cannot leave the past finds certain death.

Blessed is the man who does not oppose him, for he will bring all things to his remembrance whatsoever Jesus, the eternal truth himself has said and thought.

"Now to that innocent Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world, be glory, honor, and adoration in the congregation of the First born in heaven and on earth, in the communion of the Father and the Holy Spirit. Amen."

The Family Counselor

The Family Counselor welcomes letters of inquiry. They may be addressed: Family Life Department, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Dear Counselor,

In the denomination in which I was raised, I was led to believe they were the only people who were right. My father was a good man but very strict with us. He never let us go to Sunday school if he could help it. When we were away from home we would go. Later I did put my name on a Sunday-school roll and didn't take it off even though my father requested me to do so.

Due to my background, I made a promise never to join a church without first receiving a vision or dream. So I never went to any church until after my parents were dead. But I came to the place where I knew I had to go if I was to live with myself. I've been a member of the Church of the Brethren for more than a year now, and I've been happier than ever before in my life.

The only thing I have to worry about is my husband. He is real good at times. He likes the Brethren. But he drinks a lot and won't go to church with me often. When he's drinking he says things that hurt me.

Sometimes I think I should not have joined the church. But I still think if I hadn't, I'd have gone crazy. I just try to be kind to my husband and not answer him when he's that way. I love my husband and want him to change. I still pray that he will change. But I'm so confused at times. Am I doing right or not?

Confused

Dear Friend,

Through the conflicts in your life you have come to a meaningful relationship to the church. From what you have said, you have found your relationship to the Church of the Brethren to be a happy and satisfying one. It has helped you face and meet your problems. We may remember that God does not promise us that being a Christian will free us from all problems; however, it does open sources to receive help and He promises us strength with which to meet our problems.

I have been studying the problem of your relationship to your husband. We note that he is a good husband, at least when he is not under the influence of alcohol. That is most often a true situation since alcohol takes away the highest part of the brain first and leaves man to operate largely on the animal level. In short, the first thing to go is man's relationship to God, to the highest and finest things which he knows and has. You have taken a very fine viewpoint by recognizing that you must be good and kind to him. You have stated that he likes the Brethren and apparently has some relationship to the church—that is very commendable. The recognition of his inability to think clearly and act kindly and his reaction of being ashamed of his actions after sobering up, give us understanding that may lead to a solution of the problem.

Therefore, I would make the following suggestions that may help strengthen and deepen your relationships to one another and to the church. (1) I believe you ought to seek to help your husband become more closely related to the church fellowship. Family visits, picnics and other activities may help do this. (2) You will no doubt want to deepen your relationship and your faith with your church also. (3) Each of you will no doubt want to evaluate your lives individually and find ways to help each other find the correct answers to your problems. (4) You may choose a pastor, a member of Alcoholics Anonymous or some other person you can trust, and talk to that person about your problem. He may be able to help in finding the answer. (5) You may find assistance from many sources. Your Brotherhood temperance office, your medical doctor, Alcoholics Anonymous and other groups have excellent materials that you may secure to guide you. Write and ask for them.

It is not the fact that we have problems that create our tensions. It is the answers that we give that matter. You have found happiness and strength in your church. To continue and deepen that relationship will help. Study of your problems and relationships will reveal opportunities to apply the Christian principles you find in your church. Continue your search and I feel certain you will find rich rewards.

for the Advancement of White People, much of the good of the Supreme Court's action was lost and the Communists, particularly had new evidence in support of their point that the white people of the U.S.A. have really not changed in their basic attitudes toward people of color.

Despite the losses from the die-hards, whether North or South, there has been a gain for Americans in Asia and elsewhere, for we never pretended that the Supreme Court's decision would receive instant, complete acceptance. The numerous private citizens, civic groups and government officials who are now co-operating to support the Court decision constitute another powerful argument for Americans, who will continue to face hostile questions abroad.

The people of India, like all peoples whose skin color is not white, are deeply concerned about the welfare of American Negroes. There is a ready-made, automatic sympathy with them and a strong desire to see them more justly treated. It does not take Communist prodding to produce such sympathy; it has existed among educated Indians for years. Racially, Indians are Dravidian and Aryan, not Negro in origin. Many, however, have suffered mistreatment from white people not unlike that experienced by Negroes. Sometimes this came from their own former British rulers, sometimes in Africa and sometimes in the United States, when they have come here on tours to study. One of our Syracuse University graduate students, an important educator in India, while on a trip to Florida last fall, was taken into the Negro Y.W.C.A. by a taxi driver and into the segregated railway station dining room until her sari made a waitress wonder just where she did belong.

Mohandas Gandhi, who determined so many of the social attitudes of the modern Indians, helped set their minds about the race issue. It must be noted, however, that relatively few Indians think about it. About 85% of the 360 millions in India are illiterate; most Indians are too absorbed by the struggle for survival to ponder the race problem at home or abroad. Gandhi's own sharp feelings came from his experience in South Africa, where he encountered race discrimination in 1893; he was nearly lynched during his 18-year struggle in Africa in behalf of the 100,000 Indians.

Jawarhalal Nehru, Vinoba Bhave and other Indian leaders have continued the fight for abolition of discrimination within India. With such leaders and traditions it is no wonder that the people of India who are race conscious are just about as concerned over the white-colored problem as they are about the horrors to be expected from scientific warfare, which trouble them greatly.

They look naturally to the Christian missionaries among them for enlightenment and assurance. Usually they get them, but sometimes not. A few American missionaries in India and elsewhere are not necessarily free of race prejudice. Missionaries, like other people, sometimes acquire unChristian habits and attitudes.

Another source of misunderstanding of the American racial situation is the content of the newspapers, magazines, books and films, received from the United States.

The picture of race relations in the United States that is in the mind of a citizen of India exposed to these impressions is, as can be imagined, hardly flattering to us. That picture will persist so long as our racial scene stays as it is, for our periodicals and our movies reflect the dominant group's views. But because the over-sensitive Indian and other people of Asia are being goaded by an element of anti-Americans in their country, they get a worse rather than a true picture about race in America, which is bad.

Reviews of Recent Books

Books are reviewed here as a service to the church. A review does not necessarily constitute an unqualified recommendation. Purchase can be made through the Brethren Publishing House, Elgin, Illinois. Titles recommended for church libraries are marked with an asterisk (*).—Editor.

Love, Power, and Justice. Paul Tillich. Oxford University Press, 1954. 128 pages. $2.50.

This is the most stimulating book on love and its relation to Power and Justice that I have seen. It is very readable for a book by Paul Tillich, one of our most profound and exacting theologians. This book represents the author's lectures at Union Seminary in Richwood, Va., and Nottingham University in England. They are concise and fresh.

The merit of this book is that it gives ontological (basic essence or being) interpretations of love, power and justice. Its fault, if any, lies in conveniently making its case for the relationship of the three to community and international relationships.

This is a basic book for our pastors for it helps to understand current conversations between pacifists and non pacifists on love's relation to power and justice. — W. Harold Row.

Christology of the Later Fathers. Editor: Edward R. Hardy. Westminister, 1954. 400 pages. $5.00

Since the church is always in danger of neglecting her historic treasure there is a continuing need for making available an adequate translation of the prize gems of her incomparable past. Christology of the Later Fathers, the third volume in The Library of Christian Classics, is dedicated to this purpose. The first 325 pages present select Christology writings of the great fourth century fathers, Athanasius, Gregory of Nazianzus and Gregory of Nyssia. The concluding fifty-seven pages present "Documents Illustrating the Christology of the Ecumenical Councils." The latter include the famous creeds of Nicea, of Constantinople and of Chalcedon.

Though the first Christians were content to confess Jesus as Lord, from the second century on, the church felt compelled to define more closely the relation of the human and divine in the person of Christ. The controversies and results are set forth in this volume. — David J. Wieand, Lombard, Ill.

Worship Resources for the Christian Year. Charles L. Wallis. Harpers, 1954. 483 pages. $4.95

This is a monumental anthology of worship material, carefully arranged according to the Christian year. For every season, there are calls to worship, invocations, prayers, litanies, poems and "sermon-starters." The book is well provided with indexes.

In such a large collection it is inevitable that the material should be uneven in quality, and no collector meets the taste and need of every user. The theme and sermon topic material is of less value than some other parts of the book. This book could be a crutch and a barrel for a lazy minister, a fine sourcebook for those who keep their minds free and can use it wisely.

It is highly recommended for the preacher's reference shelf—but not to supplement his serious creative study. — Edward K. Ziegler.

The Brethren Service Commission of the General Brotherhood Board is giving guidance to the Church of the Brethren campaign to oppose the extension and enlargement of peacetime conscription. The commission and the Friends Committee on National Legislation have jointly opened a temporary anticonscription campaign office at 135B C St., N.E., Washington 2, D.C., telephone LIncoln 7-4343. John H. Eberly, director of the New Windsor service center, is directing the Washington phase of the campaign. He is prepared to assist all Brethren who visit Washington to oppose this legislation. Ralph E. Smeltzer, Director Social Education, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill., is in charge of providing information and action suggestions for local congregations and districts.

Larned church, Kansas, will celebrate its fiftieth anniversary April 18-24. Please note that this is a change from the date previously given. Former pastors will be in charge of a week of meetings, April 18-22; the 24th will be the anniversary observance Sunday.

A bill to provide that United States mail be stamped "Pray for Peace" has been introduced in the House by Rep. Rabaut of Michigan. He said that the slogan would remind Americans of their spiritual heritage and at the same time carry an important message to the world on all overseas mail.

In the regular packet to pastors and superintendents the Brethren Service Commission of the General Brotherhood Board provides the very latest information and suggestions for action on the conscription issue. If you would like this information check with your pastor and superintendent.

Seeds of Hope are now being collected to send to European refugee farmers so that they may plant their gardens soon. Groups who have already collected seeds should send them to New Windsor. Others should write to W. Ray Kyle, Brethren Service Center, New Windsor, Md., for a list of the appropriate seeds.

John D. Metzler, Jr., of Nappanee, Ind., has been named an associate director of the Christian Rural Overseas Program and will head the organization's general administration. Bro. Metzler, who spent several years in Puerto Rico teaching in the academy at Castañer, has been with CROP's headquarters staff at Nappanee.

Two church buildings in the Central Region were recently destroyed by fire. The Thornapple church was partly burned on Jan. 22. Fortunately the congregation is in process of erecting a new house of worship with the New Hope congregation and will use the basement of the new structure while completing it. Salem church, Ohio, burned on Jan. 26.

Earl M. Zigler was elected chairman of the India mission conference, held at Bulsar, India, Jan. 6-10. Other officers are Chalmer G. Shull, vice-chairman; Kenneth E. McDowell, secretary-treasurer; Paul Hoover, assistant secretary. Bro. Zigler, C. G. Shull, Ernest M. Shull, Kathryn Kiracofe and Paul Hoover make up the executive committee.

James M. Moore, pastor of the Poplar Grove church, Ohio, died Jan. 28. Bro. Moore, son of J. H. Moore, was with the Brethren Publishing House in its early years in Elgin. Since 1918 he has been in pastoral work, having served the Lanark and Chicago churches, Ill., and the Waynesboro and Lititz churches, Pa., before going to the Poplar Grove church. Funeral services were held at the latter church on Feb. 1.

A new children's work audio-visual kit has been produced for training children's workers. The six filmstrips are in black and white with the script on records. Titles are: Goals for the Church for Children, The Church Plans for Children, The Nursery Child and the Church, The Kindergarten Child and the Church, The Primary Child and the Church, The Junior Child and the Church. Cost for the kit is $49.50 and rental is $2.00 for each filmstrip. Order from the Brethren Publishing House or rent from the Audio-Visual Library, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill., or from regional libraries.

With fifty-nine registrations already completed out of our original quota of sixty-nine delegates to the twenty-third International Sunday School Convention to be held at Cleveland, Ohio, July 27-31, it is suggested that others who have asked for a place on the reserved list should complete their registrations very soon. We have been granted an increase in our delegation up to one hundred, but it is difficult to know how many places are available until those districts and individuals that asked for reservations actually complete their registrations. Send your card and fee to C. Ernest Davis, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Changes of Address

Earl M. Bowman, from Lititz, Pa., to 3732 W. Hillcrest Ave., Dayton 6, Ohio. Bro. Bowman assumed his duties as pastor of the Mack Memorial church on Feb. 1.

James O. McAvoy, from Fayetteville, W. Va., to Box 547, Okeechobee, Fla. Bro. McAvoy is now pastor of the Okeechobee church, succeeding Walter Replogle.

Refugee Resettlement

Who can be a sponsor of a refugee family? A sponsor is an American citizen who gives an assurance for a refugee. He may sign as an individual or on behalf of a church group. He has a moral obligation to assist the refugee in any way he can. A refugee can apply for a visa to enter the United States only when he has a sponsor who has filed an assurance for him.

What is an assurance? It is the name of the form the sponsor fills out. This form can be obtained from the resettlement office in New Windsor. That office can also give you information regarding specific refugee families who want to immigrate. The assurance describes the job and housing available to the refugee. The assurance is the refugee's chance for a new life.

Bethany Biblical Seminary

The winter term showed a slight increase in the total enrollment of both the Seminary and the Training School with the total number of students being 216. Students come from twenty-seven states, Canada, Puerto Rico, Holland and India.

A new annual lectureship in evangelism has been made possible by a generous gift from friends of the Seminary who prefer to remain anonymous. These lectures will be named in honor of the late Albert Cassel Wieand, co-founder and long-time president of Bethany. The first of the Wieand lectures in evangelism will be given by Dr. Jesse M. Bader, March 21 to 25. Dr. Bader was for many years secretary of the Commission on Evangelism of the National Council of Churches. He retired last year from this position to become general secretary of the World Convention of the Churches of Christ (Disciples). The lectures which will be given each evening, Monday through Thursday, at 7:30 and each morning at 8:45, Tuesday through Friday, will center in the following subjects: Compulsions to Evangelism, The Evangelistic Message, The Evangelistic Messenger, Spiritual Resources for Evangelism, The Evangelistic Church, The Evangelism of Childhood and Youth, The Shepherd Heart of the Church and The Churches Evangelizing Together.

A new course, The Church's Public Relations, has been added to the curriculum this year to give much needed guidance to ministers in this field. The course is taught by Prof. Alton M. Motter, visiting lecturer in Christian education during the absence of Dr. Jesse H. Ziegler, who is a visiting professor at Yale Divinity School this year. Prof. Motter is the executive director of the Chicago Sunday Evening Club and former editor of The Pulpit. He was also public relations director for the Evanston Assembly of the World Council of Churches.

Prof. Clyde Weaver, who has been an instructor in the field of counseling and psychology, has accepted a position as chaplain of the Chicago Parental School, a retention home for delinquent children which is supported by the Chicago Church Federation. He will continue his courses at the Seminary through the current year.

J. E. Keller, who was for many years treasurer and business manager of Bethany Biblical Seminary, passed away at his home in Oak Park on Jan. 18 after a long illness. Bro. Keller's ministry to Bethany extended over a period of forty-seven years.

Two rooms for the use of visiting lecturers at Bethany have been given in memory of Ernest G. Hoff, for many years a member of the Bethany Board of Directors, and of Jacob H. Hollinger, a minister and elder of the Washington City church. These are much needed additions to campus facilities.

The annual midwinter meeting of the board of directors of the Seminary was held on the campus Jan. 14-15. The directors are planning suitable celebrations for the fiftieth anniversary of the Seminary at the spring commencement and at the fall convocation next year. President Paul M. Robinson announced that the indebtedness on the chapel had been reduced thus far this year from $8,500 to less than $1,500. It is hoped that other contributions to the chapel fund will be made during the years so that this debt may be liquidated.

Bethany will again participate in The Seminarian of the Year contest sponsored jointly by the Chicago Sunday Evening Club and The Pulpit magazine. Bethany seniors who have entered the contest are Walter Longenecker, Richard Miller, Clifford Ruff, Donovan Speaker and Stanley Sutphin.

Johannesburg Interracial Conference

Samuel McCrea Cavert

THE interracial conference of church leaders held at Johannesburg, South Africa, broke new ground in both race relations and church co-operation for the first time since racial and national tensions became acute in South Africa.

All churches except the Roman Catholic, including the English-speaking and Afrikaans-speaking native African and colored, came together for three days to face common problems. Of the 200 delegates 60 represented Bantu or native Africans.

The conference was convened and planned by the Dutch Reformed Church, the largest denomination in South Africa which embraces about half of all Christians of European background. Co-chairmen were Doctor C. B. Brink, moderator of the Dutch Reformed Church of the Transvaal, and Anglican Archbishop Geoffrey H. Clayton of Capetown.

Holding of the conference was in itself a remarkable achievement. Up to the present there has been no organ of consultation or co-operation among all these churches. The churches of different European origins—British and Dutch—have been sharply divided both in language and in policies and have had little contact. They also have been largely isolated from the churches of native Africans and of colored or mixed population. In view of these cultural separations this unhurried consultation is regarded in South Africa as almost a miracle.

A marked characteristic of the conference was the frankness with which all the delegates spoke. The English-speaking and Afrikaans-speaking representatives did not hesitate to express opposing views on the controversial political issue of apartheid.

Native African pastors were completely candid in calling on white churches to help them secure justice in such matters as employment and land tenure. Notwithstanding this great freedom of utterance there was little or no tendency to recrimination. The Biblical injunction to speak the truth in love was practiced to a gratifying degree.

The theme of the conference was the extension of the kingdom of God in multi-racial South Africa. The most unifying element in the discussion was the common concern for more effective missionary work among non-Christian Bantus. About half of the Bantu people is still pagan.

A grave missionary problem which both white and native churches face is the rapid spread among natives of new and bizarre separatist sects often of merely nominal Christian character. No fewer than 1,237 such sects are known and others are being formed almost every month. Most of them are very small, sometimes embracing only a hundred members, but they constitute a serious obstacle to the growth of the historic churches.

The main constructive result of the conference was the unanimous decision to create a continuation committee as a permanent agency of consultation and co-operation in such matters as the participating churches may agree upon. The committee was instructed to arrange a similar conference at least once in every three years. It is expected that at the next conference a more formal organization with a constitution to be ratified by the churches and with provision for a permanent headquarters will be proposed.

Meanwhile, the continuation committee is given authority to convene consultations on specific matters, to explore the development of interchurch study groups, to study the advisability of interdenominational pastoral training for Bantus and to seek friendly discussion with separatist groups.

Among other proposals approved by the conference were the holding of an annual evangelistic campaign simultaneously by the churches and a request to the government to provide an additional ten million pounds annually for the social, educational, economic and industrial development of Bantu and colored communities.

On the question of the new Bantu Education Act, which is currently much debated in the churches and on which they hold divergent views, no action was taken except to record the judgment that the transfer of Bantu education to the state places great responsibility on churches to be more effective in their own work among children and youth.

The spirit of the conference was summed up in a resolution which called on all Christian persons to "regard and treat every human being with the honor and respect to which we are committed as Christians and to use every available opportunity to come into real Christian fellowship with one another."

The conference received a surprising measure of public interest. It was opened with an address of welcome by Governor General E. G. Jansen of the Union of South Africa. Two overseas guests attended: Dr. Norman Goodall of London, representing the International Missionary Council, and the writer, representing the World Council of Churches. Both addressed the conference on ecumenical aspects of the discussion.

Church Building Continues Among Hungarian Protestants

The Renovation of Churches is the title of a report included in a special illustrated issue of the Hungarian Church Press. The report states that 579 church buildings of the Hungarian Protestant churches were badly damaged or destroyed in World War II,—about one-fourth of the existing Protestant church buildings. Repairs of the greatest part of the damaged churches were completed by 1952. The work of reconstruction did not stop but has been extended to cover damages by causes other than war. Since the end of the war new churches have been built in nineteen parishes of the Reformed Church, three new parishes have been organized in Budapest. Smaller chapels were set up in other new parishes. The Lutherans erected twenty new church buildings.

Southern Baptists Plan New Program for the Aged

The Christian Life Commision of the Southern Baptist Convention has been asked by leaders in that body to plan a comprehensive program for ministering to the aged. A statistician for the Baptist Sunday School Board reported that there are nearly 13,000,000 persons in the United States aged sixty-five years and older and that this number is increasing by 40,000 annually. Some 10,000,000 of these live in households with relatives. Eight of the ten states in which this age group is increasing most rapidly are in Southern Baptist Convention territory.

Lutherans Seek Ways to Reach Mobile Population

One out of every five Americans makes at least one move during the course of a year. This fact was reported to a Lutheran conference studying the impact of population mobility on church life. An official of the U. S. Census Bureau said that during recent years an average of thirty million Americans moved every year. Twenty million went to new places within the same counties, but ten million migrated across county boundaries and of the latter group one-half settled in other states.

Dr. Paul C. Empie, executive director of the National Lutheran Council, told delegates from the eight church bodies cooperating in the conference that the church must gear its programs to a mobile society. He said that often mobility is a result of inner frustrations and the lack of roots in local communities which aggravate spiritual difficulties. A layman in the Augustana Lutheran Church who is an industrial relations expert, urged that laymen be educated to understand their daily work in the light of their Christian vocation. He said that with proper understanding "mobility can be turned into mobilization" for the church. Dr. Philip S. Dybrig, executive director of the board of home missions of the Evangelical Lutheran church, also maintained that mobility is a good thing for the church. He said it forced churches to shift the emphasis back to where it always belonged—to the winning of people for Christ.

Newsbriefs on Religion in Europe

An Austrian journalist who has lived a long time in Russia declared recently: "The clergy in the Soviet Union are now relatively well off. They are no longer victims of discrimination, and the occupation of priest and minister is classed among the intellectual professions, favored by government regulations. In many villages the priest is also the bookkeeper or secretary of the collective farm. Almost all the Protestant ministers work as full-time government clerks." He adds the law prohibits religious instruction to those under sixteen years of age, but that out-and-out antireligious propaganda has become a mere routine affair.

Although the Roman Catholic Church sent no official observers to the Second Assembly of the World Council of Churches at Evanston, an outstanding French Catholic journalist, himself a monk, was present and followed every part of the vast series of meetings with lively zest. In the news bulletin he edits, Toward Christian Unity, Father Dumont presents his First Impressions of the Evanston Conference in a careful report of more than 6,000 words, with the official permission of his Superior. Characterized by the most fraternal spirit throughout, his general report concludes by saying that at Evanston church representatives came closer than ever before to taking a "new look" at those positions which their denominations have always felt absolutely beyond question required by God's Word. He rejoices that, for the churches, "repentance . . . has come down out of the realm of generalities and is now being applied to its proper object." Concerning church unity he feels that the work accomplished at Evanston "furnishes a very rich soil upon which it will be possible for us Catholic theologians to follow with keen interest the ecumenical dialogue." General Brotherhood Board Adopts

Statement on Racial Integration

Ralph E. Smeltzer

AT ITS meeting on Nov. 10, 1954, the General Brotherhood Board adopted the following statement as its policy on racial integration. The statement came to the Board from the Brethren Service Commission:

It is the belief of the General Brotherhood Board that discrimination due to color is out of keeping both with the teachings of the New Testament and with the stated position of the Church of the Brethren. We note with appreciation all recent steps made in the direction of elimination of segregation, including the decision of the Supreme Court interpreting the Constitution as opposing segregation in the public schools. We appeal to our Brethren to lead out in effecting these social changes in every area of our life.

1. We urge congregations to strengthen their educational program by revealing the New Testament teaching.

2. We recognize that the satisfactory solution to the problem of racial integration will only be found as races work together, and therefore we encourage a co-operative effort in solving the problem.

3. We pledge our support to those Brethren, especially those on public school boards, who are giving courageous leadership toward integrating the races in public schools wherever segregation has been practiced.

4. We appeal to our Brethren to help mold a public opinion favorable to integration by the effective use of the media of mass communication in their communities.

5. We appeal to our Brethren to consider appearing at local and state hearings on the issue of integrating the public schools and to give testimony in support of the Supreme Court decision.

6. We appear to our Brethren to discuss the subject of racial integration in their homes with their families, to teach—or in many cases, to learn from—their children, Christian attitudes toward people of other races, and to entertain children and adults of other races in their homes.

7. We expect our Brethren everywhere to include people of other races in their evangelistic programs and to invite people of other races into the full fellowship and membership of the church, and we urge an increased effort in this direction in all our congregations.

8. We appeal to our Brethren colleges and other Brethren institutions to consider what further steps they might take toward extending the pattern of community racial integration.

9. We suggest to Annual Conference Locating Committee and other conference locating committees to seek to locate conferences in cities which follow the practice of nonsegregation in hotels, restaurants and other public places.

10. We commend all Brethren, especially those in the South, who have been giving Christian leadership in their churches and communities in allaying prejudice and passion on the public school integration issue and in implementing the Supreme Court's decision in their schools and communities.

Our goal must be no less than an integrated public school and church in an integrated community. We appeal to all our Brethren to give courageous leadership toward this goal with calmness, sympathy and seasoned judgment, realzing that He who made of "one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth" shows no partiality among the races of the world.

Most of the discussion in the board meeting on this statement revolved around points seven and nine resulting in a strengthening of point seven and a weakening of point nine. As it came from the B. S. C. point seven read, "We pledge our support to those of our Brethren who include people of other races in their evangelistic programs . . ." Several board members asked for a stronger statement and for a more detailed method of implementing number seven — "something with teeth in it." The statement was reworded to read, "We expect our Brethren everywhere to include people of other races in their evangelistic programs . . ."

Refugee Resettlement Notes

Statistics as of Jan. 1, 1955:

	Goal	Assurances Filed	Arrivals
Central Region	350	62
Eastern Region	300	21
Pacific Coast Region	50	7
Southeastern Region	150	3	1
Western Region	150	5
Total	1,000	98	1

The Brethren Service Commission accepted the Board's suggestion that it set forth a more detailed method of implementing this action and subsequently prepared the following recommendations. Since it was not possible to refer the recommendations back to the board during its November session, the recommendations were sent to the Ministry and Home Missions Commission for its consideration.

"In order to help stimulate and implement an extension of this policy, we would make the following recommendations to the Ministry and Home Mission Commission:

"A. That it give a high priority to the granting of funds to those congregations which, though planning to move to a new location, are willing, also, to help maintain or develop an interracial congregation at the old location.

"B. That it provide leadership from other races for such interracial congregations in interracial communities, such as an associate pastor of another race for larger congregations.

"C. That it make grants and loans to congregations in new communities only when those congregations explicity pledge themselves to the policy of attempting to develop an integrated congregation."

Point nine read as follows when it came to the Board from the Brethren Service Commission, "We ask the Annual Conference Locating Committee and other national conference locating committees to refrain from locating conferences in any city which follows the general practice of segregation in hotels, restaurants, and other public places." Some board members expressed concern lest this action make it difficult or impossible to hold the Annual Conference in some areas. Other board members felt that if this should be the outcome, such a sacrifice and testimony would fully justify the action. Finally, however, the statement was revised on a close vote as follows: "We suggest to Annual Conference Locating Committee and other conference locating committees to seek to locate conferences in cities which follow the practice of non-segregation in hotels, restaurants and other public places."

At Home and Abroad

AUSTRIA

Don Durnbaugh, director of Brethren Service in Austria, visited Camp Scherdenberg, where over a hundred refugees are existing in decrepit barracks. Cracks in the wall are large enough to see through, rain comes through everywhere and children must wear mittens in the rooms during the winter because of the cold. The conditions were reported to the UN High Commissioner for Refugees office in Austria, and Brethren Service hopes to contribute to a solution of this problem.

Much time has past since the flood of July, but the effects are still visable. Farmers especially are in a critical condition, since they have little or no crops until the next harvest. With canned food specifically designated to flood victims, 105 cartons were prepared. Each carton contained varying amounts of meat, fruit, vegetable soup and condensed milk. Along with each carton the family received a five pound sack of flour, some oatmeal and dried beans. The people were very grateful.

FLORIDA MIGRANT CAMPS

Four hundred thirty-two gifts were prepared for children as Osceola. The people enjoyed visiting around the Christmas tree as they waited for their gifts. We were glad to note that many of the people did not come for gifts, thus indicating they did not feel the need of gifts. This made more gifts available to the very needy migrants. As two thirds of the camp population settled down to residency here with the benefits which ensue, we are happy to note that their feeling of need for the gifts is decreasing.

Three hundred eighty cup cakes were baked by the Presbyterian women and were delivered to lonely people at Christmas—widows, bachelors, old couples whose families were far away. Several migrant women enjoyed helping to deliver the cakes, and the people who received the cakes were surprised, happy and appreciative of this expression of interest in them. Fifteen families were touched in this way.

GERMANY

Four volunteers left Kassel the first week of January to take on new assignments. Ruth Snider has joined Peggy Sargent at the Neuenkirchen hospital near Bremen, Germany, where she will work for six to eight weeks before going to her project. Marvin Blickenstaff and Ken Gross left for Austria, where Marvin will work in the refugee resettlement program in Linz, succeeding Dale Aukerman, and Ken will join the team of 1-W's at Vienna rebuilding a Protestant school there. He is replacing Howard Ogburn. Harold Brubaker will spend eight weeks at the Hessisch-Lichtenau orthopedics hospital outside Kassel with David Greer.

PUERTO RICO

Dwayne Schweppe, director of material aid, reported that during the past month he visited fifty-three homes and found that out of this number thirty-nine families were in dire need. They were given clothing. Also twenty-five sacks of shoes were sold to men, women and children. During November, seventy-three bags of shoes and sixty-four bags of clothing were received from New Windsor.

Church at Home Program

Evan Kinsley
Mt. Morris, Illinois

OUR Church at Home program was conceived and developed to help our church meet some of the needs which are common to many churches today and some that we felt were distinctly our particular problems.

In our planning meetings last fall we devoted one session to the job of evaluating our church program, defining and analyzing our problems. Each department of the church was encouraged then to set up an outline of its yearly program, being aware of this evaluation and encouraged to try to find some answers in those areas of greatest need or weakness.

The church at home program was developed by our department of ministry and evangelism and as a result of the awareness of the following needs in our church:

1. A need for a closer fellowship among our church families.
2. A need to make our people, especially adults, aware of our local church problems. This is very important for us now, as we are embarking on a church-remodeling and building program.
3. To make our members aware also of our district and Brotherhood programs and to find ways to implement effectively our Brotherhood and district theme, Seek First His Kingdom.

Adult study programs have seemed to become less popular. We felt a concern at this point and wished to try to reach some of our people who do not attend church school classes and who may be irregular in attendance at our worship services.

In brief our program follows this line. We scheduled one of these meetings each month on a Sunday evening, beginning at 5:30 and ending about 8:00. About four or five families are assigned to host homes. Both the host homes and families are rotated each month. From 5:30 to 6:15 recreation and get-acquainted activities are planned followed by a light lunch from 6:15 to 7:00. Both of these are planned and directed by the host family.

A leader is assigned to each group. He is provided with a discussion and a worship outline one week in advance. He takes over the program following the lunch and tries to get every person, young and old alike, to make a contribution to the discussion in the study for the evening. The program closes with a brief worship service and group singing.

To initiate our program, as we made our yearly stewardship visitation program in late September in addition to materials such as offering envelopes, financial commitment cards and a talent finder for the commitment of time and talents to the church, our visiting groups also took the following questionnaire:

This year, our church would like to have "Church at Home" about one Sunday evening each month. A number of families would meet in a host home for fellowship, worship, discussion and wholesome recreation. On this Sunday evening, the church program would be taken simultaneously into a number of homes in our parish. You can help us develop this plan by answering the following questions:

Would you like to try this idea? Yes_____ No_____

Would you be willing to offer your home as one of the meeting places? Yes_____ No_____

Would you serve as leader of one of these group meetings? Yes_____ No_____

Name _____

The visitors explained the program and asked each family to sign the questionnaire and return it with the talent finders and financial commitment cards on commitment Sunday.

The department of ministry and evangelism then set up an outline of the year's program and initiated the program in October. The general theme around which our programs are scheduled is the same as the district and Brotherhood theme, Seek First His Kingdom. We outlined six areas around which to build our discussion programs. These are:

1. In home and family life
2. Through stewardship of material things, time and talents
3. Through keeping life Christ-centered
4. Through home missions—with a special emphasis on our district's church building program
5. Through understanding and support of Brethren service

Families can strengthen their fellowship through study and prayer

The discussion guides and worship outlines for the various programs were worked out largely by our pastor. Each leader is free to conduct the service in his own manner, however. The November guide appears with this report.

The first Church at Home meetings have been extremely successful. It is our belief that if our church is to have a dynamic Christian program, our people must be helped to study, to pray and to be good Christian stewards. A church at home program can help in realizing these worthy objectives.

Theme: Seek First His Kingdom through Stewardship of Material Resources

A. Basic concepts of stewardship
1. Have we overworked the term stewardship? Would trustee serve our purposes better?
2. What does it mean to say that "the earth is the Lord's"?
3. What happens to us when we fail in our stewardship?
4. What are the benefits of being good stewards?

B. On tithing
1. What are the greatest benefits of tithing?
2. Is the tithe the limit of what we ought to give?
3. Should tithing be dropped when times get rough?
4. What per cent of our members should be tithing within five years?
5. How can we encourage every family to tithe?
6. Does tithing bring material rewards?

C. Other questions
1. What kind of a will should a Christian make?
2. Does a family budget have anything to do with religion?
3. Is thrift a virtue?
4. What is the Christian concept of property?
5. Is our giving of our resources a test of our loyalty to the kingdom?

Easter Materials

As Easter Dawns, by Mary B. Harrison. 5 men, 4 women, choir. 45 min. May be given in any pulpit. Shows how a church is reborn and the community awakened to the truth—Christ is risen. The keynote is faith. 50c.

Beneath the Cross of Jesus, by Carl and Doreen Myers. A service of scripture, readings and music, which gives the account of the betrayal, arrest, trial, crucifixion and resurrection of Jesus. This is a dramatic and impressive service which requires very little staging or corporate rehearsals. 10c.

Blessed Are They, by Walter E. Butts. 1 act. 3 men, 4 women. Interior. Easter eve finds the Rand family facing fear, hatred, despair and death. The Easter dawn brings faith, love and life. An excellent interpretation of the real meaning of Easter. 40c.

He Is Risen, by Virginia Mae Wood, is a sunrise service of worship consisting of familiar hymns, scriptures and meditations. 35c.

I Made Christ's Cross, by Esther C. Averill. 3 men, 2 women, 1 narrator. This is the story of the man who fashioned the cross on which the Savior suffered death. The play shows that the making of a cross can become the basis for better living if one has true repentance in his heart for his misdoings, together with a sincere belief in Jesus as the Savior of mankind, and the will to do his part to bring his kingdom into the world. 50c.

Lilies for the King, by Lucy Hamilton Howard. 4 men, 2 women, 30 min. A one-act Easter play with a stewardship emphasis. Mrs. Winthrop is offered a large sum of money for the best lilies she has grown for the church's centennial anniversary and other members of the family have difficult decisions to make. Her devotion to the King helped her children to be willing to sacrifice their personal pleasure for the service of the church. As the play ends, the lilies for the King take on a new meaning, emphasizing the stewardship of all of life. 50c.

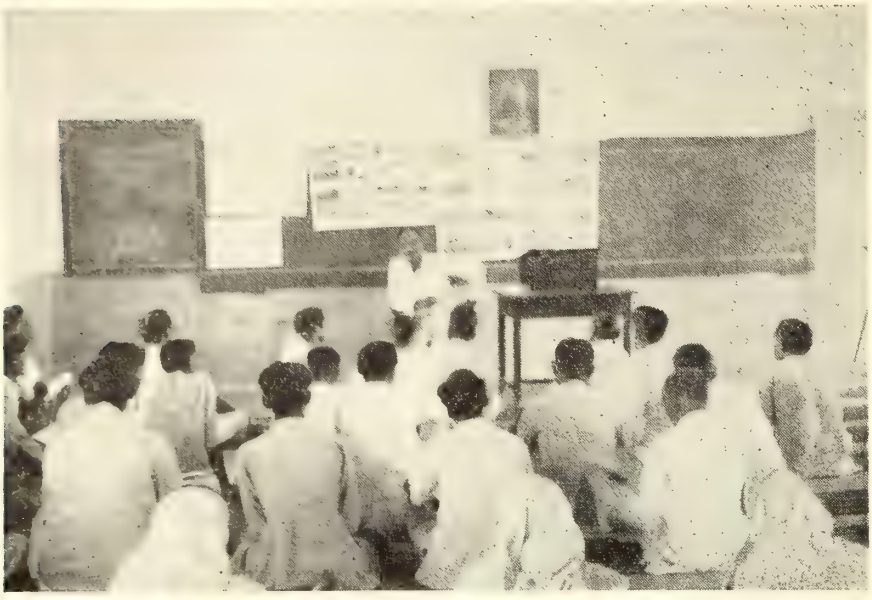
The Living Savior, an Easter missionary service for the church school. It includes scriptures, songs and drama. It is so designed that any size school can use it. A few name changes in places of missions will be necessary to adapt it for Brethren use. 10c.

The Magdalene, by Ruth L. Kocher. 4 men, 3 women, 3 extra men. The story centers around Mary Magdalene and concerns the arrest, trial and crucifixion of our Lord, culminating in the resurrection. While written in modern language, it retains the Biblical appeal. 50c.

Palm Sunday to Easter, by Edward K. Ziegler. A group of suggestions to those in charge of planning the church program for the week preceding Easter. 10c.

The Resurrection, by Rosamund Kimball. A series of tableaus, with the story of the resurrection told in words of the Bible and interludes and background of instrumental Bach passion music. Easy-to-follow directions on costuming are included, as well as the musical themes. A minimum cast of 7 men and 7 women is required. 30 min. 50c.

The Terrible Meek, by Charles Rann Kennedy. 1 act. 2 men, 1 woman. 50 min. To be played in darkness. Tells of the conversion of the centurion at the time of the crucifixion. A striking play with a peace message. 50c.



The Third Day, by Karin Asbrand. 5 men, 4 women, 20 children. 1 hour. An Easter pageant for adults and children. The story of a mother without faith in God, who when her little boy is injured, is filled with fear because of her lack of it. She falls asleep and has three visions and awakens with new courage and faith which is reflected in the recovery of her child. 50c.

Brethren Discontinue Schools in India

AFTER operating village schools in India for fifty years, the Church of the Brethren has adopted a policy of discontinuing the schools. Many have already been closed and the remaining ones will be in the near future. Let us note the circumstances which have brought about this major change in our work.

Since the years that most of the Christian schools were opened, times and conditions have changed. India now recognizes that education is the responsibility of the state and is moving rapidly to care for society's educational needs. She is leaving no vacuum—certainly none that foreign agencies can fill. The declared government policy is that private educational work is to be taken over by the state. Any reluctance on the part of a church to close its schools or to turn them over to state agencies is likely to confirm non-Christian suspicion that the schools were really evangelistic agencies cloaked in educational garb.

The freedom and independence so long enjoyed by private societies working in the educational field is fast being withdrawn. Observance of holidays, choice of textbooks, use of buildings, the giving of religious instruction on school premises, all are under scrutiny. Selection of teaching and supervisory staff will almost certainly have to be altered to include more non-Christian representation. Reports, forms, statistics and overhead requirements already make school management a maze of red tape. A natural question is, Should the church be tangled up in it any longer? Cannot the personnel and money be better used in other work?

Any discussion of mission educational work cannot ignore its connection with foreign personnel and funds and India's growing nationalism. Even though it draws support from abroad, the church is rooted in India. Christian schools, with some exceptions, operate principally on foreign subsidy and government grants-in-aid. They are suspect to nationalists for their connection with foreign nations and unsatisfactory for Christian work because they must operate under restrictions.

The mechanics of a system can kill the Christian spirit. The operation of educational programs such as we have had requires money—and the temptation is to assume the money does the work. The witness of the Holy Spirit, the service motive, self-denial for Christ's sake—these are unfortunately over-shadowed by elections to office, getting employment, operating within the budget.

This ought not to be. Yet it is understandable when the most vocal fraction of the churches' membership depends for its living on the church itself for employment, and foreign funds underwrite the expenditure. In ceasing to operate village schools, the church can eliminate its resemblance to an employment agency. The church should then be better able to place its major emphasis where it belongs—on spiritual ministry.

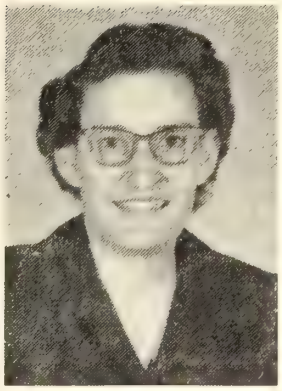
As we note the close of an era in which primary schools held a major place in our total program, let us examine both the exceedingly favorable arrangements we have enjoyed for the church's educational work and the fruit which the educational work has borne.

Freedom

Christian institutions have been able to exercise independent control of all major aspects of their educational program down through the years. Thus choice of staff and supervisors and choice of the communities and students to be served have rested with Christian bodies.

It might be said the Indian society did not give the freedom; India's need was the missions' opportunity. As the Sargent Report of 1944 says, India had not planned for meeting the educational needs of her citizens. Christian agencies were permitted, insofar as they could, to fill this social vaccum. That their efforts have fallen far short of the need is beside the point. While demonstrating Christian concern for meeting the social needs, Christians in the educational field taught and lived the gospel as well. This was not an abuse of freedom enjoyed with respect to educational activities; it was simply the church meeting the needs of people at both the mental and spiritual levels.

Such freedom as we have enjoyed in India seems extraordinary indeed when we note the lack of toleration or absence of freedom in respect to Protestant-sponsored projects in some other countries of the world. Is there any other major country in which a small minority group, partly foreign-supported and foreign-directed, would be free to carry on such basic programs as education with such little control from the majority group as in India? Although the future seems to present a changed prospect, let us be grateful for such opportunities and privileges which India has given us in the past decades.



Grants-In-Aid

The government of India is becoming more alert to the needs of general education. As a result, the local governments have opened thousands of schools under direct government sponsorship. Eligible private schools have been registered and subsidized by the state. Christian educational institutions have qualified for and received grants-in-aid. In many cases, the subsidy is as much as two-thirds the total expenditure of the school.

Having accepted subsidies, the private school agencies become dependent on the state and thus lose a measure of independence because they cannot continue without the grants. If Christian schools have been pauperized it is by their own

Meet Your Missionary

Pattie Bittinger Stern

Stanley Bittinger

PATTIE was the first Christmas present that Desmond and Irene Frantz Bittinger received in Africa. The temperature was over 100° on Christmas Day 1930 when Pattie was born.

Pattie grew up in African surroundings, journeyed with her parents on evangelistic trips, was taken piggy back by her mother when she went visiting or rode in the basket of the bicycle for somewhat longer trips. Because her parents were busy church workers with numerous responsibilities she spent many of her infant hours in the care of a loyal African named Katsali. One time he risked his life for her by killing a snake with his bare feet.

Pattie was an intelligent child and a serious one. She learned to talk early and was always keenly interested in reading. As a child she could express herself equally well in both English and the Bura language of Africa.

Travel in many countries and states is one of the characteristics of Pattie's life. Because her father was an amateur historian and could surround old buildings and historical landmarks with absorbing anecdotes and observations, travel broadened her understanding of many peoples and their backgrounds. In 1938 the Bittinger family traveled through thirty-eight states telling about Africa missions and showing one of the first films to be used in the church—In the Land of the Monkey Bread Tree.

Then she lived with her parents in Elizabethtown and Philadelphia, Pa., while her father studied in the university. Then followed four delightful years at McPherson, Kansas, where her father was a professor in the college. When in junior high school the Bittingers moved to Elgin, Ill. Here Pattie graduated from high school with a fine record after which she returned to McPherson, for her college work. While there she met Irven Stern and together they made plans to serve the Lord as husband and wife. They were married in June 1950.

After graduating from McPherson College Pattie and Irven went to Bethany Biblical Seminary, where Irven continued his studies and Pattie worked. Gayle was born in November 1952, after which Pattie became a full-time mother and homemaker.

Because her home was always shifting and friends were frequently left behind, a strong family spirit developed among the members of the family so that they depended more upon one another for companionship and recreation than upon those outside the family. Mountain climbing and camping were some of the activities in which the whole family participated.

Pattie always desired to make her own way and refused to let others do for her what she could do herself, even as a child. She helped with house work, although sometimes reading did come first! After she learned typing in high school she worked in the Foreign Mission offices of the General Brotherhood Board. In spite of the fact that she sought to pay her own way, she always made a habit of remembering her church and of using some of her money to buy presents for members of the family and her friends.

Pattie grew up in the church, both literally and figuratively. When her parents spoke in Brethren churches throughout Pennsylvania, Indiana, Ohio, Illinois and Kansas, Pattie and the other children would go along. She attended many church camps and at one of these, Camp Galilee in West Virginia, in 1939 she was baptized into the church by her father. She has always taken an active part in the church, serving in many different capacities from primary teacher's assistant to pastor's wife. She is thus prepared through intimate knowledge of the workings of the church to labor with her husband in the church of Nigeria. Her wide reading, her acquaintance with church leaders and her own Bible study have all contributed to make into Pattie a person who serves her Master faithfully.

A Miracle at York Center

The junior high Sunday-school class has been meeting in an abandoned house because of the lack of room in the church

A MIRACLE is happening before our eyes," wrote John C. Eller, the building fund director in the church newsletter. A miracle? Yes, a miracle wrought by the people of God. How were they doing it? The director continues, "Schedules are being pushed aside, telephones are ringing, typewriters are sounding in the wee hours of the nights, some are missing school and work, a whispering campaign is spreading like a prairie fire. Have you heard? Have you heard? We are going to raise the money needed for our new church." He concludes, "The contagious enthusiasm spreading among our people is evident everywhere. The way folks have set aside schedules in order to devote full attention to this great opportunity is humbling."

The completion of a successful fund drive at the York Center church did not just happen. It was truly the result of faith, prayer and sacrifice: faith that it could be done, prayer for God to show the way and sacrifice of time, ability, energy, enthusiasm and money of rededicated people to God and his kingdom.

York Center is a church located in a growing suburban community. Families are building or buying houses by the hundreds, mostly with mortgage money. The church building now in use became woefully inadequate almost before it was dedicated in 1948. As the membership grew in five years from 69 to 128, the average Sunday-school attendance jumped from 47 to 108. At the time of the election of the building finance committee on March 14 three Sunday-school classes were meeting in homes and two morning worship services were necessary.

When the committee began its work, the magnitude of the task was almost overwhelming. There were no wealthy families to ask for big gifts. Approximately 90% of the 45 families had mortgaged their lives to buy or build a home. And besides, the congregation was still in debt for the first building and the parsonage.

Investigations of the committee included the visiting of other churches that had had their own fund drives, some who had used professional fund raisers; counseling with the stewardship staff at the Elgin offices and meeting with a professional fund-raising company. After prayerful consideration the committee decided to recommend to church council the putting on of a locally directed campaign following the general over-all pattern of the professional fund raisers. This was accepted without dissenting vote.

The activities of the committee now began to move quickly. The 2,500 man hours spent by the committee in session occurred mostly in a period of about three weeks. The council and advice of Harl Russell, secretary of the Brotherhood Fund, proved invaluable.

Basically the philosophy permeating the campaign was the dedication of life. The committee came to realize all too clearly that to organize simply to raise money was to invite disaster. As an indication that money became secondary, no goal was ever announced. Instead of talk about how much the church needs, the soul-searching question was how much do I need to give to receive the greatest spiritual blessing?

The organization of the campaign was aimed at two purposes. First, to set up such organization as was needed to accomplish the purpose, and second, the involvement of a lot of people. Committees and workers, more than twenty-five per cent of the total membership, were organized into eight basic committees, plus twenty-two canvassers.

To help the organization move smoothly, detailed responsibilities and procedures were worked out for each person. Instruction was given on how to perform difficult tasks, such as phoning a person who had indicated he could not attend the loyalty dinner. Canvassers were given detailed instructions as to whom they were to visit and how.

The climax came when the church met for rededication and prayer at the loyalty dinner. Eighty people attended the dinner. No funds were raised at the meeting; however, there was an announcement as to what some had already committed to the fund. This meeting came closer to being a pentecostal outpouring of the Holy Spirit than any the writer has ever attended. Those who attended went away changed people.

From here on out the problem was simply a matter of the canvassers calling on the members and friends of the church to learn how much they had decided to commit to the Lord. Radiant canvassers reported again and again how warmly they were received into the homes.

At the close of the canvass the congregation was called together for a period of thanksgiving and rejoicing. Somehow, everyone seemed to sense it had happened. There had been a rededication of life. Of course, everybody was curious to know how much had been committed, but few were surprised when the announcement was made. As the chairman of the building fund committee handed over to the chairman of the building committee a commitment card which represented a total of $450 per week for a period of 150 weeks, hearts were warmed because they knew that this represented fifteen to twenty per cent of the income of many of the families.

choice, for the state does not give financial aid without it having been requested.

On the other hand, acceptance of government grants-in-aid have enabled Christian agencies to maintain more and better educational facilities than could have been supported otherwise. We are thankful that, by receiving government aid, more individuals in more communities have been touched with Christian influence.

Christian Leadership

A natural outgrowth of Christianity's emphasis on literacy and education should be noted. The percentage of literacy in the Christian population is above the national average. Also when we consider positions of community leadership and influence, the proportion of such positions held by Christians is higher than their proportion in the total population.

Thus the churches' program of education has paid off in preparing Christian teachers, medical staff and social workers. The church has contributed a significant service to India in preparing qualified, loyal public servants. Let us not overlook this wealth of human resources and their value for the church, for it is on such people that the church must increasingly rely for her sustenance and leadership.

Educational Work has Built Churches

Another of the fruits of the churches' educational program has been the establishment of congregations. While recognizing that education is desirable for its own sake, the church-sponsored school has frequently been instrumental in developing a school-related church. That this should happen is nothing to be ashamed of, particularly when we remember that the schools' founders and supporters held that very hope in establishing them. On the contrary, the crying need is that all Christian educational work should blossom into churches, or at least contribute actively to church growth and development.

So we see Christian educational work has been favored in India, both in having freedom and support from the non-Christian majority and in terms of its results as measured in individual and congregational units.

Church News

Southern California and Arizona

Covina—Our pastor participated in the ground-breaking service for the new Lynnhaven church in Phoenix, Ariz. The usual monthly fellowship dinner was held the last Sunday of December. At the November homebuilders' meeting, a report was given by a person who had spent the past eighteen months in Europe. Some of our people participated in the union Thanksgiving service. Since our last report consecration services have been conducted for several babies. At the December homebuilders' meeting, Sister Shisler, missionary on furlough from Africa, was our guest speaker. On Dec. 19 a Christmas program was presented at the morning service by the children. In the evening the adults gave a cantata. Since our last report two have been baptized into our church fellowship.—Mrs. S. W. Funk, Covina, Calif.

Glendora—Professor Ralph Travis of La Verne College gave an organ recital as part of the dedicatory service for the new organ. Our church was host to district conference with Bro. W. Harold Row as guest speaker. Our Sunday evening programs are in charge of a special program committee and feature guest speakers, films and local ministers. The women of our church participated in the World Community Day service, which was held in the Nazarene church. Mrs. Walter Meyers was guest speaker for our family night program. Two babies and their parents were dedicated at a special service in November. The union Thanksgiving service was held in our church. The young people have purchased a movie projector and are paying for it by the offerings received following the showing of films. On family night, Dec. 5, the filmstrip, Unto These My Brethren, was shown. On Dec. 12 Bro. Harrison Frantz was guest speaker in our church. The junior and adult choirs, under the direction of Elias Brightbill, presented Christmas music. The children's annual Christmas program was presented in the evening of Dec. 18, with a white gift offering as part of the program.—Mrs. George L. Ford, San Dimas, Calif.

Long Beach — Following the morning service on Oct. 10, a reception was held in the fellowship hall for our new associate pastor, Frank Howell, and his family. For six consecutive Sunday evenings, our pastor, Bob Richards, showed pictures taken on his goodwill tour for the State Department. Cottage prayer meetings continue each week. Our church was host to the union Thanksgiving service in our community. The women's work and the men's brotherhood gave an all-church family Christmas party. On Sunday evening the Long Beach City College choir gave a concert of sacred music. Recent guest speakers have been Dan Long of LaVerne at a morning worship service; George Cain of the Western Airlines presenting color film at the men's brotherhood meeting; and at the women's meetings Mrs. Frances Park speaking on Braille; Alice Brubaker and Lucile Heckman. The sanctuary choir gave an evening of Christmas songs and corols with the narration of the Scriptures by Bro. Howell, and pageantry by the high school department. The men's chorus also assisted in the program. During the church year there were received into our fellowship twenty-seven by baptism and twenty-two by letter. Jack Brennecke, a student minister at La Verne College, was ordained to the ministry recently and he preached his first sermon that evening. The following deacons have been installed: Kenny and Esther Cool, Park and Coral Freeman and Victor and Jane Payne. On Jan. 9 our worship service was televised on Great Churches of the Golden West. A school of missions was held during January and February with Lynn Blickenstaff, Clarence and Lucile Heckman, Elsie Ferris and our pastor, Robert Richards, as speakers.—Mrs. Homer E. Fike, Long Beach, Calif.

Colorado

Rocky Ford—We have received one new member into our church by baptism. On Dec. 2 the McPherson College male quintet gave a musical program. Sister Sara Shisler was with us on Dec. 3 and Brother and Sister Clarence Heckman were with us on Dec. 8. They are home on furlough from the Africa mission field and gave reports of their work. The Heckmans also showed pictures of the mission and displayed articles from Africa. Our Sunday-school children and the adult choir presented Christmas programs. We participated in the union New Year's service which was held in the Church of God.—Mrs. O. C. Frantz, Rocky Ford, Colo.

Middle Iowa

Cedar Rapids—Robert Eppel, a teacher in one of our local schools, was guest speaker for our father and son banquet in November. Fourteen of our women attended the sectional women's work meeting at the Cedar church. We have enjoyed two family night potluck suppers recently. On Nov. 21 and again on Nov. 28 Brother and Sister Burriss held open house at the church parsonage. At the December meeting of our women's work group, the guest speaker was a young lady from Palestine who attends Coe College. We have used the films, All For Him and Rim of the Wheel. A consecration service was held Dec. 19 for eight babies. Some of the Sunday-school classes went caroling and took fruit and cookies to the shutins. We have collected clothing and grease for relief.—Mrs. Violet M. Snyder, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Northern Iowa, Minnesota and South Dakota

Union Ridge—The first of September Bro. James Parks and his family began joint pastoral work in our church and the Greene church. We have Bible study every two weeks on Sunday evening and once each month we have a community night program and fellowship. The men of the church and community harvested the corn and beans from the farm. Our Christmas program was given by the children's department and young people and was followed by a fellowship hour. The McPherson College string quartet presented a program at the school in December. — Mrs. John Burn, Hampton, Iowa.

Southern Iowa

Mt. Etna—Since our last report six have been added to our membership by baptism and two by letter. Bro. William Gahm began his pastoral duties in our church the beginning of September. The Gahms recently held open house at the parsonage. Brother and Sister L. A. Walker retired to their farm near Adel, Iowa, last April, but Bro. Walker continued to be in charge of our services until Bro. Gahm began his work. Instead of a gift exchange at Christmas time, money was given for the seeds-of-hope project. We were represented at the district conference by Stanley Evans and Mrs. Anda Johnston. Revival services were conducted by Bro. Harley Yates. The meeting was closed with a basket dinner on Dec. 5 and a love feast service on Dec. 6. The McPherson freshman male quartet assisted with the services on Dec. 4 and 5.

The children presented a Christmas program on Dec. 22.—Miss Doris Gossard, Mt. Etna, Iowa.

Northwestern Kansas

North Solomon—Our congregation celebrated the seventy-fifth anniversary of the organization of the church with a homecoming and with Bro. Lewis Naylor, former pastor, as guest speaker. Our church participated in the North Solomon Valley Association annual revival meeting and vacation Bible school. We were host church for the district meeting. Bro. D. W. Bittinger and the ladies' quartet from McPherson College were with us the week end of Dec. 4. On Dec. 29 we had a potluck supper and a program at the church. Brother and Sister Hubert Hahn presented the church with a pulpit in memory of Brother and Sister A. S. Merkey. The children of the Sunday school gave a Christmas program.—Mrs. Macy Moyer, Portis, Kansas.

Southeastern Kansas

Galesburg — The ladies' aid group mended clothing for relief and completed a quilt. During the summer the young people held a Bible contest on Sunday nights. At council meeting Bro. Quincy Reed was elected elder. Bro. Snyder was our district meeting delegate. Slides have been shown on Japan and Korea. One person has been baptized and two received by letter into our church. Our church has exchanged programs with the Parsons church. Our Christmas program was presented on Dec. 12. The offering and money from cards sold by the young people was sent to the Navajo Indian mission. We are planning to have a 75% Messenger Club. — Mrs. Henry Snyder, Parsons, Kansas.

Salem—Bro. H. C. Lehman was elected elder at our fall business meeting. Fred Beck and Bro. Lehman were district meeting delegates. Dick Burger of Udell, Iowa, conducted our revival meeting. Four have recently been received into our church by letter. The children in the primary department prepared washcloth packets for children in Germany. They also gave their Christmas program on Dec. 19. The white gift offering was given to the Broadacres, the county home, and a worship service was held there. The women have been making bandages, dressings and gowns. They were also represented at the regional conference at McPherson.—Mrs. J. M. Carney, Nickerson, Kansas.

Northern Illinois and Wisconsin

Lena—Our Sisters of Service sponsored a family night supper with Brother and Sister Don Snider and their family as guests for the evening. Bro. Snider talked on their work with Brethren Service in Europe. Our church co-operated in the men and missions program. The men of the five churches purchased a lathe for George Mason, an agricultural missionary in India. The women of our church contributed to the Bethany Hospital sale. Our church participated in the World Community Day program. On Nov. 14 we observed our harvest and home-coming service. Brethren David Ockerman, John Heckman and W. Harold Row were guest speakers for the day. New Brethren Hymnals and new choir robes were dedicated at the morning service. Some of our group attended the district children's workers conference at Sterling. On Dec. 1 we had our regular council with Elder Paul Haworth in charge. The young adults class sponsored the play, The Fragrance of Myrrh, on the evening of Dec. 19. The children's Christmas program was given on Thursday evening, Dec. 23 and was followed by a fellowship hour. We have a 75% Messenger Club.—Clara Sandrock, Lena, Ill.

Southern Illinois

La Motte Prairie—We met in council on Dec. 1 with our elder, Farrel Culler, in charge. Work has begun on the addition to our church parsonage. We participated in the union Thanksgiving services. Since our last report Sisters Turner and Beery from La Place and Brother and Sister Hendricks have been with us. Sister Clara Myers, missionary to Africa, gave a talk one evening. We are in the 100% Messenger Club this year. Our aid sends the Messenger to a few families. The aid group made and sent a comforter to the home in Girard. Our church contributed to the March of Dimes.—Florence Seymour, Palestine, Ill.

Middle Indiana

Roann — Home-coming was observed with Bro. Joel Thompson as guest speaker for the morning service. A former pastor of our church, Bro. William Eberly, delivered the afternoon message. The church met in quarterly council on Dec. 9, with Elder E. Paul Weaver in charge. The church voted to have Brother Joel Thompson to be with us as full-time pastor beginning the first of June. Bro. Thompson is now serving as part-time pastor while attending Manchester College. Bro. Samuel Harley and Bro. Arthur Morris were in charge of ordaining Bro. Paul Hoffman to the ministry and licensing Bro. John Hoffman. The aid is making sheets, pillowcases and gowns for the district project. We met at the church on New Year's Eve for fellowship, praise and a worship service.—Mrs. Myrtie Swihart Mishler, Roann, Ind.

Northern Indiana

Goshen City—Two junior clubs, one for girls and one for boys, were organized last fall. The clubs meet on Wednesday evening while the parents are in choir practice or a prayer group. Bro. Homer Kiracofe, pastor at Plymouth, Ind., held a week of evangelistic meetings in our church. During the past year forty-one new members were added to our church—thirty by baptism and eleven by letter. Beginning in November one each available Sunday evening our pastor, Bro. Clarence Fike, leads us in a study of the life of Christ as outlined by Bro. A. C. Wieand. The children presented their Christmas program Sunday evening, Dec. 19. Sunday evenings during January were devoted to a study of mission work in India. Miss Anna Warstler, who recently returned from India, was with us for the first evening.—Mrs. Lewis Dixon, Goshen, Ind.

South Bend, First—On the evening of Nov. 14 we had as our guest, Miss Marion Wylie, an exchange teacher from Vancouver, British Columbia. She showed colored slides of her travels across the United States. On Saturday, Nov. 20, the district ministers and their wives met at our church for a morning and afternoon session. Several babies were dedicated at the morning service on Nov. 21 and Dec. 19. Our white gift Christmas offering was sent to help with the work at the Castañer, Puerto Rico, project. Since our last report one has been received into the church by baptism. On the first of January our pastor and his wife, Brother and Sister Harper S. Will, left for Florida and Puerto Rico on a three-month leave-of-absence. During their absence David J. Wieand of Lombard, Ill., William M. Beahm of Villa Park, Ill., and Floyd E. Mallott of Chicago, Ill., are bringing us the Sunday morning messages.—Lucile V. Sanders, South Bend, Ind.

Southern Indiana

Four Mile—Bro. A. Wayne Carr conducted a finance workshop in our church for the churches in our area. Some of our young people attended the youth conference at Anderson, Ind. Our church held a reception for our new pastor, Bro. John E. Smeltzer, and his wife. Bro. J. Calvin Bright conducted installation service for Brother and Sister Smeltzer. Four new members were received by letter into our church fellowship. Several persons from our congregation attended the area children's workers' conference at Anderson. Our women's work group is working on the district project which consists of making layettes for babies in Austria. Recently Bro. Dan Miller brought the morning message and in the evening the young people showed the film, The Greatest Gift.—Alice Brower, Liberty, Ind.

Lafayette—We had a farewell party for our former pastor, Bro. Keneth Hartman, and his family. An installation service and reception was held for our new pastor, Bro. Emory C. Smith, and his wife. Bro. A. Wayne Carr officiated at the installation service and the young people were in charge of the reception. Our communion service was held on Nov. 7. We are having family night one Sunday evening each month. Part of the women's work project has been to prepare clothing for relief. Several large boxes of clothing and some grease was contributed to the Lafayette relief drive which was sponsored by the County Council of Church Women. The church also participated in the friendship packet project. An area meeting was held in our church with Dessie Miller and Edward Ziegler as guest speakers. On Dec. 19 we had a candlelight and Christmas carol service with the adult choir and the children participating. — Ruth V. Stong, Lafayette, Ind.

Pyrmont—At our annual Thanksgiving service Bro. Emory C. Smith of Lafayette was guest speaker. The men's work group furnished the turkey for the dinner at the noon hour. The primary department gave a Christmas program during the Sunday-school hour. Several members have been received into our church. At our council meeting it was voted to support a full-time pastor instead of one jointly with the Rossville congregation as we have done in the past. On Sunday evening, Dec. 26, preceding the farewell sermon by Bro. A. Wayne Carr, a fellowship meal was held in the church basement. The annual union watch night service was held in our church. At the present time Bro. Ben D. Hirt of Monticello, Ind., is preaching for us. — Ruth Houmard, Lafayette, Ind.

Rossville—During the absence of our pastor, Bro. A. Wayne Carr, services were conducted by Bro. Dale Gibbony of the Fairview church and by Bro. John Root of Lafayette. Several of our women made friendship packets which were sent to New Windsor for overseas relief. Our group was represented at the area meeting on Nov. 23 in the Lafayette church. Guest speakers for this meeting were Bro. Edward K. Ziegler and Dessie Miller. One Sunday evening six persons were received into our church by baptism and one by former baptism. Family night was held at the church on Nov. 30 with a basket supper honoring our oldest member, Bro. Isaac Gochenour, who had just passed his ninety-third birthday. At our quarterly council on Dec. 10, we decided to have a full-time pastor beginning the first of September 1955. In the evening of Dec. 19, the church community choir, composed of singers from six congregations, presented the Christmas cantata, The Music of Bethlehem, at the school gymnasium. Our children gave a program at the morning service on Dec. 19 at which the white gift offering was received and dedicated. Our school of missions was held on Sunday nights during the month of January with classes for all age groups. —Mrs. Harry Gochenour, Mulberry, Ind.

Northeastern Ohio

Paradise—Bro. Million was in charge of council meeting. Church and Sunday-school officers were elected for the new year. Bro. Million will continue as our elder. Revival services were held with Bro. C. E. Davis of Elgin, Ill., as evangelist. Fifteen were received by baptism and one by letter into our church fellowship. Our communion was held on Nov. 14, with Bro. Arthur Hess in charge. The ladies' aid canned peaches for relief. The women have made children's garments for relief and bed covers for a family that lost its home through fire. They are now making children's gowns for Africa missions and also comforters and quilts. The subdistrict father and son banquet was held in our church.—Mrs. C. William King, Wooster, Ohio.

*SMOKING and CANCER

by ALTON OCHSNER, M. D.

Much is being said and written about the effects of smoking on the functioning of our respiratory systems. Now after years of painstaking research by many scientists this book has been produced in which the conclusions they reached are presented for the enlightenment of all. Before change must come knowledge and understanding. To that end this book has been written. Youth who read this report will certainly think seriously on the possible effects before starting a lifetime habit that will subtract years from their lives. Habitual smokers should study this report. If they are entirely honest with themselves they may well take the proposed methed for conquering the habit. 96 pages. $2.00

Man of Peace

Gendreau

MASSASOIT, whose statue appears in Plymouth, Massachusetts, was the chief of the Wampanoag Indians. In 1621 he signed a treaty of peace with the white men, a treaty that was unbroken for fifty-four years. It is appropriate that this memorial to an original American who was a man of peace should stand near the site of the landing of the Mayflower. If more colonists had shared the ideals of Roger Williams, John Eliot and William Penn, perhaps many more Indian leaders would have been as devoted to peace as was Massasoit; and some chapters of American history would have made more inspiring reading than they do now. The Indian who holds a peace pipe appears to have much more human dignity than the one who brandishes a tomahawk. Which symbol is appropriate for our leaders today? Which one marks the man of peace?

The Gospel Messenger welcomes letters commenting on editorials, articles and news. Letters should be brief and brotherly.

Supreme Authority

In appreciation of J. H. Clawson's tribute to Pietistic faith as a mighty force, in the Messenger for Jan. 22, may I add that for thousands of our people the New Testament expressions which he names have become the channel through which we affirm and reaffirm, declare and redeclare, commit and recommit our loyalty to the supreme authority of Jesus Christ in all things spiritual, because "God hath spoken unto us by his Son" (Heb. 1:1-2). The suffering that follows where deviations from these New Testament expressions are proposed bears evidence that the genius of Brethren faith buries all its roots in the statement that God has spoken to mankind in this generation by his Son.

Alexander Mack and his Bible students accepted this truth by their agreement to let "all things whatsoever Jesus commanded" form the pattern for a strictly New Testament church.

The messages of Billy Graham vibrate with convictions that agree with this Hebrews statement and the response of the multitudes shows the welcome in hearts today for a divine directive in their lives. Kirby Page devoted several sessions at Anderson last summer to remind us that "God is as good as Jesus," an effort plainly directed toward the truth that "God hath spoken unto us by his Son."

Our relief work has lifted the name of the Church of the Brethren to the attention of a world that is waiting to hear us state the genius of our faith, which is that God hath spoken to this generation by his Son who said: "My doctrine is not mine but his that sent me" (John 7:16). "The words that I speak are not mine but the Father's that dwelleth in me" (John 14:10). "The words that I speak they are spirit and they are life" (John 6:63). "The words that I speak shall judge him in the last day" (John 12:48). In John 17:6 he commended his eleven to his father with these words: "They have kept thy word."

Our effort to divide these words of the Father, spoken by Christ, into essential or nonessential, relevant or irrelevant, is really a disciples' mutiny against our Master for he said, "Why call ye me master and Lord and do not the things that I say?" Bro. C. C. Ellis said, "Every human life needs a master and a savior." In truth he is not our Master if we divide his words to suit our convenience or our Savior if we delete his commands to agree with our personal preference. "For the end of the commandment is love out of a pure heart, a good conscience and faith unfeigned" (1 Tim. 1:5). The New Testament disciplines through which these graces are achieved are authenticated in the words through which "God hath spoken unto us by his Son."

Is your relationship to the Lord described in John 12:44-50—Jesus' farewell words to the Jewish nation—or in 1 Tim. 1:5? This question is serious because "God hath spoken to us by his Son."—Galen Barkdoll, Copemish, Mich.

A Laymen's Movement

I liked what Bro. John H. Clawson, Robinson, Pa., says about the Brethren movement in Messenger for Jan. 22. The Pietistic movement was essentially a laymen's movement and I am quite committed to the idea of the "priesthood of the believers" as opposed to ecclesiastic direction of faith.

The letter in the same Messenger, "Will They Be Free to Speak?" has more than passing merit. This problem is being discussed by men of rank in government as well as the church. Truly God's people must be "wise as serpents and harmless as doves."—R. F. Porte, Warsaw, Ind.

Give God Credit for Healing

I want to commend you for publishing an article on divine healing. It is time we were giving God and not men the credit for healing.

It is time we were preaching all of the great commission of Christ mentioned in Luke 16: 18. I hope the day comes when we make the laying on of hands part of our church services.

Isn't this also witnessing to others to see someone made whole in body? God can do what man cannot. If he is the same today as he was in Bible times then why shouldn't he have the same desire and compassion to heal our bodies and minds now?

Some do not recover as soon as they would like because there may be unbelief in their hearts or perhaps God wants them to become more humble, more dependent on him, more willing to serve him. He can give us strength and increase our faith if we but lean on him.—Mrs. Snyder, Parsons, Kansas.

A rising nationalism, a desire to share in the good things of the earth, pride in ancient native culture and revival of old religions — all these have helped to create a climate not too favorable to mission work by foreigners

FOREIGN MISSIONS TODAY

THROUGHOUT the long history of the Christian church there have been several great waves of missionary interest: the apostolic period, the period of the missionary monks, the period following the Methodist revival movement. The last of these flowered into what has come to be known as the modern missionary movement. Beginning about 1795, this movement produced some of our great missionary heroes such as Wiliam Carey, Robert Moffat, Adoniram Judson, David Livingstone and others, and it carried the gospel to India, to China, to Burma, to the East Indies, to New Zealand and to much of Africa.

This movement did not strike the Church of the Brethren until about a hundred years later when Wilbur Stover awakened the church by his enthusiasm and persistent insistence that missions was the great first work of the church. Bro. Stover and his wife and Sister Bertha Ryan went out in 1894 and opened the India field. The Frank Crumpackers and others opened the China field in 1908. H. Stover Kulp and Albert Helser pioneered in Africa in 1922, and Ecuador has been opened within the last decade by the Benton Rhoadeses and others. During the half century following Wilbur Stover, missions were a top priority in the church. With what bated breath and wide-open eyes we listened to the stories of such early missionaries as Wilbur Stover, S. N. McCann, the Adam Ebeys, the Frank Crumpackers, Ida Shumaker and others!

It is interesting to contemplate what motives led these venturesome souls in those earlier days to brave the uncertainties of strange lands, to live their whole lives away from their friends. The answer is not far to seek. They believed that men were lost without Christ and that it was the duty of Christians to carry the gospel of salvation and hope to those who knew him not. Any failure on our part to do that would be chalked up against us. With Spurgeon, they felt that, whether the heathen peoples were lost without Christ or not, we might be if we did not do our duty toward them.

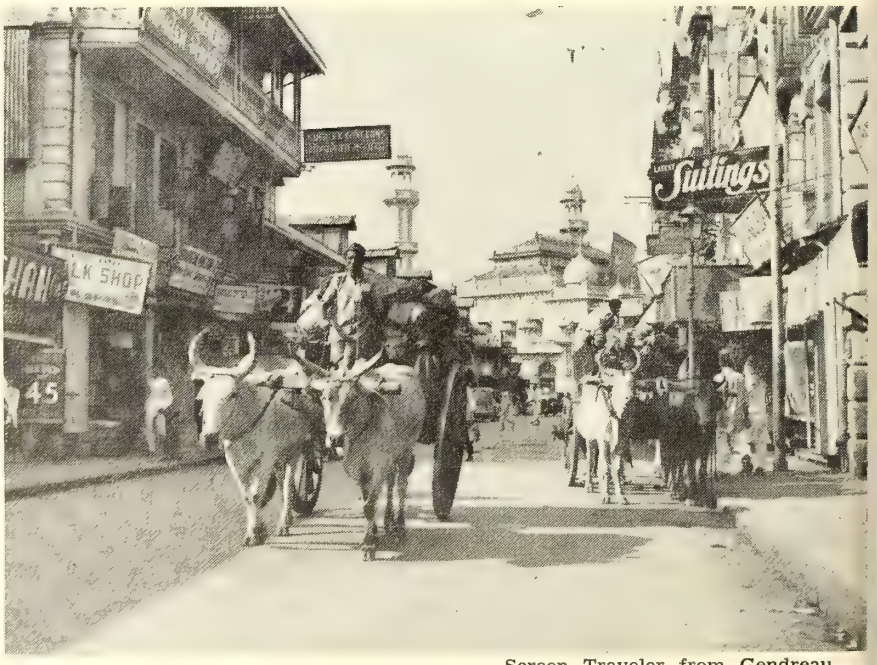
Early missionaries may have thought of their task as a simple telling of the gospel story to primitive peoples. But soon it was evident that the task was complex. Soon we were in educational work, in medical work, in agricultural work and various other lines which seemed to contribute to the success of the missionary enterprise. In fact, at times there has been criticism lest missionaries forget their major purpose of evangelism as they engage in these functions which seemed to some as more or less secular activities. In fact, at times it seemed to some home peoples and the peoples of foreign lands that we were more interested in transmitting our culture and material civilization to backward peoples than we were in carrying the gospel to them.

While there was some resistance to the earliest modern missionaries in some Oriental lands, they were later welcomed in many places for the service they rendered the people by way of famine relief, educational opportunity, nursing and medical service, agricultural and mechanical help. The sacrificial service of missionaries like Schweitzer and hundreds of others is well known around the world.

But the climate of the world has changed. We have had two colossal world Wars, in which the so-called Christian nations of the West were active participants if not leaders. It is not difficult to see that the East would say that if this is what happens in Christian nations we want none of it.

Then these self-same wars have awakened a keen sense of nationalism among the peoples of the East. Each nation wants to be free and independent of foreign control. They no longer want to be peoples subject to Western imperialism. So they have arisen in India, in Iran, in Egypt, in North Africa, in Indonesia, in Tunisia against their imperial masters—seeking independence.

Closely related to all this is the desire of backward peoples to share in some of the good things of the earth for their people. Frank Lauback's famous picture of upreaching hands everywhere around the world—hands that want food, clothing, homes, education is familiar. This world-wide revolution among all the backward peoples of the world threatens the complete breakdown of all Western imperialism and makes foreign mission work difficult almost everywhere and impossible in some areas.



The collapse of China into the hands of Communists has put an end to foreign missions in that country, though there is direct evidence that the Christian program is going forward through native Christians.

In India, the oldest existing Brethren mission field, our missionaries have done heroic work in education, medical work and agriculture, in famine relief and, of course, in evangelism. For many years our missionaries were most welcome in India, and were highly respected by Indian leaders.

Since India has won her independence from Great Britain a strong spirit of nationalism has developed there also. They seem to take great pride in their ancient culture and there is a revival of some of their ancient religions. Moreover, there has been a sharp clash on foreign policy between the Indian government and the United States in relation to Pakistan and China. The military alliance between the U. S. and Pakistan has awakened fear and great resentment in India. There seems to be not a universal, but a rather widespread antiforeign feeling and especially an anti-American feeling.

Earlier in India there were sections where there were no primary schools. Brethren missions established many such schools and operated many of

A Place for Negatives

IT IS fortunate for editors that readers do not remember editorials—at least for more than a few weeks. Otherwise, we might be called to account more often for our inconsistencies.

Some time ago we made a plea "for a positive gospel." We urged Christians to strike the affirmative note. We held to the need for accentuating the positive and we believed the good news about a good God to be affirmative. He has not abdicated his rule nor abandoned his world.

But for the same reasons that our faith is positive, we Christians ought to be best equipped to face up to negatives. Preaching a positive gospel never means that we underestimate the power of evil. There are plenty of negatives to reckon with, whether you look at the human animal or at the world around you.

Too often the positive-thinking person seeks out some air-conditioned bomb shelter from which he can raise his periscope and survey the world out-side. But an affirmative Christian dare not seek only his own salvation while ignoring the harsh realities of greed and injustice, the incessant struggles for power, and the anxieties burning within wars cold and hot. He cannot close his eyes to the cruelties imposed by our prejudices, the falsities of our pretences, the shallow shams of virtue that make even the best men hypocrites.

You cannot escape the big negatives of the world by digging into your own special burrow. The negatives are within us and we take them wherever we go. This fact used to be recognized under the term of "original sin" but our evasive generation dislikes so deadly a designation. Whatever you call it, evil is evil and the Christian faith has always been ready to face it.

Many of the Old Testament prophets accentuated the negative—through sharp and picturesque figures of speech and through acid comments on their contemporary scene. But you do not need to be a prophet or the son of one to look squarely and honestly at yourself and to admit that the imposing thing of pride and selfishness that you see in the mirror is anything but lovely to look at. Hold a mirror up to the world and the same disagreeable images are multiplied a thousandfold.

Yet the gospel of Christ is positive because there is another image in the mirror, an image of God himself. The same ancient accounts that pay their respects to original sin also remind us that we are made in the image of God. We have a capacity to change, we have an alternative for our wills to choose, we have a potential that can be cultivated, coaxed and converted into something that might faintly resemble a child of God. If you can face up to original sin for what it is, there is hope that you can see the grace of God for what it is—a hand extended from the cross of Christ and reaching down to the lowest depths where it can take hold and lift. Thank God for a gospel that never ignores the worst negatives but confronts them in order to overcome them.

This is our confidence, not that our pictures of human depravity can somehow be glossed over, but that the loving grace of Jesus Christ has already been at work renewing men and remaking society. His cross is a fact of our times as well as his own. His victory can overcome our defeats.—K.M.

Preaching, Teaching, and Reaching

MANY of our churches plan regular preaching missions. These provide an excellent opportunity to proclaim the good news of the Christian gospel, but sometimes we think that those who benefit most are the guest preachers and the faithful among the already loyal church members.

A better plan, if carried through consistently, is to have a teaching mission. It is better because it enlists church school teachers and many other lay leaders along with guest speakers. It recognizes the fundamental importance of teaching—something that begins long before a scheduled mission and should last long after.

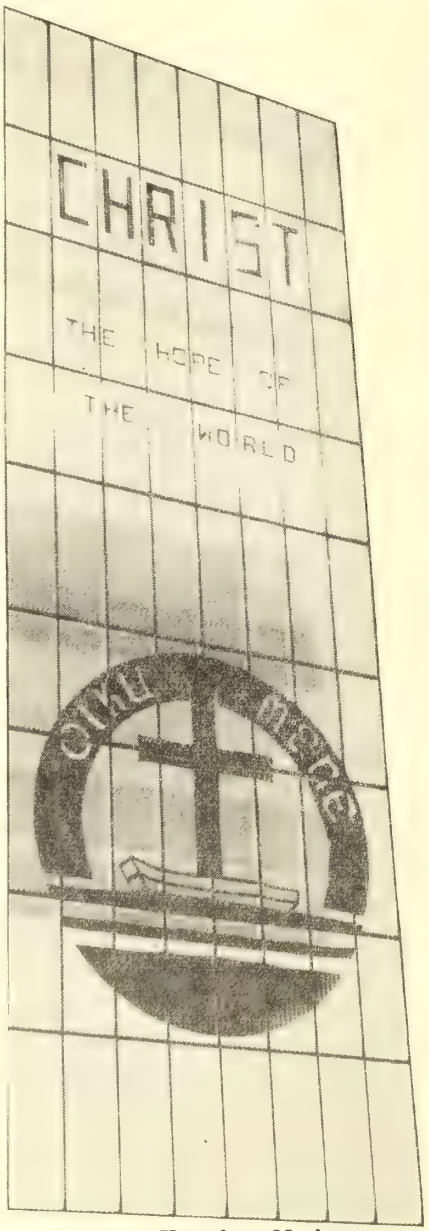
But now the Evangelical Lutheran Church has launched an evangelism plan of "preaching-teaching-reaching" missions. The reachers are volunteer lay workers who invite neighbors to the nightly worship services in their church. According to early reports from the campaign "each one reached one" in the 1954 effort. More than 18,000 lay workers were able to reach a few more than 18,000 other persons and bring them into a new relationship to the church. Around 8,500 became new members, 2,500 enrolled in membership classes; the rest were children who were added to Sunday-school classes.

This looks like the kind of evangelism that could transform every one of our churches. The important thing is the army of lay workers, the "reachers" who witness by ringing doorbells and talking to their neighbors.

You need not wait for such a campaign to be organized in your church, however, to become a "reacher" for Christ. Why not begin this week? —K.M.

Summons at Midnight

The Christian's task is not only going out to seek those who are lost; it is being ready to give "bread" to those who come knocking at the door of the church.



D. T. Niles

IT IS midnight in the parable. It is also midnight in the world today. The night is so deep that everything has become just an object to be avoided, an obstacle in the dark against which men must take care not to bump. Certainly there are those who are blaring out guidance; but the guidance offered is so confusing that wisdom seems to lie in not accepting any of it. The hour of midnight is the hour when all cows are black, and he is a good prophet who simply tells men what not to do.

Besides, at midnight every color loses its distinctiveness and becomes merely a dirty shade of gray. There is today so much disappointment and disillusion, so much frustration and bewilderment, that cynicism and despair have taken possession of many men's souls. Nothing seems to matter, not in the dark. Honesty, chastity, sobriety, courtesy—these deal with distinctions in human behavior which tend to become irrelevant when it is a long midnight. Men at midnight listen easily only to those who speak about the tragedy of life.

Also, at midnight, nobody expects anything to happen. It is the hour when no-happening is good news. How anxiously, in whatever part of the world we live, we read our newspapers and as we put them down heave a sigh of relief. Nothing has happened! Everywhere the unresolved problems continue to stand on end and nowhere have they toppled over into violent activity or event. So midnight drags on with our ears strained in the hope that they will hear no sound.

But as in the parable, so in our day the tense silence of midnight is disturbed by the sound of a knock. It is the door of the church on which somebody is knocking. That is still the one familiar landmark to which the traveler at midnight comes. How bitterly men and women speak about their disappointment with the church. They may be right or wrong, but at least in this their attitude is significant, that they feel that the church should not have disappointed them. It is the one house which stands where it has always stood, the house to which the man traveling at midnight either comes or refuses to come. Many decide not to come. Some, however, come and knock. And those who decide not to come are still preoccupied with the church which they have rejected.

Hays from Monkmeyer

But is it only individuals who knock at the door of the church? We do not sufficiently realize that the evangelistic situation is again and again that of being surrounded and sought after and questioned. There are those who are knocking at the door of the church—and they are not merely the hungry, the homeless, the refugee, the displaced person, the outcast. There are at the church's door also every type of community — nations, races, classes, political groupings — knocking for different reasons. Some ask for bread. Others simply ask what kind of people live in this house in which a light shines at midnight. Still others come just to shake their fists in the faces of those who keep a light burning but have no bread.

For it is true that so often there is no bread in the house. The church is expecting no callers and has laid in no supplies. With what bread it had it has just managed to feed its own children. It has sufficient obedience not to put out the light in the window, but it does not have sufficient expectancy to believe that anybody will come.

Unfortunately, however, there is also the other fact—that so many members of the church get worried when the church tries to prepare to welcome all callers. A year ago the Ceylon government lifted its subsidy on rice, and the political parties of the left declared a day's hartal in protest, a day's general stoppage of work. Some hooliganism broke out and the government used force to quell the disturbances. It was the kind of situation in which most people were concerned with what was policy and expediency, and where the common mass of people felt helpless to think or speak in terms of what was right or wrong. Their silence and helplessness knocked at the door of the church. The Methodist Church in Ceylon heard the knock, woke up and spoke to the situation in the name of Jesus Christ. Immediately the question was raised, "Should not the church have kept quiet? After all, it is midnight, and nothing that the church says or does will make any difference!"

More Than Personal

It is true, isn't it? That there are those who bear the name of Jesus Christ who want the church not to answer any call but the call of private personal need or the call for salvation after death. "God so loved the world that he gave his Son." So the task of the church is to proclaim God's Son as the hope of the world. This means that Jesus is the hope of men in all the complexities of their relationships to one another, and that Jesus is the hope also of the church precisely when the church is engaged in setting forth Jesus as the hope of the world.

Evangelism means that the Christian community, by all that it does and says and is, brings to bear the truths of the gospel on the torments of the world. it means that thus the pressure of the gospel upon the world is maintained, so that the solution to every human problem—whether it be the problem of war-torn Korea or the problem of a widowed mother who does not have the wherewithal to feed her children—may be worked out under that pressure by those whose responsibility it is to work it out. It is a question wrongly put when it is asked, "What is the Christian solution which the church can offer to this or that problem?" For the task of the church is not to offer Christian solutions to specific problems, but to incarnate the Word in every human situation. The result of such evangelism may be that the Word is crucified, but Jesus "must go to Jerusalem and suffer many things and be killed and on the third day be raised." Pilate had no power to prevent the resurrection. The hope of the world is Jesus whom the world has the power to crucify.

When the church ceases to be concerned with the world, then it ceases to hear God speak to it; for God's conversation with the church is a conversation about the world, and the church must be willing to converse about the world if it is to converse with God. It is the world which is the direct object of God's action. He made it. He loved it. He saved it. He will judge it through Jesus Christ. Indeed, a church that is disobedient to

IN REMEMBRANCE

MARY E. BROUGHER

The Lord God bows his head in grief.
"Is this the world that I have made?
Are these the men for whom I sent
My only Son, their sins to trade?

So many weary years I've watched
My erring children go their way—
Their selfish way of hate and greed.
Is there no hope for man this day?"

Then, faint as from a distance far,
A sound is heard, so pure and true,
An earthly hymn of peace and joy,
A song of souls revived anew.

The Lord God lifts his drooping head;
His glowing eyes pierce through the gloom.
He sees below a small white church,
An open door, a lighted room.

Within the room the pews are full
Of worshipers whose heads are bent
O'er hands which hold the broken bread,
As humble hearts of sin repent.

A reverent voice is heard to speak:
"My brethren, heed thy Master's call.
This is his body and his blood,
Which he so freely shed for all."

The Lord God wipes away a tear.
"These things they do in love for me.
Where two or three come in my name,
There, close to them, I'll ever be.

I'll still have hope for all mankind
When, in a world of strife and sin,
There are yet those who, at my knock,
Throw wide the door, and let me in."

The above poem is dedicated to the Tire Hill Church of the Brethren

Ewing Galloway

It is the world which is the direct object of God's action, and the church that is disobedient to its commission to go to the world becomes a menace to the world itself its commission to go to the world becomes a menace to the world itself. Disobedient Jonah was the cause of the storm that overtook that ship on its normal trading voyage and those sailors had no alternative but to throw him into the sea. Even this is part of God's providence when the world casts the church overboard and leaves it at God's mercy. The church may not escape its commission to be the friend.

The Position of True Evangelism

"A friend of mine has arrived on a journey." So speaks the man in the parable, and in so speaking he defines the position and attitude of true evangelism.

Whoever comes and whenever he comes, he comes as a friend and he comes because we have turned ourselves into friends. Have we not found that when we Christians begin really to desire to share with others our friendship with Jesus Christ, when we give ourselves to expectant prayer asking God to help us find new friends for Jesus, when we take seriously the need of keeping watch over ourselves lest they who come to us find no evidence of our friendship either with Jesus Christ or with them—that then the experience of evangelism becomes not so much the experience of going out to find as of being ready to welcome those who come?

The ashram in Jaffna, the town in Ceylon from which I come, last year opened an evangelistic mission among the Veddahs, the aboriginal tribe of Ceylon. There it is a contest between the power of the gospel in the whole life of man and primitive belief in the power of demons. There was in the place a Hindu devotee who was the center of no-response to the Christian work that was being done. How were his co-operation and sympathy to be won? One day his son, going out into the woods to gather honey, got stung by forest wasps. It was known to be fatal to be stung like that. The boy, running away in headlong flight, came to the ashram settlement. A crowd gathered. The mother of the boy was sent for. But there was nothing anybody could do. There were no medicines, no doctors in a place so far away from anywhere. The body of the boy began to swell. The Christian evangelist in charge of the place had a cup of hot coffee made, gave it to the boy, knelt down and began to pray. As the prayer went on, the boy quieted down. Soon he was breathing without panting, and in two hours' time he went home with his mother, perfectly whole. The next morning the father arrived, full of apologies and bursting with thanks. A friend had been won to the cause of Christ. Christ had brought him to the door of a friend.

Causes of Failure

There are many causes for the lack of results in evangelistic work, but the primary cause always is failure in expectant love. Often we do not care sufficiently about people as people. We are concerned about evangelism, but this concern is largely the consequence of a desire to fulfill our evangelistic duty as Christians. But evangelism, to be true evangelism, must cease to be a duty. It must become an inevitability. The shepherd looking for his lost sheep is not fulfilling a duty. A mother praying for her erring child is not meeting an obligation. A church declaring God's judgments to the people is not just obeying a call. A friend sharing his friendship with Jesus is not simply discharging a responsibility. "The love of Christ controls us," says St. Paul.

Listen to the cry of him who is the Evangelist, as it comes to us echoing down the pages of the Bible: "Adam, where art thou?" "How shall I give thee up, Ephraim?" "How shall I deliver thee, Israel?" "O Jerusalem, how I would and ye would not!"

It is so easy to engage oneself in what are known as evangelistic activities, to have even a true theology of evangelism, and yet be and remain the kind of person to whose hands the Great Shepherd cannot entrust his sheep. Let me put the question in this way: Can you mention the names of the people —two or three perhaps—who are to you a cause of real sorrow because they are not Christians? They are good people, they are your friends, but always when you think of them there is a pain in your soul because they do not serve Jesus Christ. Are there such people in your life? If not, you are not an evangelist, however much the evangelistic work which you may be doing.

Love the Essential

This emphasis on the impulse of evangelism is also of significance where the so-called foreign missionary enterprise is concerned. There is a world of difference between the missionary who comes to proclaim the truth of the gospel and the missionary who comes to care for a people with the care of Jesus Christ. The heart of the experience for every evangelist lies just here: It is when we are really concerned with people as people that we discover our own poverty too. We have speeches, arguments, techniques; schools, hospitals, orphanages; books, pamphlets, posters—but of love and real care we do not have what is necessary to meet the need. As in the parable, so we are driven to say: "A friend has arrived and I have nothing to set before him." We cannot feed them on scraps. We love too truly to do that.

But there is another Friend to whom we may go, one who has promised to provide us with bread whenever we ask. "Ask," he said, "and it will be given you; seek and you will find; knock, and it will be opened to you. For if you who are evil know how to give good gifts to your children, how much more will the heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to those who ask him?"

The answer to the prayer for the Holy Spirit is always Yes! There is always bread with him who is the Bread of Life. And he gives it to those who ask. Our problem is that we forget that we cannot feed our friends who come to us out of our own sufficiency or that we do not know the way to our other Friend's home sufficiently well in order to run to him in a hurry. The evangelist must be a man of prayer or he will never find the bread with which to feed the hungry. But it is just here that we must reckon with another truth, a truth which any evangelist who has gone to Jesus asking for bread knows. Again and again the answer of Jesus to the request for bread is this: "Friend, a large supper is ready; therefore go and bring your friend, and not only him but many others also."

Bread for those whom Jesus will bring to our door, and bread for those whom Jesus bids us go and find and bring to his door —both are indivisible parts of one task. We have no bread, but he gives the Holy Spirit to them that ask him. A supper is going to waste, a supper which God gave his Son to die on the cross to prepare. Therefore, "go out to the highways and hedges and compel people to come in."

Some who are hungry will come asking for bread, but many who are equally hungry must have the bread taken to them. "Do you believe in Jesus?" we ask someone whom we would win for the kingdom. We get no answer, for the question in his heart is, "Does Jesus believe in me?" The evangelist must know how to say, and say convincingly, "Yes, my friend. Jesus does believe in you and he is waiting for you. Come!"

A Pearl of Great Price

Kirby Page

Peace of mind is a pearl of Great price, its worth is Beyond measurement. It can Never be found by seeking,
It comes as a consequence.
When the heart is sound,
When attitude is right,
When relationship is proper,
Peace of soul is found.
It is not dependent on Health and vigor,
Comfort and safety,
Possession and station.
It may be won in Sickness and pain,
Privation and bereavement,
Frustration and defeat.
Peace of mind flows from Appreciation of beauty,
Dawn, sunset, midnight,
Stream, lake, ocean,
Forest and mountain,
Painting and sculpture.
It surges from
Piano and violin,
Symphony and oratorio.
It is discovered in Library and study, in Poetry and prose.
It is created by the Reading of biography and Sharing intimately the Experiences of others.
Peace of mind springs from Friendship and comradeship.
It wells up from a Ministry of mercy and the Religion of loving kindness.
It runs like a living stream
From the Bible, from Psalm and gospel.
Its breath is prayer,
Adoration and thanksgiving,
Confession and commitment.
It is incarnated in the Meekness and boldness of
Our Lord Jesus Christ.
Peace of soul is a gift
From the grace of God.
It is calmness of spirit,
Serenity of being,
Unification of self.
In the New Testament it is Called the peace of God
Which passes understanding.
For peace of soul a Person does well to Sell everything and buy it.

Keep America Free

from military regimentation

E. Paul Weaver

FOR A century and a half America got along nicely without military regimentation. With the passage of the Selective Service Act of 1948 and its continuence as a form of compulsory universal military service and training, a generation is growing up that cannot remember when America was free from military regimentation. Now is the time for all who believe in freedom to speak out against this growing cancer of military regimentation.

The history of Europe and of Japan testifies to the fact that huge conscript armies do not prevent war. France, with many years of military regimentation, proved that peacetime conscription does not make a nation strong. In modern war other factors are more important than mass pools of manpower—"stock-piled bodies." In this day training boys to win past wars can be fatal to national security.

Most of the pressure for military regimentation comes from those whose ideas were fixed prior to the atomic age. Preparation for defense against hydrogen bombs is to be far, far, away. With weapons of extermination, most old concepts are antiquated.

Study carefully the article by Brigadier General Bonner Fellers in the magazine Air Force for February 1953 or in the Jan. 11, 1954 Congressional Record. This proposed regimentation cannot help the air force. They need men with many years of highly technical training. Investing billions in regimented masses of manpower actually cripples the air force.

The navy needs men for several years before they become most useful. A two-year program of military regimentation will not develop a strong peacetime navy. Like the air force, the navy wants career men who will take the time to develop the technical skills required by modern weapons.

Danger to Labor and Business

Organized labor knows what happens to labor unions in states enslaved by military regimentation. When military regimentation reaches its ultimate, conscription of labor follows.

If we permit regimentation of life, we cannot hold back when the military demands regimentation of labor and regimentation of capital. Those who plan military regimentation of young men have not forgotten regi-

Military regimentation of a people and training a nation's young men in the ways of fighting do not prepare for peace mentation of industry and capital. In the name of defending ourselves from Communist regimentation it would be the rankest folly to set up the same system here.

We dare not waste billions of dollars preparing for "past wars." There is a limit to how many billions the United States government can waste. A bankrupt nation is ripe for communism.

Good farmers know that the boy should be learning farming at the very time that military regimentation would take him from his home. Breaking up a father-son partnership and putting a boy in an army camp, where soldiering becomes a verb, does not produce farmers. Farmers recognize the evils of military regimentation.

Careful observers know what happens to morals under military regimentation. High school boys say, "What's the use? The army will get you anyway." Moral fiber snaps. Note the alarming rate of delinquency among high school age boys and girls—the drunkeness, the venereal disease, the upset personalities. All the world knows that military life is not generally conducive to good morals.

The Danger to Freedom

Americans should read these lines: "Therefore we stand for compulsory military service for every man. If a state is not worth that, then away with it!

"The army educates men only to be reliable, decent members of the community, men who in the hour of need and danger feel themselves in loyalty with the nation; and should fate confront them with the sternest ordeal, will defend the freedom of their people with bravery and honor."—Adolph Hitler in Mein Kampf.

The real strength of America is in its citizens who have been trained to think for themselves. Military regimentation is just the opposite of what our American schools have been trying to do in training youth to think independently and for themselves. Our inventions, our industrial genius, our moral fiber —these were not forged in a slave state. They were the product of a people who have been free—free from military regimentation.

The Nov. 8, 1952, issue of Colliers Magazine carried the article, "Why Half Our Combat Soldiers Fail to Shoot. The writer points out that during World War II only twelve to twenty-five per cent of all combat soldiers who were armed and in a position to fire their weapons at the enemy were able to pull the trigger!

By intensive effort in Korea the average was not raised above fifty per cent. If from four to seven out of eight men sent into combat to shoot even when their own lives depend upon it, think of the folly of sending them to the front for that expressed purpose. Remember that in supply lines or behind desks there are nine soldiers for each soldier who goes to the front.

History records the fact that large professional armies take away the liberties of the countries they profess to defend. "Vast armies decay imperceptibly while sapping the strength of the nations supporting them," said a recent chief of staff, General Dwight D. Eisenhower. General Marshall warned that a large professional army "has no place among the institutions of a modern democratic state based upon the conception of government by the people."

Justice of the Supreme Court Douglas has pointed out that our nation already has become the victim of the military mind. Many other careful analysts have noted this evil. With the rise of militarism freedom decays.

Woodrow Wilson called peacetime conscription, "the root-evil of Prussianism." On September 6, 1919, in Kansas City, he warned against the growth of militarism. He said:

"So soon as you have a military class, it does not make any difference what your form of government is; if you are determined to be armed to the teeth, you must obey the orders and directions of the only men who can control the great machinery of war. Elections are of minor importance because they determine the political policy, and back of the political policy is the constant pressure of the men trained to arms, enormous bodies of disciplined men, wondering if they are never going to be allowed to use their education and their skill and ravage some great people with force of arms. That is the meaning of armaments. It is not merely the cost of it, though that is overwhelming, but it is the spirit of it, and America has never and I hope, in the Providence of God, never will have that spirit."

In 1814 Daniel Webster pronounced a conscription act unconstitutional. In 1819 Henry

A Room Apart

IDA WATTS BURNS

To meet life's call from day to day,
To do the tasks along the way,
To soothe your hurts with healing balm,
To find a confidence and calm
In time of need,
Keep in your soul a room apart;
Fill it with treasures of the heart—
Rare pictured scenes of sacred hours,
Rich tapestries of heaven-born powers—
Illume with Faith. On entering there
Give to the winds all needless care,
And kneeling wait on heaven to give
New strength, that you may truly live—
May live, indeed.

Clay denounced Andrew Jackson's invasion of Florida. He warned that if our American form of government "is to be preserved we must hold to a strict accountability the military branch of the public force."

One wonders what the fathers of our conutry might say if they could see how the military now attempt to dominate the life of our government and the American people.

Some say, "If you want peace, prepare for war." In the cool light of history that is a lie. Armament races have led to war. France and Germany demstrate the truth of the real axiom, "To be prepared for war is to be predisposed to war." If we want peace we must prepare for peace. Military regimentation of a people is not preparation for peace.

America faces the danger that the present international tensions will be used to enact permanent military regimentation under the name of universal military training, universal military service and training, national service training or Selective Service.

A Positive Alternative

1. Repudiate as abhorrent to freedom-loving Americans any form of military regimentation.

2. Through the United Nations attempt to have all nations agree to discontinue all forms of military regimentation.

3. Support the President of the United States in his plea for world-wide universal disarmament with adequate inspection.

4. Support the President in his desire to use atomic energy to bless rather than destroy mankind.

5. Share our abundance with the world's needy.

6. Encourage the peaceful development of freedom in every land.

7. Inform all mankind that in a war with modern weapons of devastation, there is no defense. There will be no victors—only victims.

The Family Counselor

Naomi Will H. K. Zeller, Jr. Jesse Ziegler

The Family Counselor welcomes letters of inquiry. They may be addressed: Family Life Department, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Dear Counselor,

My husband and I have been members of the Church of the Brethren since our early teens. For the past five years we've been nonresident members, living in a town where there isn't a Brethren church.

We've met several people who were Brethren until they came here. One from Pennsylvania is now a member of the Church of Christ. One is superintendent of the junior department in the Southern Baptist Church, which we've attended for the past two years. One said she joined her husband's church and had been happy working with that church.

What would be your advice? We have five children. The twelve and nine-year-olds have been converted and baptized into the Baptist church. The rest of us attend regularly.

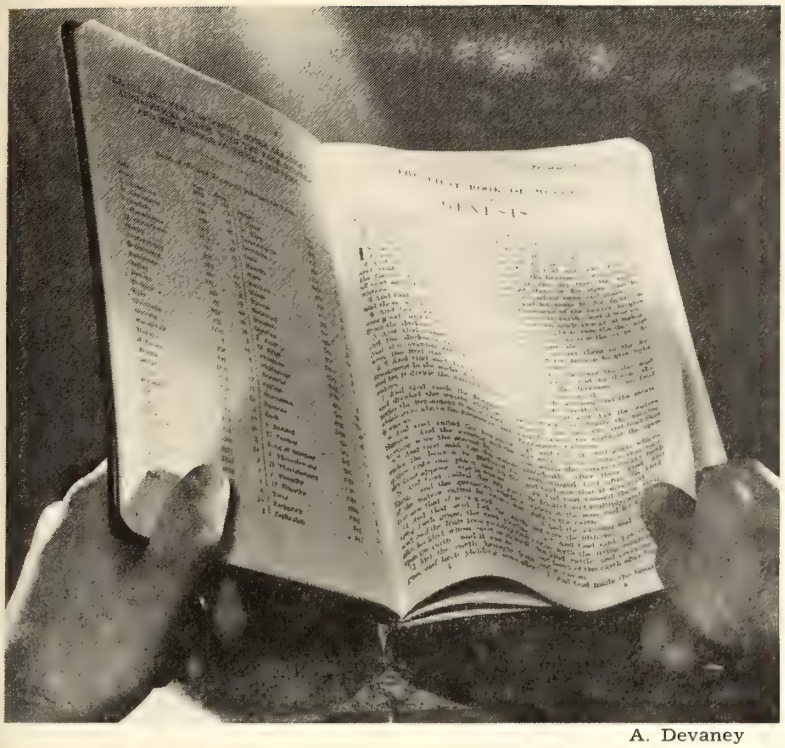
A Reader.

Dear Friend,

The problem of church membership in the situation you describe is a difficult one which is shared by many others as the people of our country have become increasingly addicted to moving. This has been brought about by our going into all kinds of jobs which take us to all parts of the country and the world. In most cases this is not to be lamented but faces us with the problem of church membership. I shall speak in the terms in which I understand the nature of the church and the needs of people.

First, the church of Jesus Christ is one church. I believe we are first Christians, then Brethren. As Christians we possess many things in common with all our brethren in Christ. As Brethren we hold a few things which are distinct from most of our brethren in Christ.

Second, the church is a fellowship of people committed to Christ and having close and intimate contacts with one another. From this standpoint there is almost a contradiction in the idea of "nonresident member." (This is not meant to ignore the reality of the church universal which includes people of all lands and all times.)



Third, people need to be associated with and committed to the program of a group of people with whom they live and have intimate contacts. This is especially true of growing children but almost as true of their parents. A family needs a "church home."

Where this comes out for many committed Christians today is about like this: If they move into a community where they expect to stay for any considerable length of time as residents (a year or more), they would attempt to find a church which is conveniently located for their children and which seems to share as as much as possible of their peculiar understanding of the Christian way, and then move their membership to such church. This should involve attendance, financial support and participation in the work of the congregation of which the family becomes members.

In some communities, if a family expects to stay only a short time or wishes to retain their denominational membership, they may become associate members of the local congregation, retaining their denominational membership. This plan is not without its difficulties but may best meet the needs of some people and of some churches.

This writer must express his own conviction that it will be a happier time for the church of Jesus Christ and all its members when a member of any part of it can go anywhere in this country or the world and be immediately and fully accepted as a member of any local church he may choose to attend. Until such time comes it seems important for us to find warm strong ties to the Christian people nearest the Christian way, as we understand it, in the community in which we live.

"Science Has Proved . . ."

William J. Tinkle

RATHER frequently we hear someone say, that science has proved some idea or other. If the statement voices careful and exact truth, of course it amounts to a great deal, for the standards of scientific research are high ideals. Observations are supposed to be made with exactness and without prejudice by the investigator; following this an estimate or hypothesis is made to account for the observed facts; then the truth of the hypothesis is tested by experiments. Should this process render a verdict against the hypothesis, our searcher after truth is not supposed to let any fondness for his brain child sway his judgment, but should consign it to the graveyard of ideas.

But let us suppose that an experiment or two give results which agree with the estimated explanation. Then the investigator may call his idea a theory instead of an hypothesis, but it is not a scientific principle or law until other scientists make the same tests and record the same results; for personal bias must be ruled out.

While it is necessary for one to have training in order to put the scientific method into practice, any one can see that it is a high standard, so high indeed that it often is not attained. "Science has proved" may introduce a weighty truth or a fond desire. Scientists are only human (as the author knows from his own experience) and like other persons, they do not always attain their ideals. Results may be published too soon, before other scientists have tested them; or it may be that the men who do repeat the work have the same bias as the original worker. It is simply a fact that not all of the claims made in the name of science have passed the criteria mentioned above and very often are not accepted by all scientists.

The Christian should not hasten, therfore, to modify his philosophy in order to agree with claims made in the name of science.

As an example, what would you say if you heard the statement, "Science has proved that man is nothing more than a machine"? One person replied that, if this be true, he still believed in God; because a machine has to be built by a mechanic and God was that mechanic. This rejoinder was much better than giving up belief in God, but it is not necessary to give any credence at all to such a statement. Science has not proved the mechanistic nature of man, for the idea is an outgrowth of the philosophy of some scientists rather than a proved principle. While it helps in teaching human physiology to compare the body with a machine, it would be hard indeed to prove that man never does more than a machine, that he never transcends the limits of responding to changes outside himself. Since man was made in the likeness of God, as the Bible states, he can initiate action of his own; furthermore, he is responsible for his actions.

The idea of the mechanistic nature of man was not established by the method outlined at the beginning of this article but is the result of a mental bias, which accepts data of one sort and rejects all other data. The aspirations, impressions, and experiences which indicate that man is a spiritual being are ruled out by the men who say that he is but a machine.

In this article, however, materialism is used only as an example. My aim is to recommend the habit of being careful in deciding what one must believe. The New Testament gives us this counsel in 1 Thess. 5:21: "Prove all things: hold fast that which is good." The Revised Standard Version tells us to test all things, which is the real meaning of the King James Version.

Because science is popular in our day, it is easy for an unauthorized spokesman to make startling statements in the name of that great benefactor. It must be admitted also that scientists do not all believe alike; some deny the faith which others in the same ranks hold dear. Do not modify your religious philosophy until there is no doubt as to what has been proved.

them. These provided excellent opportunity for making contacts in various comunities. Now the government has taken over most of these schools and will probably soon take and operate all of them.

In some cases recently it has been impossible for purely evangelistic missionaries to secure visas to enter India. While we Brethren have had this happen only once, some mission boards have been denied visas to a number of their applicants. As far as clear policy has evolved, people who want to go to India to help in the educational program or with the health program as doctors or nurses or with agricultural work will be welcome. Increasingly, evangelistic missionaries are unwelcome and the only way they can likely operate is by indirect methods.

The Church of the Brethren is increasingly turning the direction of the native churches in India into the hands of native Christians, of whom there are now many faithful and capable ones. The mission is doing what it can to make the Indian church increasingly self-supporting. Property not needed for the program of missions will be disposed of wherever possible.

While mission work is more difficult it is not impossible. India is clearly in a state of transition. Her long-time policy regarding missions has not yet been clarified. In the meantime our missionaries are attempting to work as effectively as possible. In some cases their status does not seem greatly changed. In others it is much more difficult.

That the program of the modern missionary movement so popular in the church since the days of William Carey has come to a turn in the road calling for some clear thinking and courageous action is evident. That it has come to an end we cannot believe. That it can go forward as before is equally unbelievable.

It seems now that foreign missions will have to do its evangelistic work incidentally while serving people in ways acceptable to them. God forbid, however, that our cowardice, our unbelief or our selfishness should be the cause of retrenchment in our program. Much early missionary work was done against the determined opposition of the people among whom they worked. Like Paul, we should be "all things to all people, that we might save some," but like Paul, also, we should brave opposition and endure hardship to preach the gospel in season and out of season.

Certainly a movement of such historic significance that comes so near to being the central purpose of the Christian church cannot be dismissed as passé because it has come upon grey days. An evangelical church will find a way of continuing her program and will have young people who offer their lives for such service.

"That Old-time Religion"

J. Willard Agee

THE writer of the letter to the Hebrews was in favor of "the old-time religion." Not spasmotic religious fervor like that sometimes known during the spring and fall revivals of a generation ago, but the old-fashioned religion of the Bible.

Biblical "old-time religion" gives people vision as it did Abram, who was sent questing for a city "which has foundations, whose builder and maker is God." It was old-fashioned faith that led Abram out of the comfort and security of his homeland into a land where he was unknown. Lacking this sort of faith we cling to the security of the known and reluctantly leave it for the potential dangers of the unknown. With the old-fashioned faith of the Scriptures, however, the modern Christian can journey into the unknown with conviction that it holds rewards and victory, as well as potential loss and defeat. I am in favor of religion which gives people vision of a "city who's builder and maker is God," and sends them out questing it.

Biblical "old-time religion" causes people to venture into the unknown realm of identification with people. Moses "refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, choosing rather to share ill-treatment with the people of God than to enjoy the fleeting pleasures of sin." Religion which causes people to venture in the area of social justice is needed in every generation. People who will run the risk of losing prestige, security and the blessing of contemporary society in order to lift the socially rejected are always needed. I am in favor of religion which causes people to stand by the needy regardless of color of skin, slant of eyes or job security.

Biblical "old-time religion" guarantees victory. The host of people whom the writer of Hebrews discusses have gained victory through their faith. Now they surround us like a great host of witnesses. The achieved watch the achieving. The successful coach the succeeding. The victorious encourage the competing.

Central in the crowd of witnesses is Jesus Christ, who pioneered and perfected our faith. He visualized a "Father's house with many rooms," where he could go and prepare a place for his friends. He had a vision of the "kingdom of God." This vision of life prompted him to make the supreme venture in human relationships. It caused him who was equal with God to consider Godlikeness, not something to be grasped and gloried in, but something to share. Accordingly, he surrendered his divine glory and took on the form of man.

The highest virtue of man is not being a comfortable citizen but is the sharing of life with life. Therefore, Jesus identified himself with mankind, including the laboring and serving people. He ventured in human relations and taught, "He who is greatest among you, let him be your servant," and demonstrated this principle by bathing his disciples' feet. He who was equal with God was crucified with theives.

Ultimately he gained the victory. The writer of the eleventh chapter of Hebrews includes him in the catalog of those who had "the old-time religion." He is included as "the pioneer and perfecter of our faith" so that we might run patiently our race. Because of his vision, venture and victory we can run with confidence. I'm in favor of religion like his. Lord, "give me that old-time religion!"

Reviews of Recent Books

Books are reviewed here as a service to the church. A review does not necessarily constitute an unqualified recommendation. Purchase can be made through the Brethren Publishing House, Elgin, Illinois. Titles recommended for church libraries are marked with an asterisk (*).—Editor.

Youth Looking to Jesus. Margaret Hoyt, Eleanor Hoyt Dabney. John Knox, 1954. 186 pages. $2.75.

This book offers worship services for youth that become alive. Each service is well organized with outstanding meditations and poetry. These services have been shared with youth in Idaho, Texas, Oklahoma, Iowa, Missouri, and Kansas, where they were received with much interest. Every CBYF would do well to invest in this book.—Glenn S. Swinger, McPherson, Kansas.

Introduction to Theology. John Christian Wenger. Herald Press, 1954. 418 pages. $4.00.

Finding no systematic theology presenting the Anabaptist point of view, the Mennonite Publication Board requested Professor Wenger of Goshen College to write one. This volume is just that, a Mennonite theology. The author, being a staunch conservative, stands firmly on Mennonite teachings such as nonconformity (he himself wears the plain garb), nonresistance, "strict standards of church discipline," and "the literal observance of every New Testament commandment."

To comprehend Dr. Wenger's views of the Bible as "the infallible Word of God," "the very Word of God," one must understand these terms in a literalistic and verbalistic sense. Accordingly he takes his stand much nearer to the Fundamentalists than to the Barthians and neo-orthodox. On the one hand he calls the latter "semi-modernists" and on the other he criticizes the Fundamentalists for "narrowness of spirit" and for manifesting "a rather dull conscience on social issues."

For those who desire a simple, staunchly conservative, exposition of theology from the Old Mennonite point of view this is the book. As such it merits the title, "the first Mennonite systematic theology."—David J. Wieand, Lombard, Ill.

The Funeral and the Mourners. Paul E. Irion. Abingdon 1954. 186 pages. $2.75.

Here is one of those books pastors have been looking for. It is not a manual; rather, it is a treatise to help in service of the pastor and church to the bereaved. Before one can really be of service and before the church can perform its intended help, the bereaved must be understood. Mr. Irion has very basically organized his book, beginning with where man is in one of the greatest crisis in life and presenting from several sources insights which are gleaned from the studies made. Working through the emotional and psychological understandings as they are discovered, Mr. Irion offers a helpful section on reasons and causes for and effects upon persons suffering from extreme bereavement.

Having offered an understanding basis for helping the bereaved, the author proceeds with the function and purpose of the funeral, offering theological, cultural and psychological helps. The criteria for judging the helpfulness of the funeral as applied to the choice of music (instrumental and vocal), the sermon, the committal, poetry and the whole relationship of the bereaved to the church is presented in a concise and helpful manner.

The chapter on funeral practices in the giving of flowers, the choice of the casket and vault, etc., will prove most helpful to young and old ministers alike. The exploitation of the bereaved by floral and casket companies has aroused the author to study the needs at this point.

Many pastors have asked about the calls at the time of, before and after the funeral. Mr. Irion offers some very helpful ideas in a clear-cut and concise way.

This book is less than 200 pages long, is inexpensive and is most pleasingly written. Most pastors will benefit greatly from it. As the author states in the Preface, the purpose of the book is "an attempt to show the way for the improvement of the means by which the funeral meets human needs, without in any sense detracting from the objective validity of the worship of God." — Milton C. Early, Morrill, Kansas.

Teach Me to Spell. Mary K. Winters. Hart. 1954. 160 pages. $2.00.

Whether the boy or girl who uses this book likes spelling or not, he is sure to enjoy the games based on words that rhyme, and he will be learning many basic, common words.—Hazel Kennedy.

KINGDOM GLEANINGS

Brethren youth caravan teams of two consecrated youth each will be available this summer for churches desiring their services. They will be given a period of intensive training, then will spend eight weeks in youth evangelism, home visitation, vacation church school work, etc. The department of evangelism is in charge of training and placement. Applications from churches for their services must be in to the department by April 15.

B. D. Hirt of Monticello, Ind., became pastor of the Pyrmont church, Ind., on Jan. 1. Bro. Hirt's address will remain the same.

United Church Women of the National Council of Churches has moved its office to the Flatiron Building, 175 Fifth Ave., New York 10, N. Y.

Brotherhood Fund contributions were $346,203 to Jan. 31. This represents an increase of $22,676 (7%) over last fiscal year's receipts to Jan. 31.

Franklin Wallick, who has been connected with the CIO in the Midwest area, is now a research director in the Washington office of Congressman Henry Reuss. Mrs. Wallick is the congressman's secretary.

Men's work of Northeastern Ohio has a standing commitment to serve any church of the district. The organization will fill a pulpit vacancy at any time or conduct a special service either on Sunday evening or a weekday night.

During February the churches of Southern Ohio are centering attention on all aspects of the Brotherhood Fund program. By action taken in district conference, the membership assumed the total cost of Brotherhood work for the entire month of February, the sum of $108,333.33.

Mr. and Mrs. Roland Sanger of Cordova, Md., are asking for prayers for their son who was seriously injured in a motorcycle accident in January. Because of the number of compound fractures of the right leg he may not have the use of it; he will have to spend months in the hospital. If any would care to send Alvin a message his address is Memorial Hospital, Room 27, Easton, Md.

The members of the December Brethren Volunteer Service unit were assigned to projects during the first week of February, having completed their two months of training at the New Windsor center. Six were assigned to Europe, ten will remain at New Windsor to assist in the center activities, and the remainder will serve in home mission, Brethren Service and other approved projects throughout the United States. Nineteen of the men in this unit of thirty-six are beginning their term of alternative service.

The second five-year reunion of the "horse wranglers" who sailed on the Morgantown Victory to Poland in December 1945 will be held Sept. 3-5, at Tipp City, Ohio, at the residence of Emmert Studebaker. Please contact Bro. Studebaker.

The National Temperance and Prohibition Council, a federation of nearly fifty denominational and regional temperance groups, formally requested the State Department to stop serving alcoholic beverages at social functions in countries where there are strong religious scruples against liquor. They had in mind particularly India, the Arab countries and other lands with a large Mohammedan population which frowns upon strong drink.

Dr. Eugene Carson Blake, new president of the National Council of Churches, who recently returned from a 22,000-mile tour of American military and naval bases, warned that "the typical American religious tradition and the free church in a free society" may fade from importance unless there is "a revitalization of our Protestant heritage." He said also "the National Council is not an organization to increase Christian unity, but rather to express the true unity that now exists."

S. M. Dell, dean of men at McPherson College, will begin his sabbatical leave by tending a shipment of heifers to Western Germany. Scheduled to leave the States on March 29, Bro. Dell will represent the contributors of the cattle at the distribution ceremony. After he has completed his duties with the heifer shipment, he plans to spend most of his time with the various Brethren Service units, assisting in the industrial arts area. Mrs. Dell will join her husband in Europe in May.

Bridgewater College

The "kick-off" dinner, for the new $350,000 health and physical education building staged at the college on Jan. 19 with alumnus pole-vaulting star, Bob Richards, as speaker, was considered a significant success. Some $75,000 in gifts was announced on that date. Faculty and students had pledged one-third of this amount. Dr. Galen G. Craun, prominent physician and active layman of Harrisonburg, is chairman of the campaign. This campaign will be a feature of the seventy-fifth anniversary observance.

An address by Bro. Harold Row of the Brethren Service Commission on Feb. 8 officially opened the fifty-ninth spiritual life institute which convened Feb. 8-10 at the college. Various regional commissions and committees, including the regional board with Bro. Guy M. Wampler, chairman, were in session for two days preceding the institute.

Coinciding with the seventy-fifth anniversary year, the Virginia State Library co-operated with the college by approving an official Virginia historical marker for the college. This has been erected on U. S. highway 11 in the corporate limits of Mt. Crawford, where state highway 257 leads to Bridgewater, three miles southwest.

Dean William Beahm of Bethany Biblical Seminary visited the campus on Feb. 11, spoke in chapel and conferred with preseminary students and others going into full-time church service.

The Barter Theatre of Virginia presented Macbeth on Jan. 18 to a capacity audience in Cole Hall.

The glee club under the direction of Nelson T. Huffman will present Iolanthe, Gilbert and Sullivan operetta, Feb. 25 and 26, in Cole Hall.

A special Founders Day diamond jubilee celebration at the college is scheduled for March 26-27 on the theme, The Truth Shall Make You Free. Speakers include Samuel M. Brownell, U. S. Commissioner of Education; Henry H. Hill, president of Peabody College, Nashville; Theodore A. Distler, secretary, American Association of Colleges; Calvert N. Ellis, president of Juniata College; Vernon F. Schwalm, president of Manchester College; and Warren D. Bowman, president of Bridgewater. Also, a public forum of prominent Bridgewater alumni will convene on the afternoon of March 26 to discuss Bridgewater Looks to the Future. Appearing will be Dr. A. C. Flora of Columbia, S. C., former president of the National Education Association; Dr. Raymond R. Peters, executive secretary of the Council of Churches of Greater Dayton, Ohio; Dr. Walter S. Flory, president-elect of the Virginia Academy of Science; Dr. Ruth Cline, professor of English at Eastern Illinois State Teachers College; and President Wm. T. Sanger of the Medical College of Virginia. The widest possible audience is solicited for this anniversary event.

Carl Holty, fine arts lecturer, will make a series of appearances on the campus March 7-8 as a lyceum feature under the auspices of the Association of American Colleges.

Ann Haynes, a sophomore student from Bassett, represented the college Student Christian Movement at the fifth quadrennial National Student Assembly of the Y.W.C.A. and Y.M.C.A., which was held at the University of Kansas Dec. 27—Jan. 2.

Recent student elections resulted in the selection of Helen Wild of Wyoming, Del., and Jack Heintzleman of Arlington, to be editor and business manager, respectively, of the B. C. Bee, student newspaper, for 1955. At the same time, Benny Gunter of Bassett, and Harold Lehman of Johnstown, Pa., were chosen editor and business manager, respectively, of Ripples, college yearbook.

Many Germans Fearful of Militarization

Henry Holm

AS GERMAN REARMAMENT apparently nears, there are numerous signs of alarm lest the country once more be led into the path of militarism. A movement is gathering strength to press for the Swiss system, rather than anything like the old German system and deep concern is even being manifested about the nature of the uniforms to be worn by German soldiers. The most outright opposition, however, comes from youth.

Although relatively few young Germans are affiliated with any peace or pacifist group, at least a considerable section of the younger generation is utterly opposed to any kind of military service. Several youth associations have openly indicated their intention to resist conscription. One of these is the Naturfreunde (Friends of Nature). Another is the Falken (Falcons), young people connected with the Social Democratic Party. Even the Congress of the Trade Unions' youth, with some 5,000,000 members, has adopted a resolution to this effect, which found its way into the headlines.

Whenever the government has tried to probe into the real attitude of youth, it has found that enthusiasm for becoming soldiers is low. On one occasion, a government official from the so-called Blank Ministry, that is, the organization which will become the Ministry of Defense, went to Dortmund, together with the well-known pacifist, Dr. F. Siegmund-Schultze, to debate the question before some 400 young people. To the official's surprise, twenty out of twenty-two youth speakers opposed rearmament and a resolution against it was supported by ninety per cent of those present.

Last Nov. 3, as on every Wednesday, there was an open discussion at the Cologne station, this time on the question: "Do the twenty-year-olds want to become soldiers?" The hall was packed with young students and workers, and the two members of the Defense Ministry had no easy time. Excitement ran high; the general clamor was, "We need no uniforms!" When Count Baudissin pointed out that the Soviets would consider conscientious objection a sign of weakness in the West, one boy retorted: "That is what Goebbels used to say!" Those present were not to any extent members of pacifist organizations, but were fairly representative of the generation of twenty, that will some day be called to the colors.

This correspondent once heard a German Jew say that under Hitler the persecution of pacifists was worse than that of the Jews. In any case, once the Hitler nightmare was over, pacifism came back strongly into public life. In the first period after the surrender, to be a pacifist was the best recommendation a man in Germany could have. Disappointment over what total war had done to the country was general. It was only when a certain measure of comfort had been re-established that a reduction of pacifism occurred. Under the pressure for rearmament, originating in the United States and pushed by the Adenauer government, pacifists began once more to feel uneasy and if not persecuted, at least suspect. Peace societies are not powerful.

The world outside Germany must face up to one thing that many a German never forgets. Germany is divided into two halves, belonging to two different power blocs. There are few families that do not have some of their relatives on the other side. To prepare for even a theoretical war means for nearly all Germans to prepare for fighting their cousins. Would the inhabitants of New York be entirely happy to carry arms for possible use against the people of Boston or Pittsburgh? (WP)

Heifer Project Sets 1955 Program

Heifer Project has set itself the task of shipping 1,200 cattle, 500 goats, 400 pigs, 100,000 chicks and 400 packages of honey bees to war-devastated or agriculturally underdeveloped overseas areas in 1955. The goals were established by the project's board of directors at its annual meeting at New Windsor. The board recommended that most of the livestock and poultry be sent to Austria, Germany, Greece, the Middle East, Turkey, Central America and the Caribbean countries. At the annual meeting, a new executive committee was elected. It consists of Carl Klein of St. Louis, Mo., Dan West of Goshen, Ind., Corl Leach of Columbia, Mo., Virgil Deeter of Greenville, Ohio, and J. N. Byler of Akron, Pa.

Study Communist Influence in Religion

A Methodist minister and a history instructor at Columbia University are engaged in research on "an objective historical investigation of the penetration of Communist influence in American religion." The study being carried on by Ralph Roy and Dr. Paul A. Carter is one of ten covering Communist infiltration in as many aspects of American life. It is being financed by a grant from the Fund for the Republic. The results of the study by Mr. Roy and Dr. Carter will be published in book form at a later time.

Antireligious Broadcasts Shock British

Newspapers in London were practically unanimous in condemning the British Broadcasting Corporation for airing a series of weekly talks on Morals Without Religion. The talks were given by Mrs. Margaret Knight, part-time psychology lecturer and wife of a professor of psychology at Aberdeen. Stressing her own disbelief in God, Mrs. Knight argued that the New Testament should be presented to children not as a series of factual reports, but as legends like Greek myths. She said she spoke as a scientific humanist.

Quakers Extend Program of Conferences for Diplomats

A Quaker-sponsored program of conferences for young diplomats will be extended to Asia this year. The conferences are aimed at providing "an atmosphere in which diplomats can share problems frankly as individuals rather than national representatives." Conferences have already been held in Geneva, Switzerland, that have drawn participants from thirty-two countries.

Exiled Theologians Revise Bible in Latvian

A group of exiled Lutheran theologians is preparing a revised edition of the Bible in Latvian, which the British and Foreign Bible Society has agreed to publish. There are some 150,000 Latvian-speaking people, including 100,000 postwar refugees from communism, known to be living outside of Latvia. The new Bible edition will be primarily for these people since there is little hope that it can reach Latvians in their homeland.

Seeks to Have "In God We Trust" on Currency

A bill to require that the motto, "In God We Trust," be imprinted on all United States currency was introduced in the House by Rep. Bennett of Florida. The motto has appeared on most U. S. coins since 1864 and last year was placed on the three-cent and eight-cent postage stamps of the new regular issue. It has never been imprinted on the nation's paper currency, however.

Protestant Leaders Get Unity Plan

A detailed blueprint for unification of American Protestant churches has been submitted to denominational leaders for their consideration. The plans were worked out by the Joint Conference on Church Union, an interdenominational group formed in 1949. The conference has produced several draft plans since its formation, but the newest is the most complete. The plan is not to be submitted formally to denominations or made available to the public until it has been thoroughly studied by church leaders.

World Council Outlines Minimum Relief Needs

A minimum of 1,702 tons of food, 5,152 tons of clothing and extra quantities of medicines will be needed this year for distribution to needy persons in various parts of Europe, according to an estimate by the World Council of Churches. These materials are needed not only for refugees who continue to arrive from behind the Iron Curtain, but also to support the welfare work of European church groups.

Christians of Israel Celebrate Christmas at Holy Places

More than 3,000 Christian citizens of Israel celebrated Christmas at the holy places in the Old City of Jerusalem and in Bethlehem, according to an agreement arrived at with the Jordan authorities. On Christmas Eve, Dr. Carl Lund-Quist, executive secretary of the Lutheran World Federation, preached the sermon in the traditional service of worship held in the open field near Bethlehem.

Methodist Women Oppose UMT

Opposition to universal military training in any form was reaffirmed by the Methodist Woman's Division of Christian Service at its annual meeting in Cincinnati. The women said, "UMT by any other name is still UMT. There are grave questions in the minds of many Americans when they face a plan which would bring virtually every seventeen-year-old male under the control of the military for six to ten of his most formative years."

Norfolk Has First Unsegregated Preaching Missions

Twenty nationally known speakers participated in the first Norfolk, Virginia, united preaching mission to be held on a nonsegregated basis. The Norfolk Ministerial Association, which threw its own membership open to all Negro clergymen of the area last April, canceled the 1953 and 1954 preaching missions when it was unable to obtain the City Arena for the meetings without signing a "segregation clause." Two of the speakers who participated in this year's mission were Negroes—Dr. Gardner C. Taylor of Brooklyn, N. Y., and Dr. Howard Thurman of Boston University.

Lutherans Protest Negative Publicity on Youth

Leaders of Lutheran youth have protested against "the present negative publicity concerning American youth." The leaders council said "that our youth on whom our future rests under God should be judged by the worst element among them seems a blunder of a segment of irresponsible journalism. We commend and encourage those magazines and newspapers which endeavor to emphasize the positive elements among American youth. We further assert that the problem is not juvenile delinquency but youth redemption, as well as the redemption of us all, under the Lordship of Christ."

Texas Council Decries Evasion of Supreme Court Decision

The Texas Council of Churches in a message to the churches of the state has spoken out against attempted evasion of the U. S. Supreme Court's decision outlawing segregation in public schools. According to the Texas Church Council, the Supreme Court decision challenges Americans with a new interpretation and pattern of brotherhood. Church leaders said, "We recognize the role of the church to apply Christian foresight, patience and forebearing understanding as these new adjustments are made. It is hoped that the churches will also use their best methods and channels through which this understanding can be brought about."

Church World Service

This Kalmuk mother and children were resettled several years ago by the Brethren Service Commission. Do we continue to share with all displaced persons we have resettled?

AMERICA needs to share with the needy in her own borders. It is easy for us who are well-fed, housed and clothed to forget that in this land of opportunity there are many who are in need.

The American Indian, for example, is a victim of war. Wars that were fought 50, 100, 150 years ago. His lands and sources of livelihood were taken away from him generally without any compensation. He was placed on reservations, usually the poorest land on the continent. He has been deprived of the rights which most people in our country enjoy. Few victims of war have suffered more than the American Indian, and he still continues to suffer.

Indian reservation land is generally arid and unproductive. On one Indian reservation the rainfall was one tenth of one inch for a full year. In attempting to eke out an existence, the Indian has overgrazed the reservations and they are eroding. Hunger is very common with the American Indian.

Only a portion of the Indian children of school age who want to go to school have one to go to. It is difficult to get teachers—qualified teachers to work in the Indian schools; so there are few teachers. The boarding schools are overflowing and many Indian children are turned away. Roads are poor and distances are great. Many children deprived of school remain in their homes.

Medical care is distant and hard to obtain for most of our Indians. Disease is common and death rates are high. With inadequate food, it is difficult to resist disease and to recover from illness. America needs to share with the American Indian.

America needs to share with the agricultural migrant. There are one and one-half million of these agricultural migrants that do not have a place they can call home. They move from place to place, working in the harvests. They produce our lettuce, celery, radishes, corn, beans and tomatoes. Thus we have our fresh salads and vegetables the year around. But they are without home ties, educational or spiritual foundations.

Some of the children have as many as nine different schools in the course of a single year. They are generally retarded in their grades because of the frequent moving. Because of their speech, their habits and their economic status it is difficult or impossible for the children to build friendshisp in the schools they attend. Before long they move on without having achieved a feeling of commmunity which is so important in our educational process.

They are generally not welcomed or wanted in the churches of the community where they work. Without friends, without faith, without foundation they move from place to place. They need our help as we need theirs.

A foreigner in our midst needs our help. Thousands of Chinese women have arrived in America since World War II. They are the brides of the Chinese men who served in the armed forces. They have come to this strange land, not knowing our language, our customs, our habits, our viewpoints. Many of them are farther away from the knowledge and concerns of the American people than they were when they lived in China.

The same is true of many refugees and displaced persons that we have brought in from various parts of our world. To locate them in the land of opportunity is not enough. We need to share with them our backgrounds, our understanding, our friendships and our hopes.

America needs to share with the victims of discrimination. Sixteen million people of darker skin who live in our own land do not have the advantages that you and I have, because of the color of their skin. Their work is more difficult; their wage is less. The schools are poorer; job opportunities fewer. The doors to many vocations are closed and hospitals are not available to many who are sick. Even our churches do not extend fellowship to those who follow our Lord, if their skins be dark. They have enriched our country and helped to make it great, but they also need our help to become free and equal.

With all of these groups Brethren Service is working.

At Home and Abroad

AUSTRIA

Re-evaluation of Brethren Service material aid work and policy for the coming year was made by the Linz staff. More emphasis will be made on definite programs—such as the food package and kindergarten projects—and less on mass distribution.

At Ried, Pfarrer Herwig Karzel showed Don Durnbaugh, director of Brethren Service in Austria, the nearly completed Protestant youth home and parish house begun by a Brethren Service work camp in 1953. Recently dedicated, the structure is sponsoring a domestic science boarding school for refugee girls unable to find positions or apprenticeships. Three Brethren Service sewing machines are in use there.

Elisabeth Fuss, Johnny Mischitz, John Hershey and Don Durnbaugh attended the Christmas party at Thalham tubercular sanitorium. Individual gifts of toilet articles, washclothes, towels and soap were given to all patients. The nurses and staff were also surprised with similar gifts. This institution, which has grown from a very small hospital, is recognized today throughout Austria. Material aid has been supplied by Brethren Service for a number of years.

GERMANY

A sewing machine was sent recently to the Neuenkirchen hospital near Bremen, where Peggy Sargent, now joined by Ruth Snider, works. The two girls will use the machine to make clothing for the children and to do patching, darning, etc.

The mobile craft unit that was sent by Brethren Service to the Sanbostel refugee camp enabled the boys to make gifts for parents and friends in the East Zone. For many boys it was their only opportunity to make a gift for their loved ones. This project gives an excellent background for the type of indirect counseling which is so vital.

Refugee Resettlement Notes

100th Assurance Filed

"At our council meeting last night we decided to sponsor a refugee family from Europe. Our men's work will go ahead with plans, calling upon the different groups in the church to help. The decision to take the family into our fellowship went over unamimously and with enthusiasm. We are very happy about it. Please send us a dossier [case history] on a farm family."

This letter was received from the Summit church, Bridgewater, Va. It so happened that the Josef Habenschuss family, the farm family referred to the Summit church group, have some relatives who also want to emigrate—Mrs. Habenschuss' parents and her brother and family. Before the Summit folks were finished, they had filed assurances for three families instead of one.

The assurance from the Summit church group for Josef Habenschuss and family was the one-hundredth Brethren assurance filed. The first milestone has been passed in reaching the goal of helping 1,000 refugee families find homes in America, and more church congregations ought to have the joy of filing an assurance and helping a refugee family.

TOOLS FOR TEMPERANCE

James Renz
Temperance Secretary

TONS and tons of new materials reach the market every year in temperance education and action as in other areas of work. Much of the literature is of worth to our program. Some of it would have little usefulness with our church groups.

We evaluate the literature as it comes out and recommend for use those materials which will advance temperance work in the Church of the Brethren. We have kept in mind several principles in the choice of items for use in our program: first, we feel each piece of literature must be scientifically correct; second, it must be educationally sound; third, principles and belief should be advanced through its use; fourth, it should be usable by or adaptable to the churches in our denomination.

Therefore, we present the following listing of new materials that have been added in the past year or so. There are many other materials which are also available. We constantly eliminate those items which become outdated or have served their usefulness. Order all materials from the General Brotherhood Board, Attention: Temperance Department, Christian Education Commission, 22 S. State St.,Elgin, Ill.

GENERAL MATERIALS

Temperance Director's Manual, 50c. This manual has been sent to all district and local temperance directors. It contains program suggestions, guidance materials, a suggested calendar and resources for planning and integrating the temperance program into the local church program.

Youth Temperance Packet, $1. Included in this packet are the best items for assisting the junior high and/or the youth fellowship to study such problems as cheating, gambling, smoking, commercial entertainment, alcoholic beverages, etc. Each youth fellowship ought to have this as resource material.

A Doctor Speaks on Alcohol, by Dr. Charles Weaver, 35c. A Brethren medical doctor speaks out of a background of scientific study and personal experience from dealing with cases affected by alcohol. This is a fine piece of resource material for individual and group consumption.

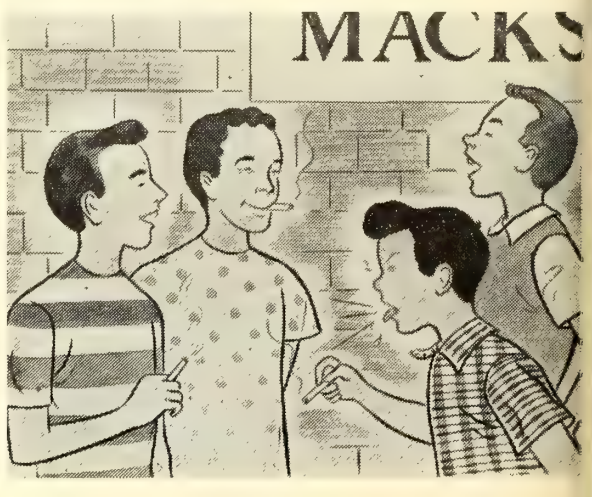
Men of Distinction, Free. This is a concise statement of the church's responsibility and program. Its special value is in its use with planning committees and temperance directors and in mailings to church families or for distribution in your community.

Parties With Punch, 50c. Based on the idea that parties can be fun without alcoholic drinks, the Methodist Board of Temperance has produced this booklet which contains party suggestions and recipes for punch or fruit drinks.

Books

I'll Cry Tomorrow, by Lillian Roth, $3.95. Lillian Roth, whose life has been done on the television program, This Is Your Life, three times, captivates the reader with her life story. From a movie star who made millions to an alcoholic skid row existence and return by way of faith in God and Alcoholics Anonymous is the story embodied in this book. This book is recommended for the church library and especially for youth and young adults.

Smoking and Cancer, by Dr. Alton Ochsner, $2. The author, one of the most eminent cancer specialists in the world, uses the evidence of science plus reports of investigations to evaluate smoking and its relationship to cancer. This is required reading for anyone desiring to know the best and latest on this problem.



Twelve Steps and Twelve Traditions, by Alcoholics Anonymous, $2.75. This is a fine study guide for the individual Christian or for a group on the spiritual foundations and principles of Alcoholics Anonymous. Read it and you will know more about the spiritual force of an organization doing excellent work.

How to Help an Alcoholic, by Clifford Earle, $1.50. Written for minister and layman, this excellent work contains many practical suggestions for any person who attempts to deal with an alcoholic. Another excellent resource for the church library.

STUDY UNITS

Decisions We Make, by William and Lena Willoughby, 15c. A college professor and his wife have prepared this four-meeting unit for junior high and youth fellowships. Topics include cheating, smoking, drinking, gambling and commercial entertainment.

Alcohol and Christian Responsibility, by Clifford Earle, 65c. This is a recommended study unit for adults. Subjects include: Alcohol and People, The Truth About Ethyl, Helping Alcoholics, Social Conse-

Experiences With Color

D. Eugene Lichty
Mountain Grove, Missouri

IT ALL began for us on a Sunday late last May. We were returning from our first preaching point of the morning enroute to the second. As we passed the city park, we noticed a curious van labeled The Cotton Blossom Singers of the Piney Woods School in Mississippi. We knew they were scheduled to sing in another church in town that night and had made plans for our people to attend. We assumed that they had another appointment for the morning service.

We went to the cab of the van and introduced ourselves. Finding a warm welcome we asked if they would care to come out to our church on the edge of Mountain Grove to present a short program. Even though the girls were resting Miss Crofton, the sponsor, was happy for the invitation.

Twenty minutes later, six Negro students from Piney Woods were in our church ready to share their voices in an unexpected program. They won the hearts of our people, not only through the spirituals which constituted the bulk of the program, but also with Brethren hymns that they sang equally as well. With this sample of music ability, our people were determined to attend the full program that night.

The real contribution of this delegation came after their singing, for following the benediction they mingled freely with the congregation. Children were shaking the hands of their colored brethren for the first time, but with the enthusiasm of old friends. Babies found themselves in the arms of southern hospitality while mothers looked on in surprise because the babies seemed so color blind! In a few minutes these fine Christian girls and their sponsor had done more to remove the color line than the minister could have accomplished in many sermons.

The next question arose, Where will they eat dinner? None of our folks had ever entertained a Negro at the dinner table. Would we have to send them to a cafe? Would any restaurant in a town which prides itself on having no resident Negroes serves them? (This was before we discovered their own cooking facilities in the van.) Could the minister and his wife feed them all? We were determined to do so if necessary, but our worries were useless because our people came across as they usually do. Three families invited them into their homes. Not only were they guests at the family tables, but the hosts also took the girls for rides to see the Ozark countryside. Truly it was an experience in interracial fellowship.

That night three churches dismissed services and filled the largest church in town to hear the girls in a full-hour-and-fifteen-minute program. The Brethren turned out en masse. Afterwards, since the host church invited them only for the program, the singers returned to the hospitality of the Brethren. In the parsonage they sang informally between refreshments. As night fell we felt as though it was the end of "a perfect day."

From here they continued their tour which was to take them as far as Los Angeles and into many Brethren communities. We parted with an invitation for them to drop in whenever they might be passing through.

Little did we think that this standing invitation would be accepted in a few months. In early September a representative of the Piney Woods School informed us that the singers were on their way home with one open date—the last one of their four months' tour. Would we like to have them again? The following Sunday we received the consent of the Greenwood church.

Early plans were made, so that on the evening of the program people gathered at the supper hour with baskets well-filled to entertain their guests. The girls, their sponsor and Mr. Ford, their faithful driver, mingled freely with their hosts. Our people are still talking about their delightful conversations with these colored friends. It was concrete evidence that all of us are God's children.

We have related these experiences with color for several reasons. One is out of gratitude for the good work of Dr. Jones and the Piney Wood Country Life School. We know that many Brethren churches might extend an invitation to them by writing to Dr. Jones at Piney Woods, Miss. It will help them, but it will help your church even more in overcoming prejudice.

Another reason is that we want to commend our people for opening their doors to a minority race. The Piney Woods school is a nonsectarian school for underprivileged Negro children. Even so they have learned that they can usually find hospitality among the Brethren. The sponsor following our meeting on that May Sunday later confided, "I was never so glad to see a Brethren minister. I was afraid it was someone about to tell us to 'move on'." It is still not easy for a Negro delegation to travel across these United States despite a favorable Supreme Court decision. But Brethren have and can set examples of what it means to be "given to hospitality."

PLAY

The Eternal Hills, by Elliott Fields, 40c. Set in a college atmosphere, this play raises the question of relationship of the church in the community to those engaged in drinking and gambling, to those who foster such practices, and closes by giving a good answer to the question. Excellent for production by youth groups.

FILM

Bill's Decision. Although less than a year old, this Brethren-produced 35 mm sound filmstrip has had a fine reception. Although produced primarily for junior age children, it also has application for all other ages. It is recommended as a discussion film; therefore, it has discussion guides with it. Each church ought to own a copy of it to make it available throughout the year. Records available in 33 1/3 and 78 rpm. Cost is $12.59 per copy. Rental is $3 per showing.

Choose the materials that will serve the needs of your church. Place some of the best resource materials in your church library. Provide classes and fellowship groups with guidance for planning and program of action.

Agricultural Extension

Rolland Flory

THE extension phase of our mission agricultural program is the most important. It is good for the mission farm to have purebred livestock and to practice improved methods of farming, but the aim of our entire program is to help the Indian farmer own his own good stock and produce the best crops possible on his own land. Slowly the farmers are gaining confidence and the prospects for extension work seems to be improving.

One of the services that the Indians are accepting is the vaccination of chickens against cholera and typhoid. There has been a very serious loss of chickens in this whole section of Ecuador and, therefore, the people are eager to have their chickens vaccinated.

Our Indian neighbors like potatoes and each year they plant a small plot of potatoes even though sometimes at harvest they receive little more than the seed sown. Through the help of government representatives in the Point 4 program, we held a demonstration in our community on the spraying of potatoes to protect them against blight. Realizing the destructiveness of blight, quite a few of our neighbors have asked that their potatoes be sprayed by the missionary. If this year's spraying brings good results we will have a much bigger demand for this service next year.

This year the government is also helping in our 4F Club (an organization like the 4H Club in the United States). We have nineteen boys enrolled in the club and a Point 4 representative has promised to help secure imported baby chicks soon in order to begin a chicken project for each boy. The 4F Club is one of the surest hopes for extension work in the future here in Ecuador. We appreciate the help of the Point 4 program and in turn the Point 4 representatives are happy to co-operate with us in promoting one of the best clubs in the entire country.

Toward the Free Ministry

Benton Rhoades

THE Ecuadorian Church of the Brethren is now beginning its third year of life. The development of national lay leaders seems to us now the task calling for priority. A year of pastoral support and accompanying problems have led us to the belief that the free ministry as practiced by the Brethren in earlier years is the system for the rural church in Ecuador at present and possibly for some years to come.

In the first place, there seems to be some danger of people transferring to the professional pastor some of the role formerly filled by the Catholic priest in their lives, thus by-passig the important Protestant Christian concept of the priesthood of every believer. This priestly role in the Ecuadorian community, as we have learned by painful experience, also carries with it great temptations for the national pastor himself as regards his own personal morals. In addition, the financial support of the pastoral program is a very heavy burden on a church where the family income of the members seldom passes $20 per month and where the church is made up of relatively few families. All in all, at this juncture, it seems wise to depend on a free ministry within the national church now.

In accordance with this conviction, a training class for lay preachers was organized two months ago with all the literate Indian men of the church as the students. Those of you who have attended seminary or who have taught just try to imagine a class in homiletics for those whose average educational career has not been beyond the third grade. That is the job being attempted in classes two nights a week. If it were not for the record of the great unlettered men of God in the New Testament, one might despair of the task. But already there is evidence that through those who follow the plow and lay bricks all day there may come a message from God.

With the Shivelys in India

Dr. and Mrs. L. S. Shively are on a round-the-world trip. Among the many places they are visiting is India, where they are taking considerable time to visit among the Brethren. The following excerpts from their diary tell of their experiences there.

Saturday, Nov. 20

Tonight, for the first time, we had the thrill of setting foot on the soil of India after a three-hour flight from Rangoon, Burma. As we drove to the hotel from the Calcutta airport we saw many people sleeping on the sidewalks and in little parks. Cows were wandering about on the streets; oxcarts were hauling their loads; and men were going down the street with their rickshas. (The Shivelys flew from Calcutta to Bombay and the territory of our India mission.)

Thursday, Nov. 25

After breakfast, Leonard and Betty Blickenstaff took us to the various buildings on the mission compound here at Dahanu Road. We saw homes of some of the people, the dispensary, the hospital and its equipment. The mission has a good deep well with electric pump, so we are sure the water is safe for use.

Saturday, Nov. 27

This morning at the Dahanu church was held the annual Thanksgiving service. In addition to a money offering, some brought other gifts—large cucumbers, rice, handmade goods, etc. These were auctioned after the service. In the evening there was a service preparatory to the love feast tomorrow. It was also the close of the home and family series which has been going for a week. Edna (Mrs. Shively) and I both spoke through interpreters.

Saturday, Dec. 4

We left Dahanu Road on a train which went at 10:30 and arrived at Anklesvar at 2:45 (a distance of about 200 miles). On the way we went through Bulsar. Of course, we had to think of the Wilbur Stovers, who began our mission work at this place in 1895. On the latter part of the trip we saw much farming land. Much of it is in cotton.

Monday, Dec. 6

After breakfast we went to a new building in progress. We also visited the Anklesvar training school, saw the carpenter shop and the work which the students do there and visited other rooms and departments. William Bhagat, the principal, tells us that inspectors from the government give this school the highest rating of any of the thirty-five schools like it in Bombay State. He then took us to his home for a short call. They have a nice new house. He is thirty-five years old. He wants very much to go to America for further education. At noon we went to the home of Premchand Bhagat and had an Indian meal. We were in his study where he writes Sunday-school lesson materials and does translating.

Wednesday, Dec. 8

We next went to a village out from Anklesvar, where Kathryn Kiracofe is working at present. She lives in a tent and from it is doing evangelistic work. She will stay there till about Dec. 22. There was a women's meeting under a large tree, but only a few women were there as it is the busy season for work in the fields and they were working in the peanuts. The school was dismissed and the children from it and some men were also in attendance. With the help of a flannelgraph, a woman told the story of the birth of Christ. After the story, Miss Kiracofe had an exercise in which they worked at learning the Ten Commandments. After this she gave out Bible picture cards. With her we walked through the village, stopping at homes and visiting with people. Some homes are quite nice and others are miserably poor. In some cases it looks like mere existence with a few dirty rags for clothes and the simplest kind of food. At one place where we stopped the mud wall of the house was being rebuilt. The man, Ramalo Kisson, said he had been baptized by D. J. Lichty and also that Brother Lichty once helped him build the wall to his house. He said: "Whenever I repair the wall of my house, I think of him."

Sunday, Dec. 12

After breakfast we loaded the truck and went to Undi, a village near Anklesvar, where we had Sunday school and church. Men and women met in separate groups for their classes. After Sunday school

Home Mission Briefs

Lincoln church, Nebraska

Lansing, Michigan

Last fall Bro. Jack Kline, the pastor, wrote, "We are simply thrilled with the fine Christian response to our every-member canvass. Committees are working hard and overtime. Almost everyone in the church is busy at a job and several volunteer for further work such as typing and visitation in the community. We have contacted twenty-five students and professors at the Michigan State College who are Brethren. Some are coming. Two have brought their memberships (professors). Others perhaps will soon. Our giving is increasing. A fine spirit of Christian love and co-operation exists. We ask to be remembered in prayer as we also remember the Brotherhood."

Chinese Mission Work
First Church Chicago

The December "Chinesegrams" carried these encouraging words: "One of the hopes and prayers of the workers in the Chinese Sunday school and church has come to fruition in the organization of a young people's group. For a long time two of the young people, Joan Kwan and Au Mon Lum, have been wishing that more could be done for our Chinese young people at First church. Early in October Au Mon and others called together our few young people then attending Sunday school and organized for work, worship and fellowship. In these few weeks the group has more than doubled in size. Young people who had not been coming recently have returned, and new people have come into the fellowship. Au Mon is their president; Chuck Moy, vice president; Miss Reinette Lee, secretary; and Miss Joan Kwan, treasurer. Au Mon, son of Au Bow, is a recent college graduate in electrical engineering and is currently working in the city and is a member of the Chicago First Church of the Brethren. Joan Kwan was baptized into the fellowship of First church last Easter.

"Our adult group, too, is finding added strength. Mr. Louie Lee, presently working in a laundry in the city, and a Bible School graduate, has recently entered our fellowship. Miss Leona Rosa, a returned Baptist missionary from South China, has been working with us for several years. Recently Miss Ethel Groce, another former missionary from South China, has been with us several Sundays and preached for us on Dec. 5."

Lakewood Community Church,
Seattle, Washington

"Leadership education: Last Sunday Fred Wilson, chairman of our Christian education commission made the announcements and cared for the preliminary portions of our worship service and gave public recognition to the six individuals who completed this year's standard Leadership training course, as well as mentioned those who had completed the courses in previous years.

"The building program: We are gradually closing in upon the tasks of completing the church. The sanctuary needs its permanent altar and the organ louvres, which the chairman of the building commission, Ted Schmide, has as his project. This will be accomplished soon in the new year.

"A bit of humor. While we were practicing in choir one night there was a lot of noise in the basement. Hammers were busy and it became pretty difficult; so someone asked what it was all about. The answer: the Walls are down there putting up the ceiling. Chuck Wall and his two sons with Mr. Owly and his sons had taken that as their project.

This summer, we spent $1,200 on finishing the parsonage. The former church had been converted to a dwelling for us but never completed. We still lack several hundred dollars' worth of work, but are delighted with it as it has progressed. In two-and-one-half more years the loan taken to convert will be paid and the church will own a building worth perhaps eight or nine thousand dollars."

Covington Community Church,
Washington

The following are excerpts from a report for the year just closed: "The Covington Community Church of the Brethren has ended one of its most fruitful years of work. Statistics reveal a membership with ninety-three active, nineteen resident-inactive, nineteen nonresident and eight unknown. During the year twenty were added by baptism, eight by letter and two on former baptism. The average attendance at services was 128 for morning church services, 107 for Sunday school, and thirty-four for evening services. During the year a number of children were dedicated. Total disbursements for the year amounted to $5,102.45.

"The women of the church have been active. And so have the men. The men are unorganized but available for work. During the year less actual work on the church was done but enough to bring the structure to the place where it could be dedicated on Palm Sunday. This was a great event in the life of the church. Bro. Charles Zunkel gave the address for the occasion.

"At about the close of the year a Pentecost in miniature seemed to break in the church. The same spirit has been in evidence since. This bodes well for the future, only it cannot be measured in terms of figures. The Spirit is working. Needed adjustments are being made and new approaches are being thrust upon the church."

Omaha, Nebraska.

In September the church set attendance goals of an average increase of six per month for Sunday school and worship. Then efforts began to achieve the goal. The record looks as follows:

	Sunday school	Worship
September	22	29.5
October	31.8	35
November	38.75	43
December	40.5	49

That is an unusually excellent record of achievement.

People said there were no children available for Sunday school. On December 19 nineteen children were present, sixteen participating in a Christmas program. Nineteen more were taken Christmas treats. There has been no young people's Sunday-school class for the past seven or eight years. Now there is one that is growing. The home-builders' class was almost invisible; now it is a substantial group.

Choirs, both adult and junior, have been started. Stewardship money is increasing. In three months eleven were taken into the church membership. It is amazing what God can do with dedicated people and leadership!

Grants Pass, Oregon.

Recently the church dedicated a new and much needed addition to the church school plant. It is a part of the over-all church building which is planned. It was needed to house the growing Sunday school.

The church is adding souls to the kingdom. On Christmas Sunday five adults came with confession of faith, three to be baptized, and two by letter. On Jan. 9 two teen-aged young people came for baptism and prospects were for more of the same age group. Plans are being laid for a community-wide evangelistic visitation effort.

Lincoln, Nebraska.

Goals were made in November to reach an average attendance of one hundred in church school and one hundred twenty-five in morning worship by Christmas and an average of one hundred twenty-five in church school and one hundred fifty average in morning worship by Easter. Reports are that the Christmas attendance goals were reached. It is important to set goals and then to reach them. God's work needs to move forward, and it can!

Denver, Colorado

Sunday-school attendance at the Prince of Peace church, Athmar Park, is running between 250 and 324. A total of 543 persons were in worship on Christmas Sunday. Forty youth are in the intermediate department. Already the newly dedicated church building is too small to meet the needs. God can accomplish mighty things if dedicated people set themselves to his tasks.

With the Shivelys

there was a dedication service for babies, conducted by Everett Fasnacht. Then I spoke on the theme of thanksgiving for the harvest, translated by Everett. This was followed by their thank offering, which was in the form of oral pledges. Examples of pledges made are: forty pounds of peanuts; forty pounds of peanuts and twenty pounds of rice; eighty pounds of peanuts; Rs. 2 and Rs. 5. Then a money offering was taken.

From Anklesvar we went to Bulsar. We visited the hospital and met some of the staff and saw their places of work. Among these were the two Indian doctors, Peter and James. Dr. Paul Hoover sees any patients who are referred to him by them or by other doctors in the city, or any who request him.

Greenmount—Bro. Fred Wampler served the congregation as summer pastor. The play, We Reach for the Stars, was given in our church by the district. A temperance course was used in all the classes of the Bible school. The Greenmount church temperance committee sponsored a week-end temperance institute under the leadership of James Renz. The CBYF gave a Thanksgiving service of worship and a candlelighting service at Christmas. Patricia Shifflet and Peggy Davis attended the National Youth Conference. The Fellowship of Reconciliation at Bridgewater gave a program in our church. There was a joint meeting of the women's work groups with the Fairview group in charge. Mrs. M. J. Craun was speaker. The women have given comforters, seeds, friendship packages and some used clothing for overseas relief. Bro. Frank Coffman was speaker at a men's work meeting. The W.C.T.U. met with the men in a joint meeting. The men's group purchased a heifer and the joint women's groups also purchased a heifer for overseas relief.—Mrs. Glen Armentrout, Linville, Va.

Greenmount, Bethel — Bro. Grumbling held revival meetings in our church which resulted in six baptisms for the church. Thanksgiving and Christmas programs were held in our church. We are looking towards the remodeling of our church and the building of Sunday-school rooms. —Mrs. Glenn Armentrout, Linville, Va.

Greenmount, Bethany — Evangelistic services were held with Bro. Fred Wampler as evangelist. Two were baptized into our church fellowship. Our Sunday-school attendance and offerings are increasing. Four girls from our church attended Camp Bethel and six young people attended the week-end youth rally at Bridgewater. Special Thanksgiving and Christmas programs were held in our church.—Mrs. Glenn Armentrout, Linville, Va.

Greenmount, Fairview — The Student Christian Movement of Bridgewater College gave a program in our church. A Thanksgiving service was held. The play, The Little Stranger, was a part of our Christmas program. On Jan. 2, Bro. Fred Wampler was ordained to the ministry and Bro. Howard O. Lam to the eldership. Bro. Paul Bowman was guest speaker. At Christmas time the women's group sent fruit baskets to the sick and shut-ins. Marion and Galen Lee Wampler attended the Youth Conference at Anderson, Ind. —Mrs. Glenn Armentrout, Linville, Va.

Greenmount, Melrose—As a result of the revival services conducted by Bro. Fisher in our church, five new members were received into our membership. A furnace has been installed in our church building. A special program was given at Christmas time.—Mrs. Glenn Armentrout, Linville, Va.

Greenmount, Mt. Zion — Evangelistic services will be held in June with Bro. Isaac Bennett in charge. The district women's work rally was held in our church. Our women's group contributed to the seed project, as well as comforters and used clothing for overseas relief. A Thanksgiving service was conducted by the CBYF. This group also presented the play, Christmas Will Last Forever. The children participated in the Christmas program and the intermediates gave the play, The Best Gift. Mildred Scott and Janet Carr attended the Virginia Council of Churches youth conference. The Mt. Zion W.C.T.U. held a temperance rally in our church with a covered dish meal and the showing of the filmstrip, The Choice Is Yours. — Mrs. Glenn Armentrout, Linville, Va.

Greenmount, Pine Grove—Bro. J. W. Harpine will hold evangelistic services April 21—May 1 concluding with communion services in the Mt. Zion church. A family fellowship meeting is held once each month. A committee is receiving funds for the remodeling of our church building. Both Thanksgiving and Christmas programs were held in our church. —Mrs. Glenn Armentrout, Linville, Va.

Linville Creek—On Nov. 7 the Linville Creek church building was completely destroyed by fire. Plans are under way for a new church house. The rubbish has been cleared away and the building committee has been appointed. We are grateful to the Rockingham County school board for the use of the new consolidated Broadway high school while our church is being built. Rufus King of Bridgewater was guest speaker on Nov. 14 in the absence of our pastor. A group of Sunday-school workers from our congregation attended the Plains District leadership training school. A school of Christian training has just been closed at the Cedar Run church with Cecil Hartman as dean. Two adult classes were led by Brother and Sister William G. Willoughby, the youth group was directed by Lauree Hersch, and Miss Etta Bowman and Mrs. Effie Lam were in charge of the children's group. The CBYF plan to buy new hymnals. During the past year, the women's Bible class supported a little Korean orphan girl. Delegates to district meeting were Brother and Sister Carson Holsinger, Cecil Hartman and Carroll Wampler. The ladies' aid group will meet in the homes during the time the church is being built. The children's department is sending pencils to Syria where they are needed. A school of missions was held during the month of January. Bro. M. R. Zigler brought our morning message on Dec. 12.—Mrs. Roy Kline, Broadway, Va.

Southern Virginia

Boones Mill—A number of our young people attended the district youth roundtable at the Laurel Branch church. We recently had Bro. D. Price Hylton of Roanoke as guest speaker. On Nov. 24 we had a Thanksgiving fellowship supper, followed by the film, The Bible on the Table. Our ladies' aid group contributed twenty-five dollars to the Thanksgiving offering and the same amount to the Christmas mission offering. A number of our men attended the district men's meeting in the Bassett church. On Dec. 19 a Christmas program was given by the children and the play, A Stranger in Bethlehem, was presented by the young people. Our women's Bible class gave Christmas baskets to shut-ins. On Christmas Eve the young people went caroling. On Jan. 2 we held our council meeting with Bro. G. W. Bowman as moderator. The men's work group was appointed to be in charge of the Messenger subscriptions. — Mrs. Owen Ikenberry, Rocky Mount, Va.

For Fishermen and Fishers of Men

THERE is nothing imposing about the sailboats used by these fishermen in Ceylon. Their crafts, though built to lean into the wind, look hardly adequate for more than two or three fishermen, their nets and their slender haul of fish. No more imposing, likely, were the boats on Galilee. Yet when Peter, James and John launched out into the deep and put down their nets at their Master's direction, they filled them so full of the catch that their boats were in danger of sinking.

There is nothing imposing about the resources we bring to the kingdom of God. Often we feel like the Galileans who "toiled all night and took nothing." But that was before they heeded their Master. He who calls us to be fishers of men does not expect us to launch forth in a battleship or freighter but he does call on us to set out, however limited our craft, into the deep waters where our sails can billow with the winds of his Spirit and where our nets can capture an astonishing treasure. Like the young Galileans we need only the faith not to be afraid and the willingness to leave "everything" in order to follow him.

READERS WRITE . . . to the editor

The Gospel Messenger welcomes letters commenting on editorials, articles and news. Letters should be brief and brotherly.

Danger Signal

"Through the Eye Gate," the article by Max M. Shank in the Jan. 15 issue should have been printed in red ink in order to attract the attention of all your readers. Then, too, it would be a danger signal of what is happening not only in the homes of non-Christians but in the homes of many Brethren people themselves.

It has not been so many years ago that it was unlawful from the church's standpoint to attend a theater or a show of any kind, or to allow children to attend. But now how is it? Even the worst that the world has to offer is enthroned in the very living rooms of many Brethren folk and the debauchery of the world is often forced upon their young. With juvenile delinquency at its peak, what can we expect when television shows how to indulge in all manner of wickedness? I heard one mother say, "It's the biggest curse that ever struck our home."

In this Jan. 22 issue of The Saturday Evening Post is the story of Wm. McGuffy and his "Readers." The authors state that more than 100,000,000 copies of these readers were sold and used in 37 states. They went on to say that they probably did more to mold American thinking than any other single influence except the Bible.

What can our youthful generation look back upon and say did the most to mold their thinking and attitude toward life? What of the little six-year-old boy who was watching a Western holdup? When the shooting began he grew tense, a hardness came into his eyes; he braced himself before the scene and entered into the fray with his own gun. How does that compare with McGuffy's gentle stories of honesty, kindness and thrift?

I know a fourteen-year-old-boy who is at the head of his class of ninety students. He says it's not so hard to keep on top as most of the other kids have TV at home. —C. D. Emrick, Eldorado, Ohio.

"A Man's Work and a Man's Soul"

The article under the above title which appeared in the November 6 issue of the Messenger seems to me to be a subject worthy of some rather clear thinking.

From a careful reading and rereading of this article I fail to find a statement which in any way indicates the author's idea of what a man's work is or should be.

However, the most surprising development of this article is that the "man's soul" passed away in the title, as it is never mentioned again. This omission leaves nothing on which to establish the relationship suggested by the title.

To me a man's work is what ever activity the individual is engaged in. If such activity contributes to the advancement of the civilization of which he is one member, that work is worthy of any man, whether he is a farmer, laborer, plant manager or editor.

On the other hand, if his activity tends to retard or restrict such advancement of civilization or any of its components, he is a detriment to that civilization, himself included. Among such activities may be mentioned the makers and distributors of intoxicating liquors, the publishing and distributing of many of the so-called comic books or the preventing of any fellow from engaging in any worthy activity of which he is capable in which he may wish to contribute his fair share to the civilization of his day and age.

It really made little difference with the outcome that in their earthly activities Jesus was a carpenter, Peter a fisherman, Nicodemus a ruler of the Jews or Paul a tentmaker and a prisoner. The important thing is that each used his particular activity as a means of advancing the civilization of his age and time until such time as he was called into greater activity in the advancement of the kingdom of God among his fellow men. From these statements it is evident that a "man's work," his activity, should be such that it will contribute a fair share of advancement to the people of his day and age. In doing so he also makes possible the growth of his own soul—that thinking, willing, deathless part of himself.

From over fifty years of experience ranging from tote boy to manager and stockholder in shops and factories small and large, I can assure any one that civilization as a whole will contribute a fair share of this world's goods for such activity, plus the satisfaction of a life well lived. The ideal of a fair day's pay for a fair day's work still holds true in a vast majority of cases.—E. O. Slater, Brentwood, Mo.

Many are building their lives on wealth, land, houses, pleasure—a flimsy foundation that will not last

"In Search of a City"

John C. Middlekauff

A FEW years ago Mr. Harry Donohue, who lives near Ossining, New York, had a very unnerving experience. The house in which he lives is 250 years old and is located on the bank of the Hudson River. While his children were spending a week end with friends on Long Island, Mr. Donohue was alone in his old house on a Sunday afternoon. About four o'clock, he heard an odd noise in a cellar room right off the kitchen—an ancient, rock-walled chamber with a brick floor, which he had made into a storeroom. He thought that perhaps an animal had gotten into the cellar and knocked over a cabinet in which he kept canned goods. Grabbing a rifle and a flashlight, he went to the cellar to investigate. The cabinet had tipped over—and as he was wondering what kind of an animal had done that, he noticed that part of the floor had disappeared—and the cabinet was wedged in a hole about four feet in diameter. When he flashed his light into the hole, he could not see the bottom.

In the days of the American Revolution, they mined copper and silver in this area of New York state—and part of Mr. Donohue's cellar had fallen into a mine shaft. Before having the shaft filled with fifteen large truckloads of dirt and stones, one of the workmen was lowered sixty feet on a rope—and when he did not touch bottom, he lost his enthusiasm and was hauled back to the surface.

The reporter who interviewed Mr. Donohue said, "Donohue's children are the envy of their schoolmates for having lived in such unusual and precarious circumstances, but their father is less enthusiastic about the whole affair. 'When something opens up like that it makes you stop and wonder if there's anything substantial in the world,' he said."

When I read this story, and the comment which Mr. Donohue made—"it makes you stop and wonder if there's anything substantial in the world"—it started me thinking about life. What is substantial; upon what can you depend; in the final analysis, what is enduring? It is important that we find an answer to this problem, for just as no sensible man would knowingly build his home over a mine shaft, so no wise man will build his life on foundations that are unsubstantial and which will not endure. It is this quest for a "city with solid foundations" that has characterized all the great spirits from the days of Abraham to this present moment.

First, let us look at some of the foundations which we know will not endure and then at those which do have the promise of eternity.

The Word of God and men of science agree that our physical universe will not last forever. Scientists do not agree on the amount of time it will take, but they are agreed upon the fact that our sun is burning out. Several million years from now, the sun will burn so low that life will no longer exist on our earth and this world of ours will be as dead and as lifeless as the moon. The Bible, using highly figurative language, talks about the destruction of this world and the creation of "new heavens and a new earth in which righteousness dwells" (2 Peter 3:13).

If the world of the physical and the material is not going to last, then how foolish it is to build our lives on things—wealth, land, houses, clothing, sensual happiness. Yet the great majority of men are building their lives on just such a flimsy foundation. We glibly speak of America as a "Christian nation." And yet is there any nation in the world where materialism is quite so blatant as here in America? If you polled the boys and girls in our high schools and colleges, asking them, "What is your goal in life?" from seventy-five to ninety per cent would answer: "Success." You would discover that they define "success" in materialistic terms: a good job with a good salary, opportunities for promotion and economic security; a comfortable home with all modern conveniences; a new car; a packed wardrobe; prestige and social status; belonging to the right crowd.

Substantiation for this viewpoint may be found in the choices of a life's work which our youth make—medicine, law, engineering, business for the boys; nursing and teaching for the girls. And all of them carry material advantages that are above average. But it is exceedingly difficult to get the finest of our young men to prepare for the Christian ministry. When you talk to them about the problem, with disarming candor they will point out the fact that the minister is the poorest paid professional man in the country. Last year the average minister received $900 a year less than the average salary paid all wage earners in America. Now I know that it is not right to look at the ministry solely in terms of its economic disadvantages, but the indisputable fact is that young people do so and thereby reveal a deepseated materialism.

Religious News Service

The persons who have contributed to human welfare and happiness, like Albert Schweitzer, and the fruits of whose labors we still enjoy have been those who sought God and his kingdom

When we are tempted to build life on material values, we ought to remember this one truth that is echoed on every page of God's Word: "All that is in the world, the lust of the flesh and the lust of the eyes and the pride of life, is not of the Father but is of the world. And the world passes away, and the lust of it; but he who does the will of God abides forever" (1 John 2:16, 17, R.S.V.).

There is an old Latvian folk song that our young people sing in camp; in one of the stanzas there occur these words: "This earth will pass and with it common trifles, but God and I shall go on endlessly."

Not only will this material world and its common trifles pass away but also our political systems. The kingdoms of this world seem so solid and secure—but if history teaches us anything, it ought to teach us how fragile our earthly kingdoms are. When Arthur Henry Hallam, the close friend and companion of Lord Tennyson, died, Tennyson wrote a poem in his memory. And in this poem, he expressed his conviction of the impermanence of the kingdoms of this world:

Our little systems have their day;
They have their day and cease to be.
They are but broken lights of thee,
And thou, O Lord, art more than they.

If the world does not endure; if our political systems (including America and the USSR) will fall; if our friends and loved ones prove untrue and are taken from us by death, what is there in life that has a "solid foundation" and upon which we can build our lives for time and eternity? Jesus faced this question and gave an answer to it

"Whither America?"

IN THE month that we honor national leaders like Washington and Lincoln the question of America's future, raised by Dr. J. M. Henry in this issue, is appropriate. Out of his thorough study of American history the writer traces the development of our nation from a small group of eastern colonies to a world power whose massive strength is both welcomed and feared around the world. In what constructive ways can that nation's knowledge and power be applied to the world's problems? This seems to be implied in his question, "Whither America?"

Too often the answer is computed in terms of so many planes assigned here, so many bases built there, so many millions spent here, so many weapons stockpiled there. Too frequently the future of America is outlined only in lines of defense, in areas of command and in balances of power.

But another article in this issue ought to challenge Americans to look in another direction. Norris Dodd, who knows a lot about the world's food problems, discusses a basic human need and our apparent inability to meet it adequately. What greater challenge is there to American ingenuity, American organization, American humanitarianism, than to tackle a problem upon which so much depends? Instead of conscripting to defend a few islands off the coast of China, would it not be far better—and more Christian—to enlist volunters in a "war of amazing kindness?"

True patriotism, it seems to us, would be better served by such moral equivalents of war than by planting American flags around the world. What does it profit a nation to become the greatest of world powers if it risks the losing of its soul? —K.M.

The Symphony Without a Conductor

WHEN the N.B.C. Symphony Orchestra was disbanded a short time ago, its members reorganized themselves as a symphony without a conductor. They desired to continue to play as a team even though their most prominent director, Arturo Toscanini, had retired and the broadcasting company which sponsored them would no longer support them. They gave public concerts at which no maestro stood on the podium, yet which were marked by the interpretations they had learned from the famous Toscanini. These concerts were offered as a tribute to his leadership.

Yet this talented organization—one of the finest in the world—will not continue long without a conductor. For a while the influence of Toscanini will be evident in their playing, but sooner or later they will need a leader, someone to set the tempo, to indicate the dynamics of the music, to balance one section against another, to give that touch of inspiration that distinguishes a living experience of music from a mediocre rendition of sounds. The memory of even the greatest conductor is not enough.

There must have been many days in the early Christian community when the church seemed like a symphony without a conductor. For a while the vivid memories of Jesus, especially the experiences of those who knew him as a risen Lord, were sufficient to unite a fellowship in prayer and action. But these memories would be lost in another generation. In God's wise providence the church was given a conductor—the Holy Spirit whose presence at Pentecost made such a profound impression on the early church. Under his leadership the church grew and its communion services became not only a memorial to a Christ whose ministry was over but a witness to the gospel that was living and active in changing the hearts of men.

The church today, gifted and talented and rich in resources, can still not function properly unless it seeks the leadership of the Holy Spirit. We have far too many soloists with their own private interpretations who wish to mold the church according to their own desires. We have too many self-appointed leaders who are adept at blowing their own horns and attracting attention. We have too many members who want a chair in the orchestra but they disdain any suggestion that they ought to practice their religion. If some queer sounds come from the ensembles of which we are a part, it may be that we are trying to be a symphony without a conductor, a church without the Holy Spirit.—K.M.

> There are but few (and blessed be those few!) who can be reconcilers "by making contacts at high levels." They will be called personally to that service, carrying out their concern, and not the instructions of a society. The work for most of us others is behind the scenes, not in dramatic COUPS, but in the slow accumulation of "little things." The true reconciler is, therefore, modest, unobtrusive, abhorring the limelight. He does not expect to find the world is "waiting for his message."

Whither America?

J. Maurice Henry

"WHITHER America?" is a question of vital concern to the people of the United States and, in fact, to the rest of the world. The United States of America has developed through three stages of power and has entered a precarious fourth stage. The first period lasted over a span of 109 years. Evidences were appearing as early as 1787 that our colonial leaders were dreaming of a continental power to be set up in this Western Hemisphere. Two facts of history will be sufficient to prove the thesis. In 1787 Nathan Dane introduced a resolution in the Continental Congress to set up the Northwest Territory and the ordinance was passed on July 13 of that year. The second fact loomed large as Thomas Jefferson propounded the theory of natural boundaries after the infant republic was made a Federal Union in 1789.

The natural boundary idea was not new, for Louis XIV of France had advanced the same theory and fought four major wars to attain it, but failed. Jefferson did add, however, a new concept: to expand by peaceful means. His plan was argued so eloquently in the councils of our new democracy that it set the pattern of expansion for the next half century. The Louisiana Territory was purchased in 1803; the Floridas were obtained by treaty in 1819; the republic of Texas was admitted as a state in 1845; the Oregon question was settled by treaty with Great Britain in 1846; then the half century was coming to a close when the Mexican War finished out the natural boundaries of the United States.

The second stage of the development of power of the United States was swift and dramatic, lasting from the annexation of Hawaii and the Spanish-American War, 1898, to April 6, 1917, during which time this nation became a world power by adding Hawaii, Guam, Puerto Rico and the Philippines, and placing the Platt Amendment on Cuba. Three things were taking place as the U. S. assumed the role of a world power. Our leaders argued that overseas possessions required a big navy and larger standing army to protect these new territories. Economic imperialism soon replaced natural expansion and our diplomats talked in terms of world power instead of the continental United States.

The third stage covered the period of the first world war and the tragic years of the next quarter century. At the close of the war the United States stood before the world like a colossal economic and military giant but was hesitant, uncertain and bewildered. She lost her leadership by failure to assume her responsibility in a sick and wounded world. America had led forth a crusade to make the world safe for democracy but failed to promote the lofty ideals of democracy for the rest of the world and then shut herself up in a shell of misguided isolation while the rest of the democracies were left to wither, grow weak and fall prey to totalitarianism. The results are sad facts of recent history. The Biblical injunction thundered down the corridors of time: "Ye cannot serve two masters." In other words, the United States could not serve herself by a master idea of isolation, and at the same time serve a master duty of helping to save democracy and freedom for other peoples.

The next period of development has begun and a startling query stares us in the face—"Whither America?" This fourth stage is easy to point out but impossible to predict. What shall we label this fourth stage of power? Many leaders would like to have us believe it is the United States—as a supreme world power.

The writers of cultural history tell us that for five hundred years or more Europe was the center of creative culture in music, art, architecture, literature and religion but secular historians say that Europe was also the soil of balances of political power, diplomatic subterfuge, economic rivalries, revolutions and destructive wars. Unfortunately, the latter seem to dominate the thinking in many areas of the world today.

Analytical writers and diplomatic historians are trying to fix our attention on what they call major problems facing the United States of America. These facts can be summarized under five general terms: that the insecurity and restlessness of Western Europe is an American problem; that Western Europe today is between two millstones —American military power to keep the peace of the world and Russian determination to prevent the unity of nations necessary to assure peace and freedom; that Western Europe is suffering from a creeping paralysis of fear and must have new injections of military serums to survive; that Western Europe wants rest, peace, security and a chance to live but does not know how to have these blessings of life without American aid; that the world should be told about the weakness and blunders of Russia as well as her giant military might.

Three important things have happened in Western Europe in the last decade. First was the Schuman Plan to unite all the nations of the area in an economic union. The second was the North Atlantic Alliance to guarantee security. The third was added in 1953 when a United States of Western European States with a constitution and a bicameral system of government was proposed. The United States of America was to play the fiddler's tune of unity and then foot the bills.

Let us examine one more vital fact in this growth of power of the United States. In 1939 she had only six diplomatic agents in China. Today there are thousands scattered over all Asia except China. In 1952 the American embassy in Paris was responsible for two thousand five hundred persons in government service and with their wives and children it made an American community of more than seven thousand of our citizens in one city. Furthermore, the United States is a large real estate owner in Paris with seven large offices, seven magnificent private residences for dignitaries in addition to the American embassy buildings. In the suburbs of Paris the United States has warehouses with fifteen million dollars' worth of goods stockpiled such as stationery, desks, chairs, typewriters, teletype machines, filing cabinets, adding machines, trucks, radio equipment and what not. "Whither America" in this standing army of agents and officials spread across the face of the earth?

Let us face the facts. In our world there are two mighty powers struggling for control. Both Russia and the United States are passing through transition periods with revolutionary elements at the center of national life. The contrasts in expansion of power are not alike. The Russians sell their ideas by infiltration, sometimes by revolution, and then the logical state. Having penetrated with their ideas they follow up to consolidate with other techniques

Naomi Will H. K. Zeller, Jr. Jesse Ziegler

The Family Counselor welcomes letters of inquiry. They may be addressed: Family Life Department, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Dear Counselor,

Our family is just at the age where jokes, riddles and puns are part of breakfast, dinner, supper. Father and mother are constantly made aware of their inferior knowledge! We do appreciate the fun—it's better than quarrels. However, we think—my husband and I—that there's a good opportunity to be establishing some standards as to what constitutes a good joke, what is a cruel joke or uncouth one. Where do you draw the lines in helping children and older people to use good taste and Christian kindness?

Appreciative Parents.

Dear Friends,

Yours is indeed a fortunate family if every member enjoys the table conversation. When the children are heard as well as seen, much of the conversation will have an easy banter which would not have been appreciated by "The Autocrat at the Breakfast Table." And yet, there are many advantages when children feel themselves to be "on par" members with their parents in the mealtime conversation. It establishes delightful rapport. It provides that wonderful sense of "belonging" which is a choice heritage in any child's life.

"A joke is the shortest distance between two points of view." The success of a joke is the response it receives. Father and mother can help establish the standards of the jokes which are the regular mealtime fare by the responses they make. Silence is sudden death. Cruel jokes, uncouth stories and even corn soon die the death of silence.

Humor is a deceptively tricky and difficult art. Very few of the humorists America has produced have been able to be consistently funny with being at times unkind or repulsive. The notable exception, of course, is Will Rogers, of whom it was said that none of his jokes ever involved crudity, obscenity, or the degradation of personalities. A wit who "never saw a man I didn't like" can share his humor without offense.

Your response to the jokes your children tell is their cue—and they will quickly take it.

which may be cold, brutal and bloody. On the other hand the United States brings her techniques first and then leaves them to grow in a soil of optimistic idealism of freedom and liberty. The supreme question is which system of ideas will win.

The world stares forward not into clear sunlight but into the shadows. Let us pray that we shall come into the full light of day ere long; let us hope for the free air of freedom and liberty without bloodshed; let us cherish hopes which rightfully belong to us; let us devote ourselves to great tasks which befit our heritage; let us make our generation one of the strongest links in that golden chain of goodwill which binds the sons of God into a Christian brotherhood of man.

Are We Winning Men to Christ?

Edward K. Ziegler

THE Church of the Brethren has resolutely entered upon a program of evangelism which may well bring about the greatest and most wholesome growth we have ever had in our history. The Abundant Life in Christ Movement continues to gain momentum. As we work through the meaning of our current church theme, "Seek First His Kingdom," we must intensify and broaden our program of evangelism, for to seek the kingdom of God means seeking to extend his gracious reign into the hearts and lives and society of all men everywhere.

The hour is late; so we must begin immediately if we have not already done so to make plans to achieve a goal of 250,000 in 1958

Don Knight

How are we getting on with winning men to Christ? The Abundant Life in Christ Movement has now been our evangelistic program for three years. Let us look at the figures for the year ending September 30, 1954.

During this year, there were 6,978 baptisms, a net gain in membership of 3,340. This is a gain of 1.75%. Nine new churches were oganized. It took twenty-seven Brethren a full year to win each person baptized into our church! This, however, was the largest number of baptisms in one year since 1940, and the largest gain in membership since 1939.

The ten districts having the highest percentage of gain in membership are as follows:

Mardela	18%
Texas and Louisiana	14.9%
Colorado	12.5%
First West Virginia	6.66%
Oregon	6.62%
Washington	5.61%
Idaho & Western Montana	5.52%

Southeastern Kansas	5.47%
Southern Missouri & Arkansas	5.3%
First Virginia	4.8%

However, the districts having the highest ratio of baptisms are a different list. According to this criterion, the highest ranking districts are:

Texas and Louisiana	1-12
Idaho and Western Montana	1-14
Oregon	1-15
Southern Iowa	1-16
Southeastern Kansas	1-16
Washington	1-16
Western Maryland	1-18
Florida and Puerto Rico	1-19
Southern Illinois	1-19
Northwestern Ohio	1-20

Eleven districts show losses of membership for the year. Three of these districts, Eastern and Western Maryland, and North and South Carolina, are in the Southeastern Region. Three, Middle and Southern Indiana and Michigan, are in the Central Region. And five, Northeastern and Northwestern Kansas, Northern Missouri, North Dakota and Western Montana and Oklahoma, are in the Western Region. In a few cases entire districts show membership losses because one or two churches have made large cuts in membership roll reporting.

It cannot be too strongly urged that in all honesty and fairness to other churches, every church should report its total membership—active and inactive, resident and nonresident, for publication in the Yearbook. A few churches have reported only active members, in order to decrease district financial apportionments. Of course, in as much as most churches do report accurately, such a course of action causes a church to accept less than its share of district responsibility. When all churches follow the same procedure, there can be no serious inequity in apportionments.

Our 1958 Goal

Shall we achieve the goal of a quarter million Brethren by 1958? Our present membership in America is 193,871. Membership in the churches abroad totals 12,197, a grand total of 206,068. To reach a goal of 250,000, we shall need to have a gain of 44,000, or eleven thousand per year. This we can easily do.

There is no question about the spiritual resources available for reaching such a goal. Nor is there any dearth of evangelistic opportunity, here or abroad. Few among us today have any doubt of the very great urgency and relevance of our message. To achieve this goal, therefore is a challenge to a new consecration of our lives, fortunes and sacred honor, to sharing Christ in every persuasive and tactful way with our neighbors and families, until his kingdom comes in the hearts of all.

"As therefore you received Christ Jesus the Lord, so live in him, rooted and built up in him and established in the faith . . . abounding in thanksgiving." (Col. 2: 6)

The World's Undernourished People

In many countries human beings have a desperate struggle to exist from the time they are born — because of disease lack of food lack of education
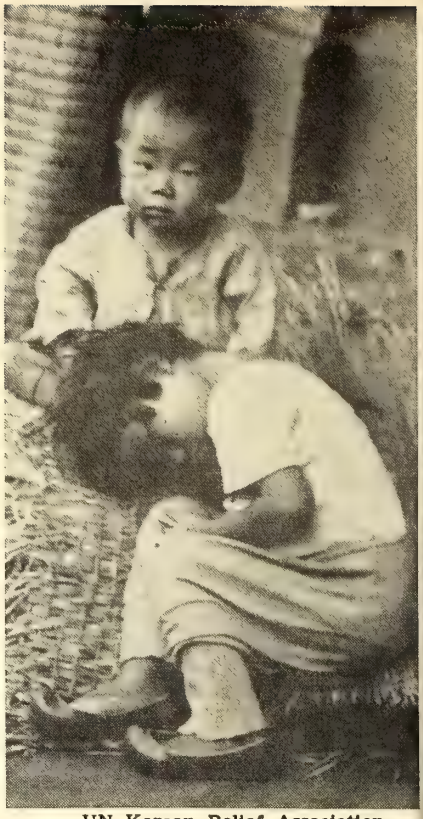
low earning power

Norris E. Dodd

MORE people will go to bed hungry in the world tonight than will go to bed well-fed. This fact has been arrived at by careful statistical research. It is not a new situation or one that can be easily or quickly corrected. It is a situation that very certainly has been growing steadily as the world's population has increased. Unfortunately, very little thought has been given to this problem and very little has been done about correcting it.



In total, very little more food was produced in the world in 1954 than in 1938, but there are some 200 million more people to be fed. The pattern of population growth is not evenly distributed over the world, and neither is the pattern of food production. The areas where food production has increased the most since World War II are the areas where people were, as a rule, already well-fed before the war. The result is that more food per capita is available in those areas, and people are eating better than they did before.

But in the vast areas of the world where the population is the greatest, less food is being produced than before the war, and the population has increased so rapidly that there is less food per capita than there was fifteen years ago.

I have had the good fortune to travel in most of the populated sections of the globe. In many countries I visited human beings have a desperate struggle to exist from the time they are born—because of disease, for lack of education and because their earning power is so pitifully low. Finally, they lack the "know how" and the ability to finance their operations. Even the families who live on the land are never sure they will produce enough food to carry them through to the next harvest.

About forty per cent of the people in the world never in their lives have had enough to eat and never have had access to the kinds of food that make strong bodies and strong minds and that give resistance to disease.

In many areas of the Far East the daily ration is equivalent to about nine ounces of rice or other cereal, per day. If it were possible to supplement this diet with some proteins or fats, there is no question that these people would enjoy longer lives, that their bodies would be more resistant to disease, and that their productive capacity would increase. A weak, undernourished human being cannot be expected to do a full day's work. Neither will a child grow to maturity if his diet is inadequate.

Dietary deficiency diseases are widespread over many parts of the world. Often there is little food available that a child's body can assimilate from the time he leaves his mother's breast until he is ten or twelve years of age. The death rate of children is appalling. In many places the average length of life is under thirty years. It is not a very long time to live, but it is a very long time to go hungry.

In Africa I have seen native women prepare a school lunch for children consisting of boiled corn meal, the only food available. Corn meal is nourishing if it can be supplemented by other high quality food, but children on diets consisting solely of cereals, rice or roots do not obtain the necessary minerals, vitamins and proteins for proper growth of their bodies.

The result is that most of them are afflicted with one or more of the deficiency diseases such as kuashiorkor which—if they survive at all—generally leaves them with crippled minds or crippled bodies or both. We have found that the simple addition of skimmed milk to the diet of kwashiorkor victims greatly improves their health.

Simply to make food available is not the whole answer to the problem. It is necessary also to teach people how to prepare properly and make use of foods. And of course education is necessary to help them increase their earning power.

It seems to me, therefore, that this problem must be approached through the children. Give them better food and more education, and they will grow up with a chance for a better life.

In most of the areas about which I speak there is no organization that reaches down to the necessary level of the population. In many parts of the world local groups, overseas church missions and national or international organizations have made a small beginning. They have established schools, small food-experiment stations and clinics for expectant and nursing mothers, and they have organized local school-lunch and hospital-feeding programs. It gives one a warm feeling to visit these places and see the gratitude expressed on the faces of the people who are being helped.

But the surface has hardly been scratched. Even though food can be made available, it will be necessary to enlist a great number of trained workers willing to go into these areas, to make the sacrifices that would undoubtedly be demanded. For it would mean living with these underprivileged people, teaching them and helping them to help themselves.

Giving them food is not enough. It takes understanding and enthusiasm on the part of a trained worker who is willing to spend years under primitive conditions in order to give his fellow man a better break.

People who are always hungry are not good citizens. A man who lives in a mud hut with no chance of education for himself or his family, who has no clothes but the clothes he wears, who sleeps in the same room with his animals (if he is lucky enough to have animals) is easy prey for the promises and teachings of communism and other false ideologies.

God has endowed our country with a great wealth of natural resources. We have a democratic form of government, under which our people have made great forward strides. But I should think it would be rather difficult for Christian families to sit down to their overflowing tables unless they felt they were at least making an effort to help their less fortunate brothers and were willing to divide with them the foods we have in such great abundance in North America.

How Can I Be Good?

Byron Miller

A GOOD life is contagious and winsome. It attracts, wins and holds others. Goodness cannot be pent up and sealed. It does not thrive in a vacuum. Goodness will out. It will be seen in the soft look of the eye, the peaceful countenance, the untiring spirit of helpfulness. Even death cannot destroy the influence of a good life. There is no substitute for a good life. It is one of our precious Brethren doctrines.

Basically, most people want to and intend to be good. But like Paul, we admit: "I can will what is right, but I cannot do it" (Rom. 7:18). We cannot seem to get started or make appreciable gains. There are two Me's in each of us—the Actual Me and the Possible Me. The farther apart we allow these two Me's to become, the greater is our frustration. We are not satisfied with the Actual Me, and yet many times the Possible Me eludes us. How can we be good and reach our potential self? This problem demands an answer. Does not Paul give us the answer in his Book of Romans?

Broadly speaking, the book falls into three main divisions: (1) Chapters 1—3:23—Sin is Universal; All need righteousness. (2) Chapters 3:24—8—Righteousness by Faith. (3) Chapters 12ff—Practical exhortations and religious duties. (Chapters 9-11 are a parenthetical discourse on the state of the Jews)

Paul suggests that the first step to being good is to confess to God that we have spoiled our lives by yielding to our lower natures (1—3:23).

Paul spends most of three chapters getting the Gentiles and Jews to see that they were sinners. In the case of the Gentile, this was easy. He claimed nothing for himself. His immorality was evident. Paul had only to point to the facts. He catalogues the sins of the Gentiles in 1:20-31. They had sufficient light, but refused it. But Paul had no easy job to convince the Jew of his sinfulness, for he had a divinely given system of religion. As a son of Abraham, he considered himself righteous by the law. But Paul says in Rom. 2:1-16 that God judges according to truth (v. 2), according to man's deeds (v. 6), without partiality (v. 11), and according to the Gospel of Christ (v. 16). Circumcision or a covenant people did not ensure God's favor. Paul says the Jew, too, has been immoral, idolatrous, a dishonor to God and, as such, sinful. His conclusion is this: "All have sinned and come short of the glory of God" (Rom. 3:23).

Does not God have a difficult time getting us to see our sins! There is Pharisaism in each of us. The publican's prayer, "God be merciful to me a sinner," is indeed rare. I see little godly sorrow for sins these days. Seldom do people come to their pastor or church and ask, "what must I do to be saved?" Yet we will never be good until we feel our need of being made good. Any attempt to dismiss our sins as if they did not exist is to invite further defeat, frustration and futility.

Paul then suggests the second step toward being good: A good life is insured when Jesus Christ is fully appropriated (3:24—8)

Paul calls this act, righteousness by faith, and his favorite term to describe this act of being made righteous or good is grace. In short, to be good we must be made good by One who is perfect Goodness—Christ. Theologians have discussed to no end the nature of man. Is man inherently good? If left alone, will man just naturally pursue the good? Paul says in Rom. 7: "I'm a wretched man. I don't understand my own actions. The good

Pastor of the Painter Creek church, Ohio

I want to do, I don't do." Sounds strangely human, does it not? But the spirit of Rom. 8 is different: "There is no condemnation to those who are in Christ Jesus." "To be carnally minded is death, but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." "We are more than conquerors through him who loved us." "Nothing shall separate us from the love of Christ." Paul had gotten hold of something or, more truly, something had got hold of him. The indwelling Christ was now asserting himself. There are some who feel that they can be good by sheer pluck and human effort. They point with pride at the "good works" they do. This is Old Testament Judaism — goodness by way of achievement. But the New Testament declares with stark reality that man, unaided by a power outside himself, cannot attain his potential goodness. We are like a watch whose mainspring is broken. We have all the parts, but they do not work. As the watchmaker puts the watch together again in running order, so God, by Divine Energy (in response to our faith) makes us whole and good. This is the wonder of the gospel. This is the power of the gospel. No life is too far gone in evil but what it can be won to the good by Christ. Why some resent coming by the way of the cross—the blood—the grace of Christ, is disconcerting. Does this explain why many ministers, teachers, church workers have such little joy, power, influence? They have never had an inner change. They are still under the influence of the natural man. When your child holds its hands upward toward you and says, "Up, up," the only way for it to be raised up to your level is for you to stoop and lift it up. The only way we can be lifted to the good life is for God to stoop and lift us up by his grace. He will do it through Christ, when he sees our sincerity of trust.

Paul then concludes his discourse on How to Be Good with practical exhortations (Rom. 12ff). He says, in short, the way to be good is to do good.

Musicians know they must practice to attain perfection. Have you ever watched a great orchestra play? The timing, coordination and rhythm is as if only one were playing. That takes years of practice. Fritz Kreisler, famed violinist said: "If I don't practice for a day, I know it; if I don't practice for two days, my family knows it; if I don't practice for a week, the world knows it."

It is no different in the spiritual life. A farmer knows that when a plow is left to rest in the field, it soon rusts. So the goodness in our lives is not a passive something. It must be active, practical, applied, if we are to keep from "rusting" as Christians. Spiritual growth does not come easily. It is worth too much for that. It must be worked at, long and hard. I do not believe we so much drive evil out of our lives and out of the world, as we crowd it out with the good. Then evil has no room. Then evil will starve from lack of nutrition and attention. The reason we so often "go down" in bad behavior is because "we let up" in good behavior. Paul realized this, and so he gives us a long list of virtues that we should continually endorse, choose and emulate: Consecrate yourself wholly to God (Rom. 12:1); keep your mind renewed (12:2); practice humility (12:3, 16c); be faithful in the use of talents (12:6-8); let love and kindness be genuine (12: 9-10); be a joyous, enthusiastic Christian (12:11); be happy in your hope, patient in trials, constant in prayer (12:12); be liberal in giving; practice hospitality (12:13); bless your persecutors (12:14); be in harmony with others (12:16); minister to the needs of enemies (12:17-20).

Throughout the remainder of the Book of Romans Paul continues the list. After all, is not this which the world is waiting for and so much needs—not merely to eulogize Jesus, but emulate him. What reason is there for us to wait longer to begin? We can all start today, if we will but: Confess to God that we have spoiled our lives by yielding to our lower natures; by faith, appropriate the redemptive Christ; and with Christ's help practice those qualities that belong to the Christian Way. If we will do these, we shall be good and we shall be happy. But more, our lives will be glowingly contagious.

If we are to continue our spiritual growth we must practice those things which aid growth: renewing of our minds through Bible reading, attendance at church service, constant prayer that has stood the test of time and experience. He said it was to be found in the eternal God and his kingdom of love and righteousness. This was the city for which Abraham was searching—"the city with solid foundations of which God himself is both Architect and Builder."

Call the roll of the great men and women of history, the people who have contributed to human welfare and happiness, the people who have made this a better place to live—Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, David, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Amos, Hosea, Paul, John Hus, Luther, Wyclif, Florence Nightingale, Jane Addams, John and Charles Wesley, Livingstone, Carey, Schweitzer, Kagawa, George Washington Carver —and supremely, Jesus Christ. And all these men and women named—and the whole host of those unnamed—have been men and women who have sought first God and his kingdom and, even though they have been dead for centuries, we call them blessed and continue to enjoy the fruits of their labors. Then call the roll of those who have builded their lives on power, wealth and material advantage —and you will find the names of those who have blighted life: the Caesars, Napoleon, Hitler, Mussolini and Stalin.

In the kind of a world in which we live, a world in which most of the values that have formed the basis of our democratic way of life are being undermined by traitors within and attacked by enemies from without, it is an encouraging thing to know that the kingdom of God and its values will endure all the assaults made upon it and, in the end, will emerge victorious.

Now, we must never make the mistake of equating the church and the kingdom and yet, when it is true to its highest and best, the church is the earthly revelation of the kingdom of God. True, the church has its defects and shortcomings but, by and large, it is the finest, most Godlike institution on the face of the earth. It has hardly known a day in all its long history when in some part of the world it has not been persecuted. But even in the midst of persecution, it has found strength in the promise of Jesus: "I will build my church, and the powers of death shall not prevail against it" (Matt. 16: 18).

Rome tried to wipe out Christianity and, in a series of savage persecutions covering a period of over 200 years, it put to death several million Christians. Rome is remembered as an ancient power but the Christian church continues to move forward in victory.

Why will the kingdom of God outlast all its enemies and stand firm when every other foundation in the world has crumbled into dust? For one single reason: it is founded on the real nature of God which is love. Rabbi Goldflamm in John Hershey's The Wall (that terribly moving story of the persecution of the Jews in Warsaw by the Nazis) as he discusses the fact that they may be killed any day says, "What faith was ever wiped out by torture or gags or faggots? Dolek, I am calm because I know that any system that is based on love and respect will outlive any system that is based upon hatred and contempt."

Even though we know that God is essentially love, and even though we agree with Paul—"So faith, hope, love abide, these three; but the greatest of these is love"—yet so frequently we Christians sell love short. We say it won't work in our kind of a world. The command of Jesus to love everyone, even our enemies and those who persecute us, is idealistic and in 1955 we must be realistic. What we forget is this: in the long run force, violence and power destroy themselves but love endures because it is Godlike.

How do we lay hold on this enduring foundation on which we can build for all eternity? Our text gives us two suggestions: (1) Faith and trust in God. "It was by faith that Abraham obeyed . . . it was faith that kept him journeying . . ." (2) Blind obedience. ". . . he set out in complete ignorance of his destination."

When the earth opens up at your feet and you begin to wonder if there is anything substantial in the world, remember that there is a "city with solid foundations of which God himself is both Architect and Builder."

If Rivers Could Think

R. E. Mohler

I AM sure that rivers do not think, but just in case they could, and had the power to choose, just what would they do? It would be interesting to observe the choices that they would make. I am sure that they would not be destructive as is so often the case when a river becomes too large for its valley. Just what would a river do if it had complete control of itself?

The Columbia is a powerful river. It is the second largest river in North America, immense in size. If this river were a personality with ability to think it would certainly be made happy with what is happening to it as man builds great dams to be used for power and irrigation. The Grand Coulee, Chief Joseph, Bonneville, Rock Island and other great projects are really changing the Columbia. The Columbia is coming to itself so far as usefulness is concerned. It will soon be giving man the cheapest power that he has ever known and, in addition, enlarging by not less

Louis Miller, the author, out of his wealth of experience as a pastor, temperance worker and executive secretary of a county social action committee has written here a hard-hitting story of a young minister's fight to clean up moral and political corruption in his town and in his church—Old Calvary. It is a story such as could happen in any town, yours or mine, calling for a courage in us as laymen or ministers to stand up and be counted for right.—Charles Zunkel.

What Are You Worth? G. Curtis Jones. The Bethany Press, 1954. 159 pages. $1.25.

To those who desire a book of stewardship illustrations from personal and corporate life, What Are You Worth? is the answer. If anyone thinks the topic of stewardship is threadbare he will be pleasantly surprised when he reads this volume.

Written in smooth-flowing language that is understandable to lay and clerical readers alike, this book is a valuable aid in developing the stewardship concept. It does not stop with this personal aspect of the Christian's life, however, but goes on to offer practical guidance in the development of a program of stewardship education and enlistment in the local church. In these respects What Are You Worth? is, in the words of the author, "a symposium of sharing." Although he has chosen numerous and unique experiences from others he also provides a fresh assortment of illustrations and insights from his own pastoral ministry.

Self-examination and new resolves will grow out of a reading of this publication. The motivation to higher levels of administration and financial support in the church is also an important reason for its purchase and distribution among key workers of any congregation. —Harl Russell.

He-Manners. Robert H. Loeb, Jr. Association Press, 1954. 183 pages. $2.95.

Not every word of this book will apply to every Brethren boy or young man, and other sections ought to be superflous—such as tips on the etiquette of smoking and dancing. But He-Manners could prove a real blessing to male readers. (1) Many Brethren youth show evidences of needing a little basic education in the art of social courtesy. (2) Mr. Loeb has produced a book which gives good, solid, common-sense advice on matters with which the average fellow is concerned. He does not address himself to the top of the upper crust as Emily Post tends to do. (3) Mr. Loeb writes in a light, humorous style — and the illustrator has drawn upon an imaginative cartoon style—that makes the reading of the book fun rather than labor.

than two million acres the fields that it irrigates. Nature with the aid of man is making the Columbia the most useful river in all the world. Certainly if this river could think it would be happy.

The Platte river of Nebraska is an interesting stream. If one were to judge from the area it drains he could easily visualize it as the largest tributary to the Missouri. To be the largest tributary to the Missouri would be a feat that would make most any river feel like boasting. On second thought, just to be big is not necessarily the thing that is most to be desired. If you have only crossed the Platte river you have not really seen it. During most of the summer months this river is a broad sandbar with no water in sight. If one really wants to see the Platte river he must travel through most of the state of Nebraska. Here he will see the world's largest irrigation project. He will see fields of corn, soy beans, alfalfa, sugar beets and numerous other crops growing in abundance.

If one could imagine that the Platte river had the ability to think and had chosen to be used as it now is used he would certainly expect to find a river completely thrilled. To have been the greatest tributary to the Missouri would have been a spectacular thing, but had the Platte chosen that it would soon have found itself engulfed in the larger stream and forgotten as an individual river. It would later find its waters a part of the Gulf of Mexico, and finally a part of the Atlantic Ocean. As a part of the ocean it would become contaminated with salt and its usefulness for irrigation, power and human consumption completely lost. Its thrill as a great tributary would soon be completely forgotten.

Rivers and men have similarities and differences. Some folks with only one talent refuse to use it. The Platte has only one talent, and that talent is water for irrigation. You never hear of the Platte as a source of water power or as a stream for boating, fishing and recreation. The Platte has one talent and it uses it; as a result it produces never-to-be-forgotten crops that furnish food for hundreds of thousands. It would be nice, at least spectacular, to be the greatest tributary to the Missouri, but how foolish a choice that would be. To crave to be "the richest man in the cemetery" may likewise have its challenge, but such folks are not generally the world's greatest benefactors. The Platte lost itself for others and will never be forgotten.

What would rivers do if they could think? I guess it is a foolish question and certainly one that no one can answer, but were they able to think and chose their own destiny, what a challenge the Platte would be.

KINGDOM GLEANINGS

Harold Z. Bomberger, pastor of the Westminster church, Md., will serve as president of the Westminster Ministerium for the coming year.

Mrs. J. E. Keller of Oak Park, Ill., appreciates greatly the many expressions of sympathy which the family has received since the death of Bro. J. E. Keller.

George L. Detweiler, pastor of the Waynesboro church, Pa., was elected secretary of the Pennsylvania Council of Churches at the recent annual assembly.

Methodist women of the southeastern United States unanimously adopted a "charter of racial policies" which calls for the integration of all groups into the life and work of the church and the community.

Hazel Kennedy, children's editor for the Church of the Brethren, will serve as a resource person for the primary department leaders' interest group at the International Sunday School Convention to be held at Cleveland, Ohio, July 27-31.

Eugene Kuszmaul writes that he is no longer pastor of the Center church, Northern Indiana, and the Yearbook is in error. His address remains the same, Beatty Memorial Hospital, Westville, Ind.; Bro. Kuszmaul is doing occupational therapy work in the hospital.

P. G. Bhagat, a leader of the church in India, has become editor of a Gujarati edition of the devotional booklet, The Upper Room, published by the Gujarat Tract and Book Society. Bro. Bhagat is carrying this new responsibility along with his duties as secretary of the Joint Council, Church of the Brethren. The Upper Room is published in four language editions in India — Hindi, Telugu, English and Gujarati. It is also published in Urdu, the chief language of Pakistan.

The following literature has recently been sent to pastors and superintendents: Action Sheet for Opposing Universal Military Conscription, On Visiting a Congressman, Eight Ways to Be a More Effective Citizen, Suggestions When You Write Your Congressman. Anti-conscription memos are also being sent to pastors and superintendents on the latest developments on the draft extension and the UMT bill which is being considered. This information and these action suggestions should be used by church leaders and laymen during this campaign.

The Day Before Easter, a forty-five minute motion picture just completed by Family Films, Inc., for the Broadcasting and Film Commission of the National Council of Churches, vividly dramatizes the ecstasy of Easter. The commission plans to show it on several hundred TV stations, April 8 and 9. It is the story of a veteran clergyman who finds himself pressed for time for the briefing of his Easter sermon because of several acute personal problems confronting the members of his congregation. As he reviews these matters, he suddenly realizes that these human problems are in fact his Easter sermon. Check your local newspaper TV program guide for the time and station in your area.

Handel's The Messiah is being given by two districts in the Central Region. Southern Ohio chorus presents the oratorio in the West Milton High School auditorium on the afternoon of April 24. Perry Huffaker will direct it for the fifth year. A two hundred fifty voice choir of Northern Indiana will give The Messiah on April 3. This year an orchestra will support the chorus in its performance.

Pleasant Hill congregation of Southern Ohio in the past five years has transmitted $9,775 to the General Brotherhood Board. The source of the money is income from a farm received by bequest of the late John Miller, who drew his will in 1882. The congregation, believing the generosity of a deceased brother should not remove challenge from living members, transmits the money over and beyond the regular giving of the congregation to Brotherhood or some work beyond the borders of the local congregation.

The theme of the annual meeting of the Division of Christian Education of the National Council of Churches, held in Cincinnati, Ohio, Feb. 4-11, was Communicating the Christian Gospel. A joint committee and section meetings were held. The Colgate Distinguished Service Award was presented to Mrs. Herald Demaree, a farmer's wife of Franklin, Ind. A notable address, The Gospel We Communicate, was delivered by Dr. Elton Trueblood. The address was made especially significant by the fact that his wife had just died, but Dr. Trueblood kept the date because he felt she would have wanted him to do so. The meeting was well attended by members of the Christian Education Commission staff and by Earl H. Kurtz, manager of the Brethren Publishing House, who served as chairman of the Publisher's Section.

Changes of Address

Dorsey E. Rotruck, from Tire Hill, Pa., to 585 N.W. Ninety-fifth St., Miami 38, Fla.

L. M. Baldwin, from Cordell Okla., to 713 W. Fourth St., Clovis, N. Mex.

Florence Miller, from Garkida, Nigeria, W. Africa, to R. 1, Grantville, Pa. Sister Miller, who has been nurse at the leper colony, has returned to the States on regular furlough.

Juniata College

Completion of Juniata College's new $425,000 residence hall for men brought "moving days" for 130 men students at the end of the fall semester. Approximately eighty men moved into the new dorm from a temporary barrackslike structure known as "The Lodge," which has been used since 1946. Fifty others have been shifted from private homes. However, according to Dr. James F. Penney, dean of men, about fifty men still will have to be housed in private homes near the campus. The dormitory is the first objective in the ten-year "Build Juniata" program which has a goal of $2,500,000. Other proposed buildings in the long-range plan include a library, home economics building and women's residence hall.

The Juniata College choir and string-wind ensemble left campus on Jan. 29, for a nine-day tour of Western Pennsylvania. Under the direction of Prof. Donald S. Johnson, the choir's schedule included appearances in churches and high schools in Rockwood, Meyersdale, Somerset, Uniontown, Washington, Pittsburgh, Ambridge, Sharon, Freeport, Irwin, Indiana, Shelocta, Windber and Johnstown. Now in its twenty-third season, the choir has a vocal section of twenty-six voices, in addition to a seven-member string-wind instrumental ensemble which accompanies some of the choir's selections.

Contributions to Juniata for the first six months of its current fiscal year which ends next June 15 are nearly eleven per cent ahead of last year's figures according to a report issued by Harold B. Brumbaugh, assistant to the president. The end-of-year report showed gifts totaled $93,475 compared to last year's total of $83,390 — an increase of 10.8 per cent. Most significant in the increase was the rise in giving from foundations and industry, including $25,000 donated by a memorial foundation. Church giving to Juniata, encouraged through the college's expanded program in church relations, has more than doubled. The report also showed that 660 alumni and friends have contributed $39,670 so far to the alumni fund which has a goal of $60,000 this year.

Dr. Raymon M. Kistler, president of Beaver College and well-known churchman, author, lecturer and educator, spoke at Juniata College's winter convocation in Oller Hall on Jan. 31. The convocation closed the fall term with midyear graduation exercises and opened the spring term. Nine students were candidates for degrees.

Registration for Juniata College's fourth annual program of noncredit courses in its community educational services now totals fifty-seven in four classes. Oil painting has attracted eighteen to again enroll the largest number. Fifteen are registered for a class in sewing; thirteen in world politics, and eleven in income tax problems.

A Juniata College senior in chemistry, Richard M. Ikeda of Seabrook, N. J., has been honored with a student award by the Central Pennsylvania section, American Chemical Society. The awards are made on the basis of scholarship and professional promise to promote interest among students in chemistry and allied fields.

Kermit Eby, professor of social sciences at the University of Chicago, was guest speaker at a special chapel service on Dec. 8, in Oller Hall. A former delegate to the White House Conference on Rural Education, he has also visited Japan as a member of the U.S. Commission for the Reorganization of Education in Japan, and has been in Europe in the interests of the National Commission of UNESCO. Brought to the Juniata campus through the College Public Events Committee, Prof. Eby addressed the student body using the topic, Forgive Us Our Temptations.

A new scholarship fund — known as the Mary Kirk Spence Scholarship—has been established at the college this year. Mrs. Spence, whose influence is being extended through this fund, was devoted to young people and their educational progress. For more than twenty-five years, Mrs. Spence, who was graduated from Juniata in 1919 with a B.A., was associated with Friends Select School, where her responsibilities for admission and guidance gave her the opportunity to be of inestimable assistance. She also taught for many years at the Standard Evening High School. The new scholarship will provide aid primarily for children of missionaries or of ministers of the Church of the Brethren.

News and Comment From Around the World

New Program to Help Puerto Rican Migrants

A post card identification system which will notify U. S. Protestant churches of the expected arrival in their community of a newcomer from Puerto Rico is the newest plan in the program to help the thousands who come to the States from the little island each year. The post card gives pertinent information about the Puerto Rican and his family and the mainland community where they plan to live. Post cards will be directed to the church nearest their expected destination point.

McConnell Named to Head RIAL Committee

Joseph H. McConnell, president of the Colgate-Palmolive Company, was named chairman of the Laymen's Committee of the Religion in American Life movement. He told a dinner session of the meeting that the RIAL program makes possible "one of the most remarkable advertising campaigns in history." RIAL is supported by twenty-four national religious bodies with American business co-operating through the Advertising Council. Its purpose is to promote the religious life of American Protestants, Roman Catholics and Jews. Highlight of the program every year is a national advertising campaign throughout November in all major media. Americans are encouraged in the ads to attend the church or synagogue of their choice. Dr. Earle B. Pleasant, national director, told the meeting that local programs "show impressive gains in attendance increases at worship services of all faiths."

Harvard Divinity School to Admit Women

Qualified women will be admitted as regular students in the Harvard Divinity School beginning in the fall of 1955. They will pursue the same three-year graduate course of study offered for men. In most other seminaries, women have been admitted only for special shorter courses. In announcing the school's new policy, Acting Dean George H. Williams said: "The Christian community is finding increasing scope for the service of women, especially in religious education, and the faculty of Harvard Divinity School welcomes the opportunity to assist in their training."

Dr. Eugene Carson Blake, president of the National Council of Churches, points to some of the areas that the representatives of the council's United Church Women will visit on their two-month tour of the world "to create greater unity in fellowship and prayer among Christian women." Three of the women making the trip are, left to right, Mrs. David D. Baker, editor of The Church Woman; Miss Felicia Dunderlal of Dehra Dun, India; and Mrs. James Wyker, president of United Church Women. At right is Mrs. W. Murdock MacLeod, general director, U.C.W. The women plan to visit Hawaii, Australia, India, Indonesia, Pakistan, Egypt, Israel, Lebanon and Germany

American Baptist Convention to Streamline Structure

A streamlining of the American Baptist Convention's organization was voted at a meeting of the denomination's General Council. The reorganization will affect the denomination's boards, councils, committees, co-operating organizations and associated and affiliated organizations. The Convention's four mission societies have already under way plans to eliminate duplication. They call for integrating the two home missions groups and two foreign missions societies. New plans will be presented to the Convention's annual meeting in May.

Japanese Women Oppose Constitutional Change

Japanese women are opposing a return to the old family system now proposed by powerful political factions which would eliminate the present legal status of sex equality, restrict freedom of marriage and divorce and impose on children the sole burden of supporting their aged parents. An article in the present constitution now reads: "Marriage shall be based only on the mutual consent of both sexes and it shall be maintained through mutual co-operation with the equal rights of husband and wife as a basis."

New Congress Gets Bill for Peace Department

The new Congress has again received a bill to create a Department of Peace. Rep. Harley O. Staggers of West Virginia reintroduced his bill which he says has received a great deal of support from religious groups in the past. Under his plan the department would be headed by a secretary of peace with these duties: "Formulating and publicizing educational programs for promoting better understanding of the other peoples of the world; encouraging the interchange of ideas and persons between colleges, churches, and other institutions and organizations in the United States, on one hand and similar institutions in other countries; assisting educational institutions and religious organizations in the United States to formulate educational programs dealing with international relations, international relations, international cooperation and the problems of peace."

Mennonites Report on Relief and Service Work

Members of the Mennonite and Brethren in Christ churches in the United States and Canada gave $1,890,000 in cash and material aid to the relief and service program of the Mennonite Central Committee in 1954. With this, they aided some 200,000 needy persons in 24 countries through its staff of 475, many of whom serve without pay, in various parts of the world. During the year the committee initiated a relief and rehabilitation service in Viet Nam, established a farm for delinquent boys in Ontario, and opened a third psychiatric treatment center, Prairie View hospital, near Newton, Kansas.

Southern Presbyteries Defeat Merger Plan

A plan to unite the three major Presbyterian bodies in this country has been defeated by Southern Presbyterians. More than the necessary twenty-two presbyteries of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. voted against the merger. The two other denominations involved are the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. and the United Presbyterian Church. Three fourths of the eighty-six presbyteries in the Southern Church had to approve the union proposal to put the denomination officially on record as endorsing it. Returns from the first thirty-seven presbyteries to vote showed twenty-five against the merger and twelve for it. The first sixty-five presbyteries in the U. S. A. Church to vote on the plan approved it. Voting by United Presbyterian presbyteries did not get under way until late in January.

Congressmen Push Measure Against Obscene Literature

Efforts have again been launched in Congress to strengthen the hand of the Postmaster General in dealing with obscene material sent through the mails. Senator Frank Carlson of Kansas introduced a bill in the Senate for this purpose. Rep. Edward H. Rees of Kansas is sponsoring a similar measure in the House. Last year the Rees bill was passed by the House but failed in the Senate. Both bills would give the Postmaster General authority to impound mail whenever he has reason to believe the statutes against indecent literature were being violated. Religious groups strongly supported the Rees bill last year, but it was vigorously opposed by the American Bar Association which contends that it puts the burden of proof on the defendant instead of the prosecution and creates a dangerous precedent. The Carlson bill attempts to meet such objections.

Private School Enrollment Growing Rapidly

Enrollment in the nation's private and parochial schools is increasing twice as rapidly as in the public schools, according to the United States Census Bureau. Enrollment in private and parochial schools below the college level is 4,000,000 and in the public schools 30,000,000. The Roman Catholic parochial school system is estimated to account for ninety per cent of the nonpublic elementary school enrollment and eighty per cent of the private high school enrollment, although no exact figures are available.

Congregationalists, E and R Church Map Joint Activities

Representatives of the Congregational Christian churches and the Evangelical and Reformed Church have mapped a program of joint activities by the two denominations prior to their projected union in 1957. Leaders called for 100 regional evangelistic meetings to be held in the fall of 1955. These will be followed by 3,000 dinner meetings in local churches. Evangelical and Reformed speakers will address Congregational Christian meetings and vice versa. Executive bodies of the two churches gave final approval to the merger last October and a convening general synod has been scheduled for 1957. The new denomination will be called the United Church of Christ.

Southern Baptists Plan Evangelism Crusade

A simultaneous evangelistic crusade will be held in some 30,000 Southern Baptist churches this spring. Dr. C. E. Matthews, secretary of the Baptist home mission board's department of evangelism, said, "We expect to baptize close to half a million people as a result of the 1955 meetings." He said the campaign also was aimed at reaching those who have moved into new communities but who have left their church membership behind.

German Churches Discuss Rearmament

A discussion conference on the question of rearmament was recently convened by leaders of the Protestant church of Württemberg in Germany and was attended by pastors and laymen. Members of the conference represented various points of view, particularly with regard to conscientious objection and acceptance of military service. Reference was made to a declaration published by the German Committee on Conscientious Objection and sent to government officials. This declaration states that "the right to refuse to undertake military service for reasons of conscience is not adequately protected." The German committee said, "Young people must be free to decide whether they will undertake military service, alternative service or voluntary service for peace."

Your Service Outreach

. . . through visitation

Ora Huston

This is the second in a series of five interpretive articles in preparation for One Great Hour of Sharing

BOTH the righteous and the wicked are in prison. Both need our help. People are sent to prison who do not go along with the accepted standards of society. If you live above or below these standards you are in danger of being sent to prison. Most of the people in prison are quite like those who are outside, except they have gotten caught. In prison you will find those who have damaged both life and property or public convention. Saints and sinners of every age have been thrown into prison and very frequently forgotten by those outside. Little wonder it is that Jesus mentions the visitation of those who are in prison in his judgment scene. "I was in prison and ye visited me" or did not visit me. For most of us it would be not visiting.

Those in prison need our help. If they have violated the commandments of God they need our help to find a new way in which to walk—someone who has faith and interest in them and who loves them in spite of their sin. The greatest redemptive force for the man in prison is confidence and love. It will accomplish what hours in force and confinement can never do.

New sinners are susceptible to a new way of life but generally they do not find the help they need and before long they become hardened and schooled in crime. They are lost to themselves, to society and God.

Another prisoner who needs our help is the man who has lived above the demands of society and has answered the call of God and conscience. To call their names would almost be roll call of the great benefactors of other days—Socrates, John the Bapsist, Peter, Paul, Bunyan, John Naas, Kagawa, Gandhi and a host of others, ancient and modern, whose names have been forgotten. These need our encouragement. When a conscientious objector follows the teachings of the Church of the Brethren and the New Testament and the dictates of his conscience and refuses to serve in the military forces and commits sin he is sent to prison. It is not so much the stone walls, the iron bars, the lack of freedom; as it is the questions which arise in the mind—is it really worth while? How will my friends respond to my being in prison? Will there be a place for me after I get out? What can I do for God in the midst of the injustice of this prison? And here is the need to protect, to encourage in our fellowship those who must suffer for conscience' sake in prison and also after they return.

Through Brethren Service, you can share with those who are in prison—both the wicked and the righteous, strangers from a foreign land and members of our own church fellowship, those who would drag society down and those who would lift it up, those like you and me who have been caught and sent to prison when we haven't.

Second Chance for Marie

First Refugee Arrives on Brethren Assurance Under Refugee Relief Act

Congressman L. Mendel Rivers and his family of Charleston, South Carolina are on hand to meet Maria (third from left) when she arrives

IT WAS only last August that Congressman L. Mendel Rivers of South Carolina whisked through Austria visiting his hometown friend, a vice consul in Salzburg. He came into the World Council offices in Salzburg revealing that he wanted to sponsor a refugee girl to come to his home in Charleston. After looking through several folders he decided that Fraulein Maria Benesch, an applicant of Brethren Service, was the one it had to be. He did not have time to visit her since he was leaving the next day for Spain, but he made the selection definite.

Soon after Congressman Rivers returned to the U. S., he filed an assurance for Maria through the Brethren Service resettlement office in New Windsor. But since every assurance needs to make the usual circuit of clearances and checks, this one did not get to Europe until the middle of November. When the assurance arrived, the consular machinery raced ahead at near jet speed. The congressman and his family wanted Maria in South Carolina by Christmas.

Maria was called to the consulate the first week in December and she was asked if she would be willing to fly from Munich, Germany, the next Tuesday. She indicated that she would prefer a little more time with her family. The date was then tentatively set for Dec. 21. Then this was changed: she was to sail from Le Havre on Wednesday, Dec. 15, which meant she needed to leave Austria within seventy-two hours. The vice consul had been working frantically to get the thing through. A special trip was made to pick up the necessary German and French transit visas. They got them.

Monday morning I drove to Ried to pick up Miss Benesch and take her to the Wels train station. Relatives were streaming through the two barrack rooms of the Benesch family. Everyone was saying goodby. The old grandmother was weeping softly. This was almost certainly final parting for them. The grief of splitting the family was eased somewhat by the fact that Katharina (her sister), the younger twins and the war-widowed mother could look forward to joining Maria in the United States. Maria seemed least sad of them all. She hated, of course, to leave; but a new life was opening and determined expectancy ruled her face. The mother came along to see her off from Wels: a final meal, time for the train, "Orient Express Nach Paris," Auf Widersehn.

It was Dec. 21 when I met Maria at the pier in New York. The Ille de France docked at 6:00 p.m. and it must have been the coldest evening of that month. A Church World Service worker had arranged for a photographer to be on hand and he snapped a picture as I greeted Maria at the end of the gangplank. We were able to converse since she speaks English quite well; the CWS worker was also ready to interpret German when necessary.

After waiting what seemed hours for a customs official to inspect the baggage (and Maria was a sensible traveler with only one large suitcase and a satchel), the three of us proceeded to the Pennsylvania station to wait for the train. There was time for us to have dinner together before Maria left at 10:40 on the train for Charleston.

"Do you think it will be possible for me to attend night school in Charleston, if I have the time?" was one of several questions she asked. She is eager to improve her English. Maria impresses one as having a simple, genuine goodness of character that would endear her to any family with whom she lives and works. With a part of the remuneration she will receive for her work in the household of Congressman Rivers, she expects to assist in supporting her widowed mother and fifteen-year-old twin brother and sister in Austria. (Maria had been working for $3 per week in Austria.) Her sister, Katharina, has an assurance to come to the States and will be arriving sometime soon. Her mother wants to remain in Austria for the present until the twins finish the apprenticeships they have started. They all feel that the emigration of the two daughters will better their lot, and they hope that their little family can be together in America some day.

The Atlantic Coast line "Havana Special" pulled into Charleston, S. C., in the afternoon of Dec. 22—in time for Christmas. Maria was there greeted by the whole family—Congressman Rivers, Mrs. Rivers, Marian, L. Mendel, Jr., and Peggie Rivers. We have every reason to believe that the "resettlement" of Maria will be a happy one for her and for her sponsor.

The Value of the Deacons' Visit

L. John Weaver
Potsdam, Ohio

From Frontiers Near Home

Deacons' visits can strengthen the spiritual life of the church

WHEN I came to my present pastorate in September 1950, I had my first experience with the "annual visit." Since then I have thought a lot about this practice which was once nearly universal in our Brotherhood but is practiced so seldom today. What values does it have to offer? What are its disadvantages? Could a modified form prove effective in many more of our churches?

What is the Annual Visit?

Many long-time members of the Church of the Brethren are totally unfamiliar with the annual visit. The annual visit or deacons' visit, as it is frequently called, is a formal visit made annually in each home of the congregation with the intention to inquire of the members their present spiritual condition and relationship to the church and also to receive their comments concerning the church.

In our local church the time-honored pattern is somewhat like this: A month or more prior to the fall council meeting and communion, the deacon board meets to make the assignments for the visit. The congregational territory is divided geographically and each section assigned to a pair of deacons. There have been times when a deacon's wife or another layman is used to complete a team. In all cases each home is visited by a team. Before the planning session is over, each of the deacons receives the visit from the chairman of the deacon board, thereby renewing his own covenant of loyalty before he asks others to do likewise.

The deacons are now ready to begin their calls in the homes of their territory. An attempt is made to call in each home when every member of the family is at home. (No small task in our time!) Often it is necessary to set a time and return when all members of the family are present for the visit. Even when the deacons have done their best there are some who are missed. These folks are given an opportuntiy at the opening of the fall council meeting to receive the visit.

The deacons begin the visit in a home with a friendly, personal visit. Of the value of this I have no misgivings, for this builds wholesome Christian fellowship—a "must" in any church. The deacons (sooner or later depending on who does the calling) state that they are making the annual visit and ask the questions usually phrased somewhat in this fashion:

1. Are you still in the same faith you had as you came into the church?
2. Are you willing to give or receive counsel as necessary?
3. As for as you know, are you at peace with all members?
4. Do you have suggestions for the good of the church?

Each member of the church who is present is asked the questions individually. In our church it is also the custom to ask the family if they care to make a contribution for communion expenses. One of the visitors then leads in prayer of blessing on the home and family and the visitors leave.

Why has the Annual Visit Died Out?

I have wondered why a practice in our church once so common is now so seldom heard of. Could these be the reasons?

It is no small task to get busy men to take the time to make fifteen to twenty-five visits in one to three weeks' time.

It is becoming increasingly difficult to find entire families at home to make the visit.

It has sometimes been a cause rather than a healer of discord.

Some have answered "yes" to the questions year after year but still are absent from every communion, council and worship service of the church. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven" (Matt. 7: 21)

Sometimes the visit is merely a form to those who receive it.

Sometimes the deacons have not appreciated sufficiently the importance of the questions or of visiting every member.

Some churches feel that the pastoral system has replaced the deacons' visit.

Evaluation and Suggestions

What shall we say then? Shall we drop the visit? Or can we make it worth the effort it costs? I believe that properly used it will prove a rich spiritual blessing to any church. If an annual inventory is essential to those who deal in nuts and bolts and bottlecaps, is it not even more significant to those who work with the redeemed of God?

There is no pastor who can do all the calling that should be done in a church community. Neither is the calling a good deacon can do on the annual visit all the calling he ought to do for the church. Any group of deacons alert in calling on the sick and inactive throughout the year will have better results with the annual visit. With the pastoral system and the coming and going of pastors, it is more important than ever that there be a strong nucleus of deacons and other laymen who are permanent residents of the community feeling responsible for calling on newcomers, the sick, the unsaved and the inactive. In the visit made by the deacons there may be helpful criticisms and suggestions concerning the work of the pastor or church officers which would likely not be made to the pastor in his calling. All of the suggestions and criticisms given on the visit should be presented to the official board and discussed. A number of these will not be taken on to the council, but the answer of the official board would be passed on to the group who could be helped and the action reported to the member who asked the question.

In so far as it is humanly possible, every member should be visited. Nonresident members should have the equivalent of a visit through the mail. More time spent in preparation for the visit by the deacons as a group and more calls during the year on the inactive would make members more free to give honest answers to the questions.

Perhaps the first question on the visit, "Are you in the same faith?" is too vague. It mught be better to ask again the baptismal vows: Do you believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God and do you accept him and trust him as your Savior? Will you turn away from all sin and will you endeavor by God's grace to live according to the example and teachings of Jesus? Will you be loyal to the church—upholding her in your prayers and your presence, your substance and your service?

"The church from the very beginning of its history has sought out those who could lead the church in her ministries to the poor, the sick and the delinquent, and at the same time contribute to the spiritual warmth and fervor of the congregation. This work calls for men and women who are consecrated, alert to spiritual needs and opportunities, in the church and beyond the church, and who are living examples of what it means to be a mature person in the Lord Jesus Christ" (from Consecration Service for Deacons, p. 139, Manual of Worship and Polity).

It seems to me that it would be unfortunate if in our time of transition to the pastoral system we would lose any of our emphasis on the importance of the work that deacons and other laymen do. The rest of Christendom is now discovering the importance of lay participation and leadership. We must not lose it as they find it. I have come to feel that through the annual visit our deacons can make a real contribution to the spiritual life of our churches.

Pre-enrollment for Vacation Church School

THE idea of pre-enrollment for the vacation church school was mentioned at the 1954 Central Region vacation church school conference at North Manchester, Ind.

The Goshen City church wished to reach beyond its regular church school enrollment and bring into the vacation church school the children in the homes on the prospective list.

The plan of pre-enrollment promised the solution of two problems. First, there is always the problem of knowing how many leaders will be necessary to care successfully for the school. Second, there is the question of quantity in ordering textbooks and other supplies. The solution of both of these problems depends upon knowing the number enrolled.

The young people of the church were asked if they would take the task of securing the pre-enrollment as a youth project. They accepted the task and became very enthusiastic about it.

A list of all homes on the church's responsibility list, members or prospectives, in which there were children of vacation church school age was handed to the teacher of the youth group. He arranged the homes according to sections and called a meeting of the youth. The young people were divided into teams and each team was given a section. Teams were to choose the time which would be most convenient for them to call during the week, and the final report was to be given in one week. Enrollment cards were furnished the teams and these were filled out in the homes at the time of the calls.

As soon as the cards were turned in, the enrollments were classified as to department and class in the school. Then, in light of these records, supplies were ordered and a check was made on the leadership in relationship to need. With a good estimate of the size of the school a month or more before the opening date, the school began with adequate leadership and materials.

As part of the evangelism program in reaching the unchurched, careful records were kept of the individual attendance and special effort has been made to assimilate the children from the prospective homes into the life of the church school.

There seems to be no doubt about the advantage of this pre-enrollment effort, for it brought into the life of the school and church those who would not have come on a general invitation.—Clarence B. Fike.

Before a rural church can become self-supporting the economic condition of the landless farmer needs to be improved; one way is to help him increase production and raise better crops

Rural Churches in India and Pakistan

D. J. Lichty

WITHIN the bounds of India and Pakistan there are more than 700,000 villages. Out of the total population, 90 out of every 100 people live in these villages and 72 depend on agriculture for their living. About half of the latter are landless. They comprise the bulk of 50,000,000 so-called depressed classes and 20,000,000 aborigine peasants and laborers. Among these less prosperous sections of society the good seed of the kingdom has found its most fertile soil, and the preaching of the gospel to the poor has been justified.

Thus the churches of India and Pakistan are essentially rural, deriving more than two thirds of their membership from village sources. Though few in number there have been notable accessions from the more privileged orders of society. These, directly or indirectly, have played an important part in building up the rural churches.

Christian Witness

The most encouraging aspect of these churches is the manner and the rapidity of their growth. It is not primarily through the efforts of the missionary, pastor or any paid agent but by the simple witness of ordinary village Christians that the gospel spreads from family to family, village to village and community to community. Sometimes a whole village seeks to enter into the fold of Christ. Within their immediate areas, these churches are really self-propagating.

Financing the Church Program

To build self-supporting and self-governing churches with the above-mentioned material is, however, a goal most difficult of attainment. Their economic condition is deplorable. The average annual family income amounts to about $75. Most of the villagers are landless. Comparatively few own as much as three to ten acres of land, most of which is mortgaged to the greedy money lender.

Thus the village Christian has to give out of his poverty if not from his very living. Plenty of copper coins, some silver and occasional bills are dropped into the offering plate or into the gift box at the church door. If cash is not available, grain kept back from the daily family ration is offered or perhaps eggs or vegetables.

There are offerings of thanksgiving for recovery from sickness, birthday offerings and offerings of the first fruits of their fields and gardens. Occasionally, you will find a small plot of church-owned land contributing to financing the church program. Some of these people tithe their income. But the total amount of their offerings is pitiably inadequate for the support of their pastors and for providing suitable houses of worship.

Education Is Needed

Illiteracy constitutes another disability in these rural churches. More than seventy-five per cent of village Christians are illiterate, subjects for exploitation, provincial in their thinking and unable to enjoy the blessing of Bible reading.

With the exception of pastors, preachers and teachers, only a few Christian boys and girls return to the villages after securing an education for themselves. They are not to blame. They have no land of their own and since they no longer are as docile and submissive as their illiterate brothers, the landlords do not employ them. So they seek and find employment in the government or railway service, and a number prosper as lawyers, doctors, nurses and teachers. Others engage in private business. No doubt, they are an asset to the city churches but a distinct loss to the rural churches.

Missionaries Are Restricted

There is the additional problem of financing young men in their preparation for the ministry. The families from which young ministers come are too poor to undertake it and so are the churches. There are those who think that missions should invest more in this service than they have done thus far.

The religious freedom clause in the constitution of India is being interpreted by the government as applicable to nationals only. So, in the future, missionaries will be more and more restricted to other fields of service than the church. It is all important, therefore, to see to it that these rural churches are adequately supplied with trained national leaders.

The Rural Parish

The rural pastor or overseer, assisted by volunteer lay workers, is responsible for from three to ten villages. The roads and footpaths connecting these villages do not lend themselves to rapid or comfortable travel. During the rainy season, many of them become next to impassable. Being employed by the landlord, many of the parishioners, in certain seasons, are limited to night attendance at public worship.

Shepherding such churches is a night and day job. The pastoral message to the rural churches emphasizes the pre-eminence of Christ as the Savior from sin and the remover of their many disabilities if they will but follow his teaching and guidance. It urges unity in Christ and goodwill towards all men. It warns against reverting to heathenish or animistic practices. It challenges them to live the Christian life and thereby deserves the social recognition and economic well-being they desire. It comforts in time of sorrow and fortifies against persecutions. It encourages giving, and sharing the gospel with others.

Home for Christmas

Florence Bollinger
Anklesvar, India

"THERE is a song in the air, there is a star in the sky." We have bright December sunshine, masses of flowers, music and laughter and an all-pervading air of excitement for our children are home for Christmas.

The family began to arrive in October, when our daughter, Virginia, and her husband, Joseph Schechter, came to India with their two little boys for their first term of missionary service.

Two days before Christmas our son, Richard, and his wife, Ana Mae, arrived from Woodstock School on an early morning train. While the morning stars were still shining we were all sitting around the table drinking coffee, chattering away and thinking that it was too good to be true.

But this was not a dream and the days which followed were very real in joys and activities. Everywhere there were signs of Christmas—small Tibetan bells gaily beribboned tinkled in breezy doorways, the arborvitae tree by the veranda was bright with tinsel and glittering balls, with lights and a star shining in the night. On Christmas Eve our missionary family, together with James and June Sheaffer and Leon Neher, gathered in our home. The evening was lovely with carol singing as we stood under the stars by the lighted tree. There were refreshments of hot cocoa, Christmas cakes and sugared dates and there was the big red candle by the nativity creche.

Christmas morning found us all in church. When the Christmas Day mail brought a good letter from our absent son, Lowell, and his family, telling of their newly acquired home with space and a welcome for us on the coming furlough, we felt that even though divided by the space of half a world our family was one in spirit on this blessed day.

To few missionary parents is given the joy and deep satisfaction of having two of their own adult children celebrating Christmas with them in their adopted country. And when that is enriched by the addition of a new daughter, a new son and grandsons, there is triple joy and blessing. Our happiness becomes a prayer of gratitude and thanksgiving when "the children are home for Christmas!"

After Fifty Years at Saunders Grove

Mrs. E. G. Wade

SAUNDERS GROVE is a small rural church located about twenty miles east of Roanoke, Va., in Bedford County. Bro. H. C. Spangler has been presiding elder and Bro. H. N. Whitten has been part-time pastor since the fall of 1941.

The small wooden structure, built about 1894, was unpainted and dilapidated and we had for some years been pressing to have our church plant improved in some way. When we began to investigate, builders informed us that the old building was beyond repair and unsafe for public use.

However, there were some who insisted that we attempt to repair. So, at our regular quarterly council meeting on the first Sunday evening of July 1949, the matter was presented to the church. In the face of a large vote for a new building there were some who opposed the move on such grounds as, "It will cost too much"; "The people don't have money enough"; "It will place an indebtedness on the grandchildren of the community"; "The deed isn't sound"; "It is a union church"; "The people will not pull together"; etc.

After carefully considering all these angles a large committee was appointed to study the whole problem. This group consulted with the district mission board and had them meet with us in council. We also studied the deed and consulted our local commonwealth attorney as to any legal procedure. During this time we were collecting all funds possible for our building. Our goal was $5,000 before we began to build, but it seemed that $3,000 was all we could collect. Several methods of raising money were used such as coin cards, harvest sale, etc., but most of our funds came by volunteer contributions. At our annual home-comings we took offerings for our building fund. On one of these occasions we raised over $500.

We had offered to us three other building sites than the one on which the church stood. In a special called council, Oct. 30, 1952, a large majority vote was cast for the present location.

From that date the committee began in earnest to make plans to build. Bro. Johnnie Stevens, one of our deacons, clerk of the church and a member of the trustee board, was appointed building foreman. Vernie Stevens, Elwood Williams, and Sherrard Stevens were appointed to assist him. Mrs. O. R. Thomas and Ezra Stevens were asked to handle the finance. The lot was properly surveyed and the building site staked by a local surveyor. On June 10, 1953, Mr. V. V. McMannaway, a local road contractor, pushed out the foundation and our project was begun.

On Nov. 15, 1953, we met for the cornerstone laying with our district executive secretary, Bro Ora Delauter, in charge of the service. Donations of money and labor were rapidly coming in. The work was being done largely by donated labor in the form of Saturday workings when the whole community turned out to help build the church. The women prepared dinner and supper on the grounds while the men worked early and late. The ladies also quilted between the times of preparing and serving the meals. In this way in less than fifteen months, on Aug. 22, 1954, the building was completed and it was dedicated on our regular home-coming day.

This day was a high light in the history of this church. Bro. John Crumpacker gave the morning address to a packed crowd. Following a picnic lunch our elder, Bro. H. C. Spangler, conducted a stirring recognition service for all who had so wonderfully helped to make our work a success.

Since we did not have our new furniture or our heating unit at this time, we lifted an offering both morning and afternoon and raised $1,198 in cash, which was far beyond our fondest dreams. Before this offering was taken our treasurer reported all bills paid and $125 in the bank. We ordered our new pews, hoping to have them by the first of December. The Norfolk and Western railroad through the courtesy of Mr. Bernard Cook, general superintendent of their east end Roanoke shops where two of our men are employed, donated a beautiful bell for the church.

At the request of our district mission board to the district council of boards a donation of $250 was made to help buy the furnace for the new church. We did not make any kind of door-to-door, every-member canvass for funds; all donations of labor or money were freewill offerings. Building experts say we have a building worth $40,000, while our cash outlay was less than $6,000. The church building has a full basement.

We are overjoyed with the success of our project, without loan or grant so far. Plans were made for our first communion in the new church and our first revival in October with Bro. Dewey Fleishman of Boones Mill, Va., conducting the meeting assisted by our pastor and elder.

best, very modest places of worship. Many have earthen floors for seats instead of benches. Only city churches have electric lights. The organ and choir are conspicuous for their absence.

The villager loves rhythm and much repetition. The ability to sing is a boon to the illiterate Christian. Through song he stores his memory with Bible lore, and by the same agency he recites the outstanding incidents of Christ's life and death. Singing is hearty and inspiring.

Neighborhood Relationships

There may be advantages in living house-to-house, wall-to-wall—in a village rather than on a private lot. Such a mode of living, however, is not best suited to maintaining friendly relations with the neighbors. Privacy is at a premium. Goats, dogs, chickens and children often complicate neighborhood relationships. It is to the credit of the village Christians that under such conditions most of them maintain a poise and composure that is enviable. There is ample opportunity, however, for the pastor to exercise his peace-making talents.

India is on the road to industrialization. More and more, village Christians will migrate to the industrial centers and make their contribution to the city churches. It is encouraging to note that on the part of the more favorably circumstanced Christians of the cities, there is a growing sense of responsibility to help the backward village churches. Rural uplift and reconstruction have also become priority activities in the program of missions and of other voluntary agencies.

Rural Missions and Human Needs is the title of a thirty-two-page pamphlet which carries a summary of addresses and discussions of a conference on Rural Missions and Human Needs sponsored by Agricultural Missions, Inc. and the Division of Foreign Missions of the National Council of Churches. It is excellent reading for those interested in a vital aspect of modern missions. A limited number of copies is available from the Foreign Mission Commission, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. Southern California and Arizona

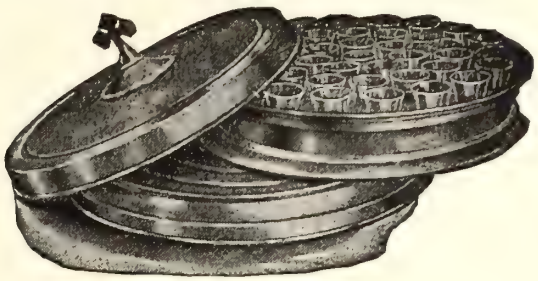
San Fernando Valley Community—The play, Servant in the House, was presented by a group from La Verne College. Hank and Phyllis Sheller were called to the office of deacon. Bro. I. V. Funderburgh, regional secretary, led in the consecration service. A family potluck supper was held in the form of a reception for all members who had been received into our fellowship since the first of January 1953. Union Thanksgiving services were held in the United Presbyterian church with the offering being used to help prepare the Rodger Jessup park site for Easter sunrise services. A Christmas manger scene was displayed in front of our church. Our men's work was in complete charge of the morning service on Laymen's Sunday. The young people sponsored a watch night party. Two have been received by letter into our fellowship.—Mrs. Marie J. Brubaker, Van Nuys, Calif.

Washington

Wenatchee Valley—Our annual harvest meeting, home-coming and a rededication ceremony on Dec. 5 climaxed our twenty-fifth anniversary year. Bro. Paul M. Robinson, president of Bethany Seminary, was speaker for the week. This week was followed by a spiritual life preaching mission, sponsored by the Wenatchee Council of Churches, at which Dr. Roy L. Smith was guest speaker. We are again enjoying the Sunday evening supper and fellowship hour with study and worship classes following. Our Christmas season was highlighted with our annual Sunday-school hour white gift service and a program by the junior department and a cantata by the choir in the evening. The junior high group again arranged an outdoor nativity scene with life-sized figures. Redecorating and other improvements in the church building are planned prior to Easter. Thursday night of each week has been set aside for a new class in Bible study which is led by our pastor, Bro. S. Loren Bowman. Seven new members have been added to our group by baptism and letter.—Icel Keim, Wenatchee, Wash.



Colorado

McClave—Our new pastor, Bro. Lyman I. Snyder, assumed his pastoral duties the beginning of June. At the quarterly council meeting church and Sunday-school officers were elected. Bro. Russell West of Wiley was installed as elder for another year. Our homecoming was observed with Bro. Merlin Frantz of McPherson College as guest speaker for the morning and afternoon services. A basket dinner was held at the noon hour in the fellowship hall which has been remodeled. A Billy Graham film, London Crusade, was shown in the McClave school gymnasium. A family social featuring a turkey dinner and a food shower for the Snyders was held on Dec. 15. The Sunday school gave a Christmas program on Sunday, Dec. 19. Since our last report two have been baptized and four received by letter into our church fellowship.—Mrs. Lee W. Graves, McClave, Colo.

Northern Iowa, Minnesota and South Dakota

Ivester—Our communion was held in the form of a candlelight service. A number of our women attended the women's sectional meeting at the South Waterloo church. An all-church night was sponsored by the W.C.T.U., which showed the picture, The Power of Decision. Our pastor and his wife attended regional conference. On harvest home Sunday, the Farm Bureau, 4-H clubs and our pastor were in charge of a special service which was followed by a basket dinner. Thanksgiving services were held on Thanksgiving morning. On Dec. 12 there was a song-fest at which Leonard Klinefelter was guest organist. On Dec. 19 the children presented a program and on Dec. 26, the older group gave a pageant, A King Is Born. Our white gift service was held the Sunday preceding Christmas. At Osceola—We had a special Christmas worship service on Dec. 24 and our first watch night service which consisted of a fellowship period, refreshments, the film, Again Pioneers, and a worship period. In a special service on Jan. 9 we honored two of our couples who were celebrating their fifty-fifth wedding anniversaries: Mr. and Mrs. Dan Cripe and Mr. and Mrs. Sam Stong. The occasion was unique in that Mr. Stong and Mrs. Cripe are brother and sister and Mrs. Stong and Mr. Cripe are brother and sister. Our pastor, Bro. Warren Shoemaker, led them in the renewing of their marriage vows. On Jan. 16 our pastor baptized one person into our church.—Mrs. Warren Shoemaker, Osceola, Mo.

Oklahoma, Panhandle of Texas and New Mexico

Antelope Valley—One Sunday night reports were given by those persons who had attended regional conference at McPherson. Brother and sister Earl Frantz of McPherson College were with us one Sunday morning. A number of our people entered a float on the theme, Put Christ Back Into Christmas, at the Christmas parade at Perry. Our Christmas program was given on Sunday night, Dec. 19, featuring the film, The Greatest Star. Bro. Harl Russell was with us for a meeting during November. Communion services were observed on Sunday evening, Dec. 12. The district youth rally met in our church. Brother and Sister Ernest Ikenberry gave reports of their work with the Indians in New Mexico. Shirley Crozier from our church is now serving in B.V.S. Miss Sarah Shisler, missionary on furlough from Africa, gave a talk concerning her work in Nigeria on Sunday morning, Jan. 9. On Jan. 12 our men's group met at the church to make some repairs and clean-up.—Maggie Cook, Garber, Okla.

Northern Illinois and Wisconsin

York Center—A number from our church attended regional conference. This year our children in the community collected pennies for relief in place of the traditional trick-or-treat of past Hallowe'ens. Interchurch Reformation Day services were held at the Lombard junior high school. Several of our group attended the adult and intermediate rallies at Mt. Morris. The CBYF sponsored a community Thanksgiving breakfast at the church. Following this the Lombard Community Interchurch group held a Thanksgiving service at the junior high school in which our church paticipated. The fall orchestra concert was given under the direction of Dale Johnson. The church again sent friendship packets to relief. There was special interest in this project after hearing Mary Elizabeth Wieand tell of seeing such packets being distributed in Kassel, Germany. The more recent development of our advanced program for expansion is the purchase of the entire block just east of our present church property for the erection of our new church. We hope to begin construction in the early spring. Our deacon and evangelism commission planned a program of evangelism in which visitation in the community by teams is the major part.—Josephine Landes, Lombard, Ill.

Middle Indiana

Akron Co-operative—Brother and Sister John Smeltzer have resigned their pastoral duties with our church. Our quarterly business meeting was held on Jan. 10. We have received four new members by letter into our church. We are making arrangements for a full-time pastor. However, at the present time, Bro. Ralph Hoffman of Roann is preaching for us in the mornings and Bro. William Shewman in the evenings.—Mrs. Fred Walgamuth, Akron, Ind.

Manchester—A leadership training school was held for a five-week period. Recently twelve members were received into our church by letter. At the November fellowship meeting of the women's work, Mrs. R. H. Miller gave an illustrated lecture of their recent travels in the Holy Land. Instead of our usual supper, canned food and staples were brought for the people in refugee camps. Our Thanksgiving offering was given to home missions. The Sunday-school children had a Christmas party, at which gifts of clothing were given for children of Kassel, Germany. On Dec. 19 a Christmas program was presented, featuring the adult and junior choirs, readers and a speaking choir. The golden wedding anniversary of our pastor and his wife, Brother and Sister H. F. Richards, was observed Dec. 19 with a reception at the church. We have a 100% Messenger Club. Mr. and Mrs. Virgil Finnell celebrated their golden wedding anniversary Dec. 29, and Mr. and Mrs. David Neher celebrated their sixty-ninth wedding anniversary. Bro. L. W. Shultz showed pictures of his European travels at the watch night program. Our school of missions began Jan. 9 and was held for four Sunday evenings.—E. M. Younker, North Manchester, Ind.

Monticello—At our quarterly council meeting, we voted to advance our pastor, Bro. F. Wayne Lawson, to the eldership. Members of the district ministerial board conducted the ordination service for Bro. Lawson. Several of our workers attended a meeting at the Lower Deer Creek church concerning the district's program of stewardship. Bro. Richard D. Speicher of Kokomo conducted a week of evangelistic services which were climaxed with a communion service. As a result of this meeting, five were baptized into our church fellowship. We participated in the observance of World Community Day at one of our neighboring churches. A number of children's garments and blankets were given at this time for relief. Our church joined in the union Thanksgiving service on Sunday, Nov. 21. On Thanksgiving evening we held our annual Thanksgiving service. The annual harvest supper was held in the Guernsey house when a dedication service was held for the proceeds from the Lord's Acre project. Both churches joined in the special Christmas program at which time the annual foreign missions offering was received.—Mrs. Sadie Dilling, Monticello, Ind.

Northern Indiana

Auburn—Since our last report Bro. Israel Gorden has taken over the church work here. We have a joint program with the Pleasant Chapel church. As a result of the meetings conducted in our church by Bro. Gorden, four were baptized. On Sunday morning, Dec. 19, the children's department gave a program. On the following Wednesday evening the young people presented the play, The Christmasing of Jasper. Our ladies' group is making bandages for the leper mission at Garkida, as well as participating in other relief projects. Recently we sent several hundred pounds of used clothing for relief.—Vesta Graham, Auburn, Ind.

English Prairie—Our church met in quarterly business meeting on Dec. 6, with our elder, Bro. Charles Stouder, in charge. It was decided to have a week of revival services the week before Easter with communion services on Thursday evening, April 7. We are also beginning a remodeling program in our basement. At a special service on Sunday, Dec. 26, Bro. Robert Lee Kraning was ordained to the ministry. Our church program is progressing under the leadership of our pastor, Bro. H. H. Hendricks.—Mrs. Lydia Walters, Howe, Ind.

A Place for Young and Old

SO YOUNG their downy feathers look like fleece, and yet so poised—as if they had known for years that they could sit in sunlit peace upon a stump and watch the wonders of God's world unfold before them. Already they feel at home in the warm light of a new day. Their days of splashing in sunlight are numbered for their brief lifetimes will be marked by only a few rings on the timetable of the ancient tree that now holds them. Why should not the stump of a tree that lives into centuries support the fleeting but happy days of three little ducklings, though their time is short? And why should not all that is crowned with age and experience, with tradition and honor, continue to support the new lives with which God blesses us? Both young and old, both child and man, both the new initiate and the revered elder belong in the fellowship of the Christian church. There should be room for babies to play, for youth to dream, for the tired to rest and for the aged to reflect—a place for all in the family of God.

The Best Way, Not the Easy Way

I read with a tinge of sadness in last week's Messenger about the practice of a church in Detroit having several communion services a year with only the bread and the cup. This is becoming more widespread with the years. I greatly fear that our heritage will be lost as far as ordinances are concerned.

When two ways of doing things are allowable it is human nature to do it the easy way not the best way. This can be seen in the history of baptism. Sprinkling supplanted trine immersion in baptism in some places because of illness. Two ways were practiced and gradually the easy way was used exclusively. That will happen with our love feasts—is happening.

I know that churches are doing what they think best in receiving members on former baptism (not immersion) and simplifying the communion, doing away with the prayer veil, etc. But I sincerely believe that this is a serious error. I believe that one of two things will happen if this trend continues. Either we will completely do away with our ordinances or a split will come about in the church. We all know the tragedy of the last named. There are too many splits now but there are many people and churches that hold these ordinances too precious to lightly give them up.

It will also be a tragedy in my mind if the first occurs. Unless we hold to these things that set us apart from others we might as well belong to others and save the expense of just another denomination. The most important belief of our church, so many believe, is our peace stand. But this is not the easy way out and people used to taking the easy way out will not change their pattern on just one or two things. I think the history of our peace activity proves this.

Let us keep sacred all the heritage of our church—Ellis G. Guthrie, Eaton, Ohio.

Too Many Parasites

God demands that we bear fruit, win others to Christ or we die spiritually just as the fig tree died when it bore no fruit.

None are too old, too young or too infirm to use the mouth or the pen to get the gospel to others.

There are far too many parasites in the church. Every convert should be taught his mission as a Christian is to bear fruit—win others to Christ and to begin at once. Become fishers of men, every one of you, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ for without him you can do nothing.

So many people say that through pensions and Social Security the government supplies all their needs, pays all their bills; they don't have to work. So why bother with God?

Are you saved? Are you a soul winner? Are you bearing fruit? Are you a fisher of men or are you at ease in Zion trusting in your government to take care of you? When death calls you will travel the road alone. Are you ready to face Him?—K. M. Brewer, Bradford, Ohio.

A Statement on Formosan Situation

The following statement, prepared and signed by Bronson P. Clark, Charles Woodbury, Dan and Dorothy G. Kinsey, John C. and Miriam P. Kennedy and Imre Domonkos, resident Quakers of the Oberlin (Ohio) Meeting has been released for publication.

"As Americans and Quakers we feel called upon to comment on the current action with respect to Formosa. Does the theory that a show of force or as the President put it 'to demonstrate a willingness to fight' strengthen the chances of peace? We respectfully submit that this theory upon examination is poor psychology and worse religion.

"Can we put ourselves in the position of the Chinese for a moment? What would be our reaction as Americans to a similar situation, if Catalina Island off the coast of California were our Formosa? Would a show of force change our hearts, or would we bide our time until a more propitious moment arose to retake our territory?

"We submit, that this current diplomacy leads inexorably to war, that it is a sterile policy devoid of creative ideas on how to deal with the real course of the growth of communism. Our policy in the Far East might well take its leading from the great statesman, Jawaharlal Nehru, who has consistently made suggestions on a step-by-step program for the reduction of tensions. As long as we disregard the right of Asiatics to have the same kind of security that we vigorously seek, we violate the basic teachings of Christianity."—Imre Domonkos, Oberlin, Ohio.

"'Do not lay up for yourselves treasures on earth, where moth and rust consume and thieves break in and steal, . . . No one can serve two masters; for either he will hate the one and love the other, or he will be devoted to the one and despise the other. . . . Therefore I tell you, do not be anxious about your life,what you shall eat or what you shall drink, nor about your body, what you shall put on. . . . But seek first his kingdom and his righteousness, and all these things shall be yours as well.'"

Matt. 6: 19-33, R.S.V.

SEEK FIRST HIS KINGDOM

Giving material possessions, food, drink and clothing first place will not bring security and peace; only a singlehearted allegiance to God will give radiance, joy, purpose, victory

IT WAS a thrilling moment last June at Annual Conference at Ocean Grove when the new Brotherhood theme was introduced to the Church of the Brethren. "Seek first his kingdom." It was a priest's call to confession that we have been busy with peripheral and secondary things and a prophet's call to give priority to the things to which true priority belong.

"Seek first his kingdom." This is significant not because the General Brotherhood Board concocted it as a catchy theme or because Harry K. Zeller, Jr., so eloquently wrote and read the challenge. It is significant because it is the call of the Lord. It represents the finest insights into spiritual truth, the most profound religious advice and the most mature instruction for real living ever uttered. When we get our priorities right other things, like tumblers in a lock, fall into place.

The setting for our theme is the Sermon on the Mount—that passage in the Book of Matthew which in a sense is a New Testament within our New Testament. Its more immediate setting, however, is a smaller passage of sixteen verses in the sixth chapter. It is a passage calling for singlehearted allegiance to God; to give this a priority above all other things including such tremendously important necessities as material possessions, food and drink, clothing and length of life.

Jesus was nobody's fool when it came to understanding people and their needs. "But Jesus," says St. John, "...knew them all. He did not need anyone to tell him what people were like: He understood human nature" (John 2:24-25, Phillips). Of course he did! He understood people—their dreams, their sorrows, frustrations, problems, poverty, labors, failures and sins. Yet this was not all Jesus knew. He knew also that man cannot live as it was intended for him to live—radiantly, successfully, joyfully, purposefully, victoriously, magnificently—when he makes material possessions, food and drink, clothing and length of life the center of his attention.

Pastor of the Westminster church, Maryland

Jesus struck at what humans tend so easily to overemphasize. Possessions are important. If Jesus grew up in a carpenter's shop he knew that. But he also knew there were no security and abiding peace there. Thieves can steal and nature by rust or some other erosion ultimately destroys material things. True treasure must be sought elsewhere.

Eat and drink—food—are important too. Jesus knew this. If the tradition is true that Mary was widowed when the boys and girls in the family were still quite young, the family probably knew poverty. Jesus was always sympathetic to widows and other poor folks. He probably had earnestly prayed many times—long before he taught the disciples—"Give us this day our daily bread." But he also discovered that life is more than food and that man does not live by bread alone.

Clothing is likewise important. Not only for modesty's sake but for the protection from the elements: the sun, cold, rain and wind. Mary as a widow probably had a tough time always clothing her children the way they deserved. But the body and, certainly, the life in the body are more important than its raiment.

Furthermore, length of life is important. Most people in Jesus' day did not live very long. Jesus' earthly father probably died a relatively young man, before the age of thirty-five or forty. More babies died than lived and mothers in childbirth died in incredible proportions in contrast to today. Disease, poverty, exposure, lack of medical science killed them. But why be overly worried about that? Worry does not help. By it no one can add one cubit—a year, a month, or even a day—to his span of life. Modern medical science is telling us worry actually shortens life. It is much better to live life to the full and mike it count and not worry so much about its length. The Master himself lived only thirty-three years.

All these things—possessions, food and drink, clothing, and length of days—are important. But, emphasized Jesus, do not worry about them, give them top priority or live for them alone! That is what the gentiles, the heathen, the pagan, the godless people do. But don't you do it! God knows you need them. In that sense you are like the birds in the bushes and the flowers and the grass of the meadows and the hillsides. God provides for basic necessities. You are going to get these things; you won't neglect them; God will not fail you. So do not worry about them.

Instead, "seek first his kingdom." Do this and you will have a "plus," an "extra" to life. You will have not mere quantity of "things" but a quality, a dimension, a reality, a life worthy of the destiny for which you were made, which the gentiles and worldlings know nothing about! Either you give his kingdom priority and live life or you give the trimmings of life priority and lose life. You must choose for "no man can serve two masters" (Matt. 6:24)

How is this done? In two ways. First, by giving ourselves

GOD'S PROMISES

MARY E. BROUGHER

God's promises are given
For us to freely take;
He asks for nothing in return
But love for his dear sake.
"Come unto me, ye weary,
And I will give you rest."
From out the past, he speaks these words,
And all our lives are blest.

Ask, and he will give it;
Seek, and ye shall find;
Knock, he'll open up the door;
We'll leave our cares behind.
No burden is too heavy,
No task is e'er too long,
For Jesus gives us strength to win;
Our sadness turns to song.

God gave his Son to save us,
From sin to set us free.
He lived on earth as man should live
And died on Calvary.
His life on earth is ended;
His promises remain:
"I go to make a place for you,
But I will come again."

Meaningful and Gracious

A LETTER on page two this week calls attention to what the writer regards as a dangerous trend in the church. He fears that we may lose the distinctive ways we observe some of our ordinances or that differences about them may cause divisions in the church. We share his feelings that either alternative would be unfortunate, if not disastrous.

Although in our own experience this "trend" is not so evident as this correspondent and some others feel, we think it is time to consider whether we cannot begin a more constructive "trend." First, should we not recognize, as our brother suggests in his letter, that churches are doing what they regard as best for all concerned, even though their practices vary? We ought to be slow to pass judgment upon them, if their practices differ from ours, until we know more about the situations they face and the nature of their ministry.

Second, instead of deploring a trend away from what we regard as the best way, should we not work harder to make these ordinances, especially the love feast and baptism, meaningful to all our members? This cannot be done by simply laying down the law in council meeting as to who may or may not participate. It requires constant interpretation by pastors and teachers. Many of our young people will testify that love feast and communion services at camp and conferences have suddenly become significant for their lives. But should not the same discoveries take place in their home churches?

It seems to us that two attitudes are responsible for our failures to make these ordinances meaningful. One is the apologetic attitude taken by members who secretly regard them as undignified or out of date. Naturally their apologetic attitude does not encourage respect for the ordinance or give any understanding of its meaning. The other attitude, which can be just as fatal, is a dogmatic attitude. We do not commend our ordinances by being narrow-minded or legalistic about them. We commend them by the prayerful and brotherly way in which we observe them.

But we need not be either apologetic or dogmatic about such experiences as baptism or the love feast. Other Christians may have other ways of encouraging sacrifical service and brotherhood, but most of them will agree that to follow Jesus' example in John 13 is a splendid way to symbolize and teach what all should practice. We do not deprive them of any blessing, we merely enrich their concept of "holy communion" when we add the service of feet washing and a common supper.

When Christians come to us from other groups, wishing to join our fellowship, we can say indifferently, "It really doesn't matter how you were baptized"; or we can insist dogmatically, "You must do it our way or we won't take you." But how much better and more Christlike if we can say, "We respect your conversion experience and the meaning of the symbols you have known. Ours are different. We welcome you into our full fellowship as a brother in Christ, believing that in time our practices will commend themselves to you."

Our ordinances have been recognized as means of grace. We ought to observe them—and share them—in ways that are both meaningful and gracious.—K.M.

Preaching Weight

THE NEW president of the National Council of Churches is Eugene Carson Blake. In digging up personal data about Dr. Blake the New York Times noted that he played guard on the Princeton football team in 1926 and 1927. His playing weight in 1927 was 195. His "preaching weight," says the Times, is now 215.

Protestant audiences may have many opportunities during the next three years to see just how effectively Dr. Blake, who is also stated clerk of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., can apply his preaching weight. We can almost predict that the vigorous six-footer will not be shoved around and that his weight will be pushing toward the goal of aggressive Protestant action.

We often hear comments to the effect that preachers should "stick to their knitting," meaning that the pulpit is no place for criticism of governmental affairs or economic policies. But a modern preacher, like many of the Old Testament prophets, finds that sticking to his knitting, which for him is proclaiming the Christian gospel, must inevitably bring him in conflict with vested interests. Just as Amos was critical of the business, labor and legal practices of his day, just as Micah stood up for poor farmers who were losing their land to absentee landlords, just as Isaiah and Jeremiah ran counter to the "war parties" in national politics, so the minister cannot escape treading on others' toes if he is faithful to his calling.

Thank God for ministers who, along with the "knitting" that is necessary in parish work, are willing to put their preaching weight where it counts most for righteousness.—K.M.

GHOSTS

Wayne Zunkel

Fear of atomic warfare leads us to create more deadly weapons instead of reducing the tensions that may explode into war

A GROUP of boys who walked to school each day along a lonely country road passed the long hours by teasing the youngest member of their group, Tommy. On their way was a deserted cemetery and they discovered that Tommy was afraid of ghosts.

When the setting sun cast its long shadows among the trees the boys spoke of the dangers the ghosts presented and commanded their young friend to do all sorts of things in order that the wrath of the ghosts might not be aroused.

This was great fun for them—until one day Tommy found out that there were no ghosts. His mother explained to him quite convincingly that they just did not exist and that it was foolish to be afraid.

The days for teasing Tommy were over. Try as they might, he would not so much as blink an eye. For now that he knew the truth about ghosts, his fear was a thing of the past.

Jesus had a phrase to describe what took place here. One day while talking with his disciples he said to them, "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." What did he mean? We too have fears which plague us. How like Tommy we are! And in these dark days we are especially beset with "ghosts."

There is an old adage which says: "He who knows all, forgives all." This is to say that if we really understand a person we shall be slow to criticize. Modern sociologists recognize this point of view as valid. So that now, instead of saying about a person involved in a crime, "This man is a criminal and must be hanged," they say, "This man is a criminal. Why is he a criminal?" And then they proceed to look into the man's background—his family and surroundings—to try to discover what helped to make him that way. They try to understand him in the hope that they might then understand his actions.

The Indians had a similar saying. They insisted that before you criticize a man you should walk for a mile in his moccasins. Travel the road he has to travel; walk in his shoes. They believed that if we really understood how life looks to this other person—the confusion and conflicts he faces—our judgments would be much kinder.

"Ye shall know the truth," Jesus said, "and the truth shall make you free." Did he mean perhaps that if we really knew the truth we could be free from finding faults and criticising? Free to accept people as they are? Free to love them without reservation?

If we really knew the truth about the peoples of other nations could we be free from the hatreds and fears which surround us concerning them too?

A young member of the Methodist Church, Bob Kraft, flew a bomber over Germany during World War II. But it bothered him to see homes go up in flames as a result of his work. So after the war he returned to Germany to visit the people whom he had helped to destroy.

To his surprise he found that these folks were just like himself. They cried when they were hurt. They laughed when they experienced joy. They loved and sacrificed for their friends and family just as we love and sacrifice for those dear to us.

Out of his experiences of learning to know those who had been his enemies, of seeing at first hand the misery which he had helped to create, he found that he could never again accept the misunderstandings and superstitions which are necessary for war. Out of what he had experienced he became a pacifist and returned to study for the ministry in his church.

Bob Kraft learned the truth about the people against whom just a few short weeks before he had been directing the energies of his youth in an effort to wipe them out. And having learned the truth, he was free—free from fears and hatreds, free to trust and love, free to destroy his enemies—in a new way—by making them his friends.

And if we knew the truth about our present enemies might not things be different today? If we had really known what was going on down in Guatemala, for example, might we not have had different attitudes?

One reporter, Carleton Beals*, who has spent his life in Latin America points out that 70% of the people of Guatemala cannot afford to buy a pair of shoes—not even sandals. And it has not been many years since they were recruited for work like cattle. Large ropes were tied around their necks and they were herded off by soldiers to work in coffee, sugar and banana plantations.

If we had known of their plight and understood their poverty might we more easily have understood their actions? We might even have come to the place where we no longer feared these shoeless children of God.

It has been pointed out that in their recent government there were but four Communists in their parliament of fifty-four. To be sure, any Communists in such a poor country is concern because communism spreads where poverty is great. But four Communists in a group of fifty-four hardly justifies the charges of "Red domination" which we have heard so often.

If we had known the truth, might we have been free? Free from fear and misunderstanding? Free perhaps from needless poverty and unnecessary bloodshed?

But we did not know. A tight censorship was imposed on the news we might receive. And so we sat by with fear in our hearts, as slaves to misunderstanding and anxiety. Slaves to "ghosts," really, which might have disappeared if we had but known.

Dan West has suggested that just as we have brought German and Austrian young people into our homes so now we ought to invite high school students from Russia. Why wait until after we have spent ourselves in an effort to kill each other off? Why not learn to know them now?

But there are those in our country who fear having us learn to know Communists—Communists who are not armed with guns or dynamite or intent on blowing up homes and factories but who are armed only with bad ideas. They fear contact with those whose thought patterns are different from our own.

Kermit Eby has chided us for irrational fear of Communists. Why, he asks, do we always think that if a Brethren talks to a Marxist he will end up being a Marxist? If we are really grounded in our faith it should end in the Marxist asking for trine immersion. And how are we ever to change them if we will not let ourselves talk to them?

The American Library Association recently said essentially the same thing. They deplored

*"Guatemala's Land Reform," Christian Century, June 23, 1954

Learning to know those of different nationalities will help us to understand them and remove our fears and hatred of them. Jeanne Schrock learned to know the German people when she spent a year with a German family and attended a German school (left). Eva Bussewitz learned to know Americans at first hand when she spent a year with a Nebraska family and attended high school the attempts which are being made to censor the material which Americans may read and the attempts of some to outlaw books with which they disagree. Surely, they said, the American people are wise enough to read material and arrive at intelligent decisions for themselves. Else what is a democracy for!

"Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." With all of our fear of free discussion one begins to wonder if we fear freedom. Do we fear give and take? In our struggle have we come to fear the very thing we say we are fighting for?

Last spring in a program to honor newsmen and editors who have been especially outspoken in their defense of a free press, one of those being honored, Edward R. Murrow, a commentator for CBS, in his acceptance speech had one very disturbing statement. He quoted Hitler who had one time said, "The great strength of a totalitarian state is that those who fear it come to imitate it." That is worth thinking about in days like ours.

In these troubled times we are confronted with the fear of an atomic attack. And so across our land cities are organizing themselves for civil defense against this danger. But it appears that in many instances at least we have allowed our fears to get out of hand. In New York City, for example, they estimate that it would take three days to evacuate the eight million people of that city as planned in case of an attack. Yet the earliest warning which could possibly be given would be one hour before the bombs would begin to fall.

The town council of the little village of Coventry, England, decided that in a hydrogen bomb age all efforts at civil defense are obsolete. In such an age the only safe answer—so they say—is peace. And so they have dissolved their civil defense regimentation, believing that if they are to be wiped from the map in one mighty blast, then they will be wiped from the earth in one mighty blast—civil defense or not. And in the meantime they have decided to devote their creative energies to more constructive things than practicing how to fall on their faces in case of attack, since they know it would not do them any good anyway. In an ultimate age they have devoted their energies to an ultimate answer: a world without war.

As our fears and misunderstandings push us nearer and nearer to war and destruction it is easy to feel that their decision makes sense. A former President was right when he suggested that perhaps the greatest thing we have to fear is fear itself. For it is fear that is irrational—as irrational as cowering before a belief in ghosts.

Let us as followers of the Christ dedicate ourselves to a more fervent search to know the truth—the truth which wipes out false fears, false hatreds and misunderstandings—that in knowing and following the truth we might indeed be free.

to the King. We sometimes would have the kingdom without the King. But we cannot have it that way. Christ alone is King. He is the one of whom the Scripture sings: "God has highly exalted him and bestowed on him the name that is above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow...and every tongue confess that Jesus Christ is Lord to the glory of God the Father" (Phil. 2:9-11, R.S.V.). It is to such a King that we must give our lives and, without reservation, be able to assert: "For me to live is Christ" (Phil. 1:21).

Secondly, to make the kingdom first all we do is realize how accessible it is and then make it first! The kingdom is offered to us to receive. "Don't be afraid, you tiny flock," said Jesus to his disciples one day, "your Father plans to give you the kingdom" (Luke 12:32, Phillips). "For behold," said Jesus at another time, "the kingdom of God is within you" (Luke 17:21); or "in you midst" as the new revision puts it; or as Henry Cadbury says it should be translated, "It's within your grasp;" or as a beloved teacher of mine recently put it: "It's here, it's available; you can have it if you want it."

A youth became a Christian. He refused to go into military service and kill his fellow men. When brought before the judge who tried his case, he told the judge of the kingdom of God whose law was love and whose citizens overcome evil with good and refused the law of force and violence.

"Yes," said the judge, "I understand. But you much be realistic. These laws you are talking about may be the laws of the kingdom of God, but that kingdom has not come yet."

The youth straightened up and said, "Sir, that kingdom might not have come yet for you, for my country or for the world. But the kingdom of God has come for me and, sir, I cannot live as if it had not come."

The conclusion of the whole matter is precisely that simple: The kingdom has come. We can have it if we want it. And once we have received it we cannot live as though it had not come.

"Seek first his kingdom." Let us all do it. If you and I do it the time shall be so much nearer when "the kingdom of the world has become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever."

Stumbling Blocks Can Turn to Steppingstones

F. C. Neumann

IN VIENNA, once the capital of the great Austrian Empire, there lived Fritz, a blond-haired, thin and pale sixth grader. The teachers did not like him very much because he was slow, shy and spoke so poorly that one hardly could understand him.

In Vienna twelve different languages were spoken. Fritz was fascinated by the beautiful sounds of these tongues and said to himself, "It must be wonderful to study foreign languages; it helps so much to understand and to love foreign nations and the whole world." One day, on his way to school, he saw, with his mind's eye, the Lord, who told him in a gentle voice, "Fritz, learn languages. It will create peace on earth and goodwill among men."

Fritz felt divinely encouraged and studied at twelve Latin, at thirteen Greek and at fifteen French. Dedicating all his time to the study of languages, he had none left for math, and he flunked math in the ninth grade.

Losing his scholarship, he faced the alternatives of paying a one-hundred-dollar tuition fee or abondoning his academic career. His father, a hard laboring tailor, said, "Fritz, I wish I could help you, but I can't. You'd better work with me in my tailor shop." But Fritz hated tailoring and remembered that the Lord wanted him to study languages. Unlike Americans, Austrian students could not work and make money after school because their long assignments forced them to study day and night.

Fritz felt most miserable. He lost his appetite, turned pale and hardly spoke a word. At night he wept into the pillow, suppressing his sobs, because he did not want to wake his parents who slept in the same little room they used as a kitchen and a dining room.

Fritz's mother, being unable to see him suffer, began to labor in a near-by shirt factory and paid the one-hundred-dollar tuition fee within a month. Fritz breathed freely again and started a new language, Esperanto. Besides, he studied math so hard that soon he proved to be the best mathematician in the class. At the university he added Spanish to his Esperanto, French, Greek and Latin. The Lord blessed him with perseverance and a thirst for the knowledge of languages. On the day of his graduation with a doctor's degree his parents gave him a beautiful Swiss watch, mother wept with joy, and on father's cheek Fritz saw a tiny tear rolling down, an event that never had happened before, for his father was a most unsentimental character.

Fritz started teaching languages at the Viennese City College. But he could not attract his students because of his poor voice. The college president said to him, "Dear friend, you'll have to improve your voice or. . ." Again Fritz felt desperate. He had studied languages so long and so hard and now he was not able to teach them.

Again the Lord appeared, this time in his study, and said, "Take heart, Fritz, and strengthen your voice." The next morning Fritz leaped out of his bed at 5 a. m. With the first streetcar he rushed to the Viennese woods, stopping at a waterfall that roared most violently. There he trained his voice, morning after morning, until it matched the roaring of the waterfall. Having acquired a clear and vigorous voice, he taught more and more language students, thus fulfilling the word of the Lord.

Soon Fritz was a well-established college professor, gave lectures in comparative languages and wrote essays for language journals. He felt happier than ever before.

However, one day Hitler with his murderous gang invaded Austria. Fritz fled to London. Curiously enough, he had never cared for the English language. But now, living in England, he had to adjust himself to speaking English—or to perish. Thus at forty-five, Fritz started like a first grader, learning how to spell and to read English. To improve his English, he read classic prose writers like Swift, Macauley and Robert Louis Stevenson, listened to London's best preachers at St. Paul's Cathedral and attended first-rate conversational plays.

Three months after his arrival in London Fritz knew enough English to open a little language school. His students were businessmen, university students, clerks and scholars. Fritz made his living all right and felt settled in England for good.

However new trouble arose. England declared war on Hitler's Germany. Fritz left for America. At New York Harbor, a tidy, elderly lady of the Episcopal committee for immigrants, gave Fritz five dollars for a hotel room the first night. Soon new friends helped him to obtain a position in a Brooklyn kindergarten. He enjoyed reading fairy tales to them and playing with them. All of a sudden, a seventh grader, with a freckled face and carrot-red hair, yelled hysterically, "Fritz is a Hitler spy." Then all twenty boys were afraid, repeating in a panic, "Fritz, you are a Hitler spy." They refused to co-operate, thus forcing him to quit the very next day.

Then there followed a period of four agonizing years when Fritz, unfamiliar with American high school boys, changed places pretty frequently. These boys could not understand Fritz and Fritz could not understand the boys. At the same time he wrote applications to two hundred colleges and universities. One sunny spring day, when Fritz had returned from his noisy Latin class he found in his mail an invitation to an interview from a college in Pennsylvania. They needed a language professor.

Fritz accepted the position and has been teaching there ever since. His language graduates or ministerial students go as workers or missionaries to Germany, French Africa or Spanish America. They speak Spanish, French and German, while trying to help the poor and needy in foreign lands to start a new life. At times aging Fritz receives thank-you letters from these pioneers of a new world brotherhood. Then Fritz's heart leaps with joy. For his language students fulfill the words that the Lord had spoken to Fritz when he was a sixth grader, "Languages help to create peace on earth and goodwill among men."

The Ebbing of the Tithes

An editorial by J. F. Saunders, reprinted, with permission, from the March 29, 1954, issue of the Cleveland Plain Dealer

ONE of the paradoxes of our prosperous times is the shadow of poverty which always seems to be encroaching upon a great majority of our religious institutions, especially the churches. You can tour around the city on a Sunday morning and wherever you see a modest steeple you will find muzzling into its base a covey of expensive cars reflecting the glory of the sun while the owners are in listening to the pastor beg for an extra buck to pay the gas bill, or make needed repairs or reduce the mortgage.

It is hardly to our credit that we require the men who devote their lives to the spiritual tending of their well-to-do brothers to spend nearly as much time soliciting the wherewithal to keep the temple in business as they do in trying to save our souls.

And yet most people are generous by nature and usually are willing to help if the approach is gentle and dignified and they are convinced that the cause is good. How strange it is then that we are so miserly in our support of the shepherds who work tirelessly trying to point the way to our eternal destinies!

Our pondering of the riddle has been sharpened by the appointment of the countess, who presides over our voting address, to be chairman of a church benefit smorgasboard, a project that is requiring the full-time labors of some twenty dedicated women. They are in their cars or on the phone all day long plotting the details and accumulating staggering quantities of baked ham, spaghetti and meat balls, coffee, pickle chips and desserts which they will dispense at $1.50 per plate in the church hall on the first Sunday in April.

When it is over, the gals will ease their aching bones down amid the chaos of garbage, leftovers and unwashed dishes to count up the loot. After subtracting the cost of the chow and the incidentals from the total revenue they probably will find that they have just enough profit to provide a corrugated rubber cover for the right pedal on the organ.

This will be their reward for weeks of badgering merchants, coaxing shy housewives into becoming deputies in charge of keeping the potato salad moist, allotting cooking chores, sweating over hot ovens and cleaning up the mess.

How much simpler it would be if all the faithful who will go to savor the smorgasbord could be cajoled into throwing the buck and a half into the collection basket and eating their supper at home. Then the profit would be clear and the gals would be saved all that drudgery of planning, amassing and serving the dinner!

How is it, you ask yourself, that a churchgoer who painfully parts with a dime for the collection will eagerly and even gladly pay $1.50 for what could be a mediocre supper or buy $10 worth of raffle tickets or spend $15 at a rummage sale to help reduce the church debt? Some clergymen attribute this inconsistency to a human nature that makes us want to see something solid put into our hands whenever we part with some of our dough.

This seems to be a highly questionable bargaining point for supporting the earthly work of the Lord when you consider just a few of the admonitions on the subject of charity that lace the inspired writings.

In the 18th chapter of St. Luke, when the rich man asks the Lord how to get to heaven, the answer is, "Sell all that thou hast, and come, follow me."

And St. Paul warned the Corinthians: "And if I distribute all my goods to feed the poor and if I deliver my body to be burned, yet do not have charity it profits me nothing."

And in another chapter he says: "Mark this: he who sows sparingly will also reap sparingly, and he who sows bountifully will also reap bountifully. Let each one give accordingly as he has determined in his heart, not grudgingly or from compulsion, for 'God loves a cheerful giver.'"

Not one word, you will notice, about any tie-in with a vat of baked beans or a slab of coleslaw.

Editor's Note — Mr. Saunders might well have added, from the 6th chapter of Matthew: "Where thy treasure is, there will thy heart be also."

SANE HEALING

J. W. Fyock

DURING recent years we have witnessed a great and growing interest in divine healing. Some of our independent and radio preachers have built up large and enthusiastic followings from among those afflicted, especially those with low incomes who feel unable to pay the sometimes exorbitant fees asked by many medical doctors and surgeons. And yet it is not uncommon to see the more well-to-do in the crowds seeking relief from disease and wrecked bodies. This writer has attended a number of such meetings and watched with great interest how earnestly and sincerely these people are seeking for health and, sad to say, in some of these meetings their procedure came nearly to bordering on hysteria.

The average minister in an established church finds himself in a dilemma. While he knows that Christ taught and healed people and that the first apostles both taught and healed, yet the knowledge of psychology, physiology and chemistry, along with the success of the profession of medicine and surgery, has largely eased the minister out of the realm of the ministry of healing. In more recent years many ministers have come to realize how much mind and body influence each other, and that minister and physician can co-operate in an important task which is both physical and spiritual. Today, many physicians, after diagnosing the case, recognize the root of their patient's trouble to be more of a disturbed mind and troubled spiritual condition, and they direct them to call on their minister.

Jesus taught and healed the sick and the disciples also carried on a ministry of healing

The trend of the crowds who find their way into the tents of the professional faith healers (and I recently attended one where ten thousand were said to be present) should cause our ministers to awaken to the opportunity. For all of two hundred years we have said to the world that the Church of the Brethren stood for peace and against war. But we did little else but "stand for peace." Then in World War II we began working for peace through our Brethren Service, and today we are known as a church that not only stands for peace but works for peace. In like manner, I think, we have told the world that we believe in divine healing and the anointing service; occasionally we engage in that service when called for by the sick. I firmly believe that if all of the ministers in the Church of the Brethren who believe in divine healing were to preach frequently on this subject and conduct public services for healing that much good would be accomplished and that our churches would grow. I am not advocating the radical type of sermon or practice that leads to lopsidedness and hysteria, but such as one described in an article by Harry M. Savacool in the May 1952 issue of Christian Century Pulpit, where in a write-up entitled They Shall Lay Their Hands Upon The Sick he describes the healing ministry of the Rev. Alfred W. Price, rector of a downtown Philadelphia Episcopal church. If people respond by the thousands to the professional faith healer what will they not do to a program of sane Christian healing.

The church, we believe, has been too conservative in the matter of Christian healing, and as a result "cults" and new denominations are springing up all over the world, dealing with healing matters. Maybe President Woodrow Wilson was right when he said: "If the show in the main tent had been all that it ought to have been, there would not have been so many side shows." This writer feels that it is time that the ministry and the Church give themselves more to the great facts of Bible healing, to the divine aid of the Holy Spirit through prayer and faith and the laying on of hands for the sick. There are within the Christian resources that are not human. God dwells within by his Spirit, and it is not impossible for him to produce toxins which can cure both the mental and physical sickness. It cannot be too much of a stretch of the mind of a Christian to believe that God with his exhaustless store is equal to the bodily needs of his children as well as their spiritual needs.

"Call upon me, and I will answer" is a ringing challenge to us today. Can we again hear him as he says," "According to your faith, so be it unto you." The writer of the Book of Hebrews says, "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, today and forever." That should settle it for us who believe in him. While he was here on earth he went about doing good and healing all manner of diseases. Before going back to the Father he said, "Greater works than these shall ye do." We do not recommend discarding the doctor entirely as some do, but we do plead for God's help first and for Christian physicians who will put religion with science and see the higher calling of their profession. We call to the ministers of our beloved church to awaken to the higher needs of their ministry. And at the same time we would issue a warning to our people not to leave their church and go after these "cults" that just emphasize healing.

I am writing as one who has benefited greatly from the anointing service and healing through faith in Christ, and as one who has witnessed marvelous results through sane Christian healing.

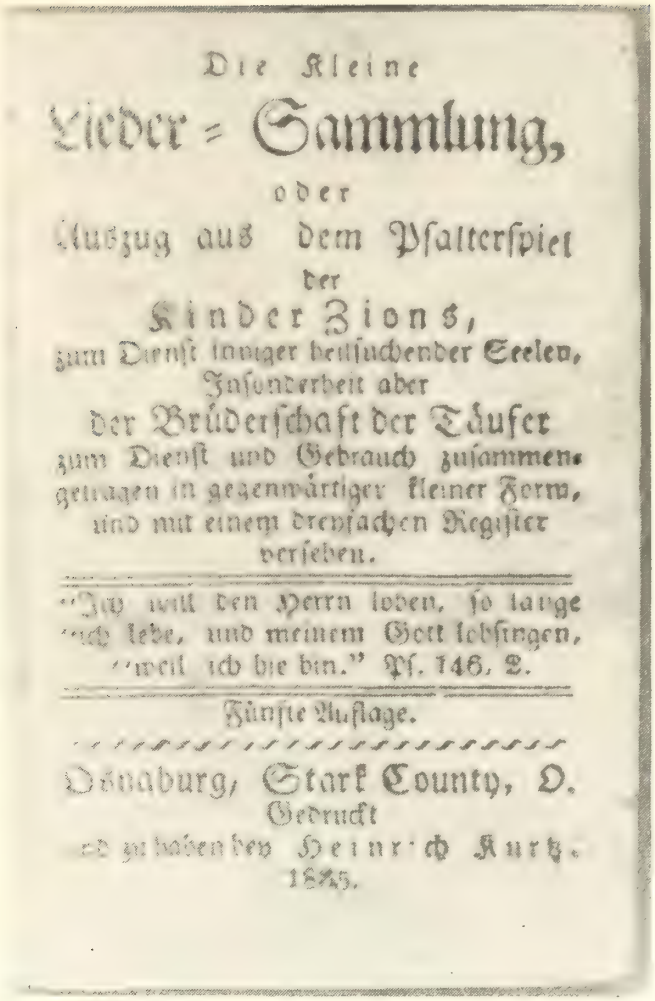
"E. Selection of Members to Standing Committee.

"1. In the selection of members due consideration shall be given to the choice of persons of the highest ability in the district and continuity of service on the Standing Committee."



Continuity is defined as "being continuous; an uninterrupted connection or succession." The word as used in the text seems either doubtful as to meaning, or as anticipating the effect of confinement or restriction to a class who have already served on the Standing Committee. Otherwise, how may licensed ministers or laity be elected to Standing Committee if the meaning of this term is strictly enforced? Licensees and lay members who have no membership record on Standing Committee would seem to be automatically disqualified within the meaning of "continuity." Therefore 1835.

HENRY KURTZ must have been a great lover of church hymns. At least a survey of some of his publications would lead one to think that. During his lifetime he compiled and printed many editions of both a German and an English hymnbook, and in his later years compiled a second collection of German hymns which was published by James Quinter.

Otho Winger said of Kurtz: "He possessed much musical ability, both vocal and instrumental. He was one of only a very few Brethren who possessed an organ in those days."

Born in Germany, Henry Kurtz came to america in 1817 and became a Lutheran minister in Pennsylvania. While serving as pastor in the Lutheran church at Pittsburgh, he became interested in journalism. There he edited a small parish paper in 1825. It was also at Pittsburgh that he broke with the Lutherans and moved westward into Ohio, settling near Canton. He soon became affiliated with the Brethren of Starke County, Ohio. Popular account gives the date of this moving as 1827, but there is a record of him issuing his parish paper (under a new title at Canton in 1825. Apparently, then, the date of the moving was sometime in the middle of the year 1825. At Canton he also took up printing and publishing activities as well as editorial work.

At Osnaburg in 1826 we have the first record of Kurtz publishing a hymnbook. It was a small collection of German hymns entitled Die Kliene Lieder-Sammlung der Kinder Gottes (The Little Collection of Songs of the Children of God). It contained 140 of the favorite German hymns and was prepared "principally for Dunkers."

One edition of this hymnbook has not been discovered yet, so it is not known whether the 1826 book is the first or second edition. The third edition was printed at Canton in 1829, a fourth edition at Osnaburg in the winter of 1832-33, and a fifth edition, also at Osnaburg, in January 1835. Kurtz's publishing interests were largely centered at Osnaburg until 1842, when he moved to Poland, Ohio. Osnaburg is now incorporated as East Canton, Ohio.

At Poland he reprinted the hymnbook again in 1844, 1848 and 1850, (the last one being a stereotyped edition). By 1835 the collection had grown to 169 numbers and in the last edition, 1850, there were 175 songs, including an appendix of 35 songs. This book was issued separately, but was often, especially in the later editions, bound together with the English hymn collection mentioned next.

The second hymnbook of Henry Kurtz was an English collection entitled A Choice Selection of HYMNS from Various Authors Recommended for the WORSHIP OF GOD. The earliest copy known to the writer is a rare 1835 edition bound in the same cover with the fifth edition of Die Kleine Lieder-Sammluing. It was customary then to bind an English hymn book with a German hymn book to better serve Brethren who used both languages. (The last bilingual hymnbook was printed in 1895 at the Mount Morris publishing house.)

It is stated on the title page that this is the third edition. So the origin of this hymnbook is likewise yet undiscovered. This third edition has 256 pages measuring 2 9/16 inches by 3 15/16 inches. There are 223 hymns, an alphabetical index and a classified index, but no introduction. Hymns familiar to us today include "Alas, and Did My Savior Bleed, Christ the Lord Is Ris'n Today, and Guide Me, O Thou Great Jehovah.

This book was reprinted by Kurtz at Poland, Ohio, in 1848 and 1852.

Student, Indiana University, Bloomington, Indiana

The latter edition was the most popular and widely used. The copy in the writer's collection is bound with the 1850 edition of Die Kleine Lieder-Sammlung, but it was also issued separately. It is a stereotyped edition.

In this last edition of A Choice Selection of Hymns there are 320 pages measuring 2 3/4 inches by 4 5/16 inches. It consists of 293 hymns including an appendix of 70 new hymns added to the 223 of the previous editions. The appendix includes such hymns as A Charge to Keep Have I, Am I a Soldier of the Cross, and Jesus, Lover of My Soul. There is an alphabetical index, a shortened classified index and still no introduction.

These two hymnbooks, in their various editions, were probably intended to serve the "Western Brethren"—Dunkers who had settled west of the Appalachian Mountains and were somewhat out of touch with their eastern Brethren in Pennsylvania and Virginia. The title page of the fifth edition of Die Kleine Lieder-Sammlung states "especially for the brotherhood of the Taufers" (Dunkers). This was the first hymnbook to state in its title that it is a "Brethren" hymnbook. It is possible that they were used by other groups besides the Brethren. At any rate, they were both significant contributions to the development of the Brethren hymn tradition. The German book was used from at least 1826 until 1870, while the English book was in use from before 1835 until 1867.

Henry Kurtz's third hymnbook was printed in 1870 by James Quinter at Covington, Ohio. Quinter had earlier (1867) published The Brethren's Hymn Book, a very important collection of "Psalms, Hymns and Spiritual Songs." Feeling the need of a new collection of songs for the German-speaking element of the church, Annual Conference selected a committee headed by Kurtz to prepare such a book. Its title was Neue Sammlung von Psalmen, Lobgesängen und Geistlichen Liedern (New collection of Psalms, Hymns and Spiritual Songs). It was issued both separately and bound with Quinter's book under the title: The Brethren's Hymn Book. Eng. and Ger. The separate edition was printed at least once (1870) and the combined edition several times, the last in 1895.

This last of all Brethren hymnbooks in the German language was made up of 303 hymns, including seven inserted at the end as genuine Brethren songs. They were composed by Alexander Mack, Sr., Alexander Mack, Jr., Peter Becker, Johann Nass (2), H. Donner and W. Preisz. One of the songs by Johann Nass appears in the new Brethren Hymnal as Saviour of My Soul (no. 361).

Henry Kurtz has never been accorded the recognition due him for his contributions to Brethren hymnody. After the Revolutionary War and the resulting westward movement, music almost became a lost art with the Brethren. Old Annual Conference Minutes tell how the Brethren were not permitted to own musical instruments of any kind,

The Family Counselor

Naomi Will H. K. Zeller, Jr. Jesse Ziegler

The Family Counselor welcomes letters of inquiry. They may be addressed: Family Life Department, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Dear Counselor,

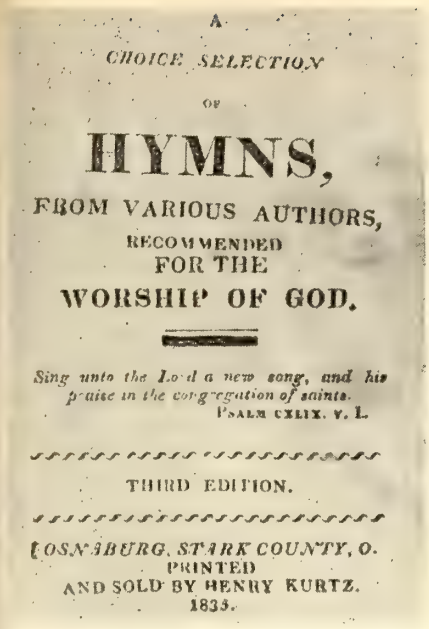
Can you tell me why it is that those we love most and live nearest to so often "jar on our nerves"? We are a young married couple trying to weed out the small vices that seem occasionally to throw one or the other of us off balance, to the point of losing tempers. Some words from you may help us to look at ourselves a little more objectively.

Twenty-six-Year-Olds.

Dear Friends,

Your little note is so interesting because it suggests so much living and the possibilities of so many common misapprehensions. I am tempted to try to fill in some details that I think I see between the lines. You have been married about three years. Before you married you were each sure that the other was the ideal mate. You even said to each other that you would never say a cross word to each other. And since you are married you know you love each other dearly. And yet—you do get irritated by certain habits of your beloved and sometimes tempers flare up. Let's look at it.

It is the very fact that husband and wife live intimately that provides many occasions for getting on each other's nerves. Nobody else's wife could irritate you by not quite getting ready on time, by leaving long hair in the lavatory by sitting and reading at the table while the dirty dishes wait to be washed, by interrupting you in your stories, by eating breakfast in her pajamas—they couldn't because you don't live close enough to anyone else's wife to know what her annoying faults are. And no one else's husband could irritate you by leaving his dirty socks and slippers on the floor, by forgetting to wash out the bath tub, by bringing someone in to show them the house when you have had a bad day and things are in a mess, by boasting a little, by making slurring remarks about your family—they couldn't because you don't live close enough to any other husband to know how badly he behaves in the little things.



It's not only the fact that you live so close but the fact that you love each other so much and have built up such a high ideal of what your beloved is. Actually no husband or wife could possibly be all that you build into your romanticised ideal. When the real McCoy misses the ideal it "gets on your nerves."

A husband and wife can help each other to eliminate some of the annoying habits by telling each other. But with that it is also important to tell each other the things you love and appreciate about each other. A beloved person will try hard to remember to eliminate some annoyances if he or she knows the other understands and deeply loves—and is not reluctant to express such love.

One other thing—your letter seems to imply that the fact that you get off balanee to the extent of losing temper disturbs you. Losing temper is not very pleasant but on the whole it is much more pleasant and healthier for everybody concerned than sulking and just freezing up. Disagreements and frustrations are sure to arise between a couple no matter how much they are in love. If they can just have the grace to talk things through it will be better for each of them and for their marriage.

I have suggested that the closeness and intimacy of marriage pave the way for possible irritation and annoyance. But, more important, it is that same intimacy which is fundamental to the deepest and most enriching love and fidelity. And this writer holds that the positive values much outweigh the negative.

Jesse H. Ziegler.

to give their children music lessons, to play any instrument on Sunday and, most of all, to have or use any instrument in church. It was probably primarily through the efforts of Henry Kurtz that good hymns were kept before the church at a time when music could have died out altogether.

It was Henry Kurtz whose printing activities bridged the gap between the Sower presses of Pennsylvania and James Quinter whose printing activities led directly into an official Brethren publishing concern. The last "Brethren" hymnbook published by a Brethren publisher in the East was in 1825. Beginning in 1825 there came from Kurtz's press in Ohio a steady stream of hymnbooks, children's books, a German New Testament, a book of household first-aid and medicinal remedies, and many other items relating to the life of the church, including the Gospel Visitor, the forerunner of our Gospel Messenger.

It was Kurtz who started James Quinter in the printing and editorial business. It was Quinter in 1867 who gave the Brethren what is considered by some to have been the finest of all Brethren hymnbooks up to our present new hymnal. It was Quinter with H. B. Brumbaugh who produced the first official hymnbook with notes in 1879. By this time the music revival was well on its way.

For three quarters of a century Kurtz's influence was felt directly in the continued use of his own hymnbooks. Indirectly his influence through James Quinter would be hard to measure. We owe much to Henry Kurtz for pioneering in the publication of a church periodical. But we are also indebted to him for keeping alive the tradition of good hymns during such a trying time as the first half of the 19th century. He is truly the father of our modern tradition of "Brethren" hymnbooks.

Teach Me to Cook. Alice D. Morton. Hart, 1954. 128 pages. $2.00.

This is a book for boys and girls. In it they will find recipes for some of their favorite foods with illustrated directions that will be easy to follow. Safety rules, cooking terms, recipes, menus make this a book to delight anyone interested in food—which surely means any boy or girl.—Hazel Kennedy.

* God Loves Me. Elizabeth B. Jones. Warner Press. 1954. 46 pages. $1.75.

Devotional thoughts for kindergarten and primary boys and girls expressed in verses from the Bible, stories, poems and storytelling photographs of children's activities. A worthy companion to the author's Round About Me.—Hazel Kennedy.

* This Old Leather Satchel. Theophilus Eisen. Christian Education Press, 1954. 88 pages. $1.60.

Here is the story of the boyhood and life of a minister that you will appreciate for its folksy flavor, wholesome sentiment and sound sense. Eisen began his ministry on the frontier in a newly opened section of Oklahoma. He tells how a husband and wife with a large family managed to entertain him overnight in their one-room dugout, built without benefit of plumbing. The situation was furthur complicated by the fact that the wind blew his pants away during the night. As you read the memories and reflections of this man of God, you will live through life situations that will tug at the heartstrings of your own inner self. The courageous spirit in which this aged minister faced retirement, without savings, on a meager pension is a bracing tonic worth the price of the book. In only one respect does the book fall below Brethren ideals: this minister smoked. But the habit is revealed in an incident the main point of which Brethren will greatly appreciate. This little volume will make a lovely gift for either a clergyman or layman.—C. Ernest Davis.

The World in Tune. Elizabeth Gray Vining. Harper, 1954. 124 pages. $1.75.

This is a small book of stimulating essays, written over a decade or more, on the theme of prayer by a spiritually sensitive Quaker writer. The intertwining and binding thought in the group of essays is that "prayer is the world in tune and that the upward looking and seeking of man finds a counterpart and a reinforcement in nature." The incorporated excerpts from the writings of other spiritually minded writers further illuminates the author's thesis.—Ora W. Garber.

District Fieldmen Met

Forty district fieldmen, including pastors representing district boards, and seven regional field workers attended a district leaders conference held at Elgin, Feb. 15-18. All but two districts in the Brotherhood were represented at the conference. The purpose of the conference was to help district leaders to understand their responsibilities and to acquaint the general and regional staff with the problems and concerns of district workers. Sessions of the program included an opportunity for reports from districts, for a presentation and review of the General Brotherhood program and for a careful study of field organization. Special attention was given to the work of district board chairmen and of district executive secretaries. One evening session under the direction of Dr. Ross Snyder of Chicago Theological Seminary was devoted to techniques of working with people.

Elizabethtown College

The campaign for capital funds — the initial phase of the ten-year development program — is progressing according to schedule under the direction of K. Ezra Bucher. The formal campaign in the Elizabethtown area closed with $108,000 in special and general gift subscriptions with gifts continuing to come in. In the Lancaster area, $80,000 has been subscribed to date. The campaign is now in progress in the Lebanon and Palmyra-Hershey areas under the general direction of Ernest King and Rufus K. Eby, respectively. Three areas to be organized after the completion of the Lebanon campaign are: Harrisburg, York and Philadelphia. Leaders for the Harrisburg area will be Earl Zimmerman and John Bonitz; for the York area: S. Gordon Rudy, Russell Hackman and Chester Royer; for the Philadelphia campaign: James Linton, Dr. Jay Eshleman, and John Speidel.

Second semester enrollment is 413. Five seniors completed their courses of study at the close of the first semester but will be graduated with their class Monday, May 30.

The Harrisburg undergraduate center of Elizabethtown and Lebanon Valley Colleges will enroll approximately 100 students for second semester evening classes. College courses for graduate nurses are in progress at York and Harrisburg hospitals. Enrollment in the two courses offered at York is forty. Courses in Harrisburg are included in the undergraduate center offerings.

Prof. Robert Byerly is offering for college credit an evening course in church camping entitled Standards and Methods in Christian Education. The course covers the philosophy, programming, leadership, curriculum, methods and techniques, public relations, management and equipment for camps.

The college a cappella choir under the direction of Prof. Nevin W. Fisher opened the 1955 season with a sacred concert in the Midway church, Lebanon, on Jan. 30. Scheduled to sing in many churches, high schools and civic auditoriums of Pennsylvania this spring, the choir of forty mixed voices will conclude its season with a concert in the Ambler church on May 15.

The annual National Office Management Association seminar will convene on campus on March 26. Sponsored jointly by the college and the Lancaster, Harrisburg and York Chapters of NOMA, the seminar brings together office personnel and teachers of business education from seven surrounding counties. Prof. Albert Gray, department of business education, is in charge of arrangements.

The Lancaster County Principals' Association will hold its monthly meeting on campus on April 13.

Dean H. G. Bucher has been named on a committee of the Commission on Secondary Schools of the Middle States Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools to assist in evaluating the Susquehannock high school early in March.

News and Comment From Around the World

EUB Church Plans Fifty Crusade Rallies

A series of fifty rallies in various parts of the country will be addressed by bishops of the Evangelical United Brethren church as the opening phase of its four-year "Crusade for Christ and His Church" expansion program. The purpose of the crusade is to deepen the spiritual life of church members, stimulate attendance at worship services, exalt the place of corporate worship in Christian experience and challenge church members to witness for the Christian life in daily work, communities and organizations.

Hungarian Journalists Hold Meeting for Religious Press

The National Association of Hungarian Journalists held a consultation for members of the Hungarian religious press on Dec. 15. Representatives of four Protestant, three Roman Catholic and one Jewish paper were present at the meeting. The editor-in-chief of the Hungarian Church Press, Dr. Imre Kadar, said, "We are all in agreement that we should endeavor to meet the needs of believers and show them how to face everyday questions in the light of the Scriptures."

Australian Appeal for Asian Students Successful

An appeal by Protestant leaders for Australian families to open their homes to Asian students taking courses in universities there has received a warm response. Leaders of Protestant churches in Australia pointed out that thousands of students from Southeast Asia were now being trained in Communist China, but more than 3,000 were taking their studies in Australia. If these students meet and make friends with Christian people they are more likely to take Christian ideas back to their own countries.

U.S. Sells or Gives Away $578 Million of Surplus Foods

The United States by June 30 will have sold or given away abroad 578 million dollars' worth of surplus farm products. The message sent by President Eisenhower to Congress in January showed that sales of 453 million dollars' worth (including shipping costs) have already been or are in the process of being negotiated. At the end of 1954 about 2,620,000 needy persons living in 33 states and Alaska had been certified by their state governments to receive surplus commodities. Pennsylvania had the largest number of persons (over 950,000) to receive free food.

Protestant Radio and TV Center Dedicated

A new $400,000 Protestant Radio and TV Center was formally dedicated recently in Atlanta, Ga. The center is said to be the only set of studios in America interdenominationally owned and operated for the production and distribution of religious radio and television programs. These are sent to several hundred stations in the United States and the armed forces radio network and are sometimes beamed behind the Iron Curtain by the Voice of America. The center is jointly owned by five denominations and three educational institutions. Among the network programs the center has produced are the National Radio Pulpit and the Protestant Hour.

Growing Demand For Mission Study Materials

More than 1,600,000 copies of books, plays, maps, filmstrips and films on home and foreign mission themes were prepared by the Friendship Press and distributed last year through denominational and other outlets. The Friendship Press publishes mission study materials prepared by the Joint Commission on Mission Education of the National Council of Churches. New publications are being prepared for 1955-56 study sessions on the home mission theme, Indian Americans, and the Christian Mission theme, The Christian Mission in a Revolutionary World.

CWS Sets $9,500,000 Relief Appeal

Protestant and Eastern Orthodox communions in the United States were asked to give $9,500,000 in cash for 1955 programs of overseas relief and rehabilitation in a united appeal. The 1954 goal was $8,000,000. The high point of the relief drive will be the "One Great Hour of Sharing" observance on Sunday, March 20, when special offerings will be made in thousands of American churches. In addition to cash contributions, gifts of relief goods from all sources are expected to total nearly $3,200,000 in value. These are administered overseas for the projects by committees or agencies representative of the Christian communities.

American Tract Society Has Most Successful Year

The American Tract Society completed its most successful year by distributing a total of 13,000,000 tracts and booklets during 1954. For over 130 years the society has ministered to the needs of individuals, churches, missionaries, missions and service organizations. The purpose stated in the society's charter of 1825 and still its guiding principle is: "To diffuse a knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ as the Redeemer of sinners, and to promote the interests of vital godliness and sound morality through religious tracts."

News Briefs

A new $375,000 international headquarters building for the Church of the Nazarene was dedicated by denominational leaders in Kansas City, Mo. The new building, which when completely furnished will have cost more than $450,000, will consolidate headquarters offices now maintained in other Kansas City buildings.

Dr. Elmer G. Homrighausen, professor at Princeton Theological Seminary, will spend three months this spring in Formosa, Hong Kong, Indonesia and Malaya, where he will consult with faculty and board members of the theological seminaries in each country to help them develop the most effective courses for training prospective ministers in Sunday schools, vacation schools, and youth work programs for the local church.

A news item in our January 15 issue was in error in reporting on the number of Jews in China. The figure given was 1,200,000. According to the World Jewish Congress the correct figure should be less than 1,000. At the outbreak of World War II there were around 26,000 Jews in China. In 1952 there were 1,200. The estimate for June 1954 was 833.

Christian influence is spreading in Tahiti, according to F. Henry Edwards, president of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. He recently inspected missions in Tahiti, Australia and New Zealand for four months. Mr. Edwards said that native superstitions are dying in Tahiti. The natives build their lives around the church, making it their social and religious center.

In the past few years the Pennsylvania Railroad has given away several hundred of its steam locomotive bells to churches. The railroad not only gave them away free, but in many cases paid the shipping charge. It gave preference to deserving missions and to churches along its own routes between New York, Chicago and Washington.

At a father-son banquet sponsored by the men's work of the Springfield church, Northeastern Ohio, the president, A. C. Mishler suggested a potato project as a means of raising funds. Bro. Mishler provided the two acres and the men gave an equivalent of three hours' work to pay for fertilizer, seed, spraying, etc. On May 24 the planting was done and on Oct. 2, more then twenty men, boys and girls of the junior Sunday-school class harvested the 400 bushels of potatoes. The net returns from the project were $330, which were used for Brethren Service and other needs

Bishop Dibelius, chairman of the Council of the Evangelical Church in Germany, declared recently that his church faces a dual task to watch over the unity of the German people and to promote the idea of peace and reconciliation in the life of the nations. He said also that the church had become the bridge between East and West, not because it had any political purpose in mind but because of its very nature.

Quotes in the News

Dr. Richard Niebuhr of Yale Divinity School: "The church in America has been, with all its wild diversity, very close to the people, much closer than in Europe. There is a deeply religious strain in American life. It is something that has always been there, and now it is coming to the surface. Students are interested in finding out more about theology. This can be seen in the development of departments of religion, the election by students of courses in religion and the appointments of college chaplains."

Dr. John C. Bennett, professor of Christian theology at Union Theological Seminary: "The Social imperative cannot today be attached to clear and shining causes—such as Christian socialism or Christian pacifism. Christians must work against overwhelming evils and can only try to get a little more justice here and a little more there."

Reinhold Niebuhr, Protestant theologian: "We are still preaching the same old gospel, but it is one that we have to preach to a generation which was once too complacent and which now is too close to despair."

Dr. John D. Thompson, associate professor of Christian ethics at the University of Chicago, speaking to a faculty group at Ohio State University: "The time has come when we can speak almost as freely of religion as we can of sex."

President Eisenhower speaking to the Association of American Colleges: "Our greatest potential enemy in the world is the frank exponent of the doctrine of materialism. In our schools, in our churches, indeed in our government, in everything we do, we must find a way to supplement the efforts of the home to develop Americans of understanding, of great spiritual beliefs, intellectual capacity and unexcelled collective material strength, in a prosperity that is so widely shared that we all march forward together."

. . . THROUGH EDUCATION

Ralph E. Smeltzer
Director, Social Education

This is the third in a series of interpretive articles in preparation for One Great Hour of Sharing

SOCIAL EDUCATION is the study of how the principles of the Christian faith may be used to guide individual Christians and the Christian church in dealing with, living in, and making more Christian the great social institutions in our society, especially our political and economic institutions.

"How can we deal with aggressors? What does pacifism mean?" Through conducting peace round tables and providing suitable literature, social education helps individuals to develop and clarify their convictions.

"How can I understand this complex business of international relations?" By conducting visits to the United Nations and to the Department of State and by encouraging hard study, social education works for a more intelligent understanding on the part of church members.

"What can one voter do? By organizing Washington seminars and encouraging informed political action "back home," social education tries to help Christian citizens express their faith.

"How can I apply Christian ethics in my job?" By stimulating conferences on the Christian and his daily work and schools of economic life in local churches, social education endeavors to give guidance for Christian choices.

"How can we advance racial integration in our community and in our church? Through summer race relations institutes, local study groups, and the encouragement of courageous Christian action, social education works to bring about an integrated school, church and community.

Program Areas

Social education aims to help individual church members along with boards and commissions of the church, to make the best possible Christian decisions and to take the most effective possible Christian action in relation to issues of: (1) war, peace, and pacifism, (2) international relations, (3) citizenship and political life, (4) economic life, (5) race relations, (6) social service.

On some issues such as the present campaign against conscription, the social education department of the Brethren Service Commission is asked to give leadership in political action.

Methods, Materials and Objectives

The department of social education makes literature and audio-visuals available to individuals and local churches in all six of the above areas. The department encourages the study of social issues in the regular church school curriculum, and the preparations and use of undated study units. It urges local churches to hold Sunday evening schools in these areas of concern. Special study materials are provided women's work, men's work, and youth work. Suitable materials are provided each local church for Labor Sunday, Church and Economic Life Week, Race Relations Sunday, World Order Day, United Nations Day, Human Rights Day. The monthly Washington Newsletter is provided each pastor and every local Brethren Service Committee.

Through the study of literature, through the use of audio-visual aids and through conferences, seminars, institutes, workshops and round tables, members of the church are led to recognize facts and opinions on all sides of controversial social issues. They are then encouraged to decide what position on such issues they as individuals, groups or congregations should take in the light of the Christian faith. Lastly, they are encouraged to act upon their decisions—to act through their church, through other voluntary organizations or through political institutions.

One further objective of social education needs to be mentioned, that is, study aimed at eliminating social injustice and overcoming the causes of social injustice, exploitation, hardship and suffering. This objective of social education is most clearly seen when placed in contrast with social service which aims primarily at alleviating and compensating for social injustice but does not aim at eliminating it. In relation to the social evil of war, social service aims at ministering to its victims, social education at removing its causes.

Publicity and Field Program

In addition to the program of social education, the department of social education administers the publicity and field program of the Brethren Service Commission and its leadership training program. The weekly Brethren Service pages in the Gospel Messenger are edited as well as the monthly periodical, Brethren Service News. Program materials are sent almost weekly to pastors or church school superintendents. Brethren Service workers who have returned from overseas or who are retiring from the commission's work are scheduled for speaking in districts and local churches.

The leadership training program consists of: conducting small workshops for local and district peace leaders, sending Brethren Service leaders to group dynamic laboratories, assisting in the training of Brethren Volunteer Service workers, and preparing leadership study materials.

The 1954-55 budget for the department of social education is $29,160, which is about 8.5% of the total

Brethren Service Commission budget. About 37% of the department's budget is used for social education, about 41% for Brethren Service Commission's publicity and field program, and 21% for leadership training.

At Home and Abroad

AUSTRIA

Marvin Blickenstaff, who replaces Dale Aukerman in the refugee resettlement office in Austria, writes as follows: "Recently we delivered a food package to a boy with TB. The good substantial food in these packages helps ward off the disease. Brethren Service has distributed hundreds of such packages to help families with TB afflicted members. The mother expressed her deep gratitude over the gift of flour, meal, sugar, butter, cheese, raisins and dried milk.

Visas for the Kurt Muller family were received the last of January. This will be the first family to emigrate on a fully Brethren sponsorship. Their sponsor is the East Dayton Church of the Brethren (Ohio), and their assurance was the first filed by the Brethren.

The distribution of twenty-one tons of surplus commodities consisting of cheese and butter has begun. Large amounts are being given to hospitals and old folks' homes in Upper Austria and also to welfare organizations who work closely with Brethren Service. Considerable investigation and work remains to be done in order to make wise distributions before warm weather requires refrigeration.

Compiling the yearly report of Brethren Service activities in Austria reveals the many activities and numbers of persons reached. Over 4,000 persons were helped substantially through the refugee health program, over 10,000 through the large fall distribution and 400 through refugee resettlement. Beginning of the heifer project, expansion of volunteer projects and development of the food package program for tubercular refugees have been the outstanding highlights of the year.

Three sewing machines, materials and other supplies were sent to Camp 115, Ebelsberg, to start a sewing course for the women. Two more machines will be sent in soon. Some of the clothing made during the course will be returned to Brethren Service for distribution. The women are glad to learn how to sew.

Little Opportunities

Janet Eller
Ftiodidos, Greece

Ragnild, the Danish team member, doctors "Bossy," watched by the Greek owners and a neighbor

SHE came to us with her unusual request after craft class was ended. Rulla was a typical school child, one of the poorer children, dressed in little homemade pigskin shoes, long woolen stockings, patched coat and cloth bookbag over her arm.

Since we have a first-aid box in our community center, children and grownups often come to us to have medicine dabbed on their minor cuts and sore fingers, but never before had we been asked to doctor a sick cow!

To satisfy the little girl, as well as our own curiosity, we decided to look at old bossy.

Arriving at the house we found the rest of the family—father, mother and two small, school-age children. In the yard were their animals, a donkey, a pig, a goat, a few chickens and a very sick cow.

Bossy looked bad—really bad. She had been hit by a lumber truck or bus, which left a deep, ugly gash on her right foreleg. As the father washed the cut with mountain-tea water he voiced what we ourselves were thinking: she most probably would not live! But a cow means too much to a Greek village family. She just had to live! We told them we would come back later.

On the way to our house we talked it over. We could do one of two things: Tell them we didn't know what to do and let it go at that, or try to doctor the cow and take the chance of having the whole village turn against us if she died and the family blamed us. It was a chance we would have to take.

When we returned we took with us penicillin powder, clean cloths and about everything the first-aid box contained. While "doctor" Ragnhild (the Danish member of our all-girl team) worked with patience and steady hands, our patient objected, but the family stood around watching every move closely and I just handed out instruments and medicine and was very thankful that Ragnhild had had six months' training in an animal hospital in Denmark. The work was soon ended. The possibility of seeing their precious cow dead next morning did not alter the family's wonderful Greek hospitality. We were thanked in two beautiful ways: by words, of course, and with a plate of nuts.

Next day, a little uneasy, we went back, and to our delight found Bossy alive and rather chipper. So the whole cleaning process was repeated, only this time everybody was happy, except Bossy, as we boiled water, sterilized instruments and put a rather artistic bandage on her leg. These same things were done the several following days: however, the family was taking full responsibility by then.

And what about "our" cow today? Except for a slight limp she is fine. What about those affected by this incident? I can't say for the family or my Danish friend, but it made me realize how easy it is to neglect or "almost" neglect little opportunities because we are always looking for the big ones which will bring us much praise.

"Bossy," the prize possession of this Greek family, is recovering from her injury

So You're the Junior High Leader

Anna M. Kepner
Gettysburg, Pennsylvania

IF YOU have the fortune to be classed as a junior high teacher or leader, perhaps you will be interested in hearing of some of the joys and the sorrows that have made the junior high gang one of the most talked about groups in our church. People have said kind things about us and they have said some not so kind, too.

This all began four years ago when the chairman of the board of Christian education volunteered my name as a teacher of the "intermediates" and I assumed the task with many misgivings and with quaking knees.

It was a November Sunday and the opening worship for the children's department was in session in the basement of our church. The five larger children seated in the rear of the group were my junior highs. The morning's program was far too juvenile for those five and they whispered and wiggled in true adolescent fashion. After this, the five shuffled up the steps to the little niche next to the entrance of the church. This was called our classroom. After stumbling over a relief box and pushing hats and coats aside we sat down in our little six-by-eight-foot room. Someone passed out the quarterlies which were the International lessons in our Brethren Youth Quarterly. The study centered about the wanderings of the Children of Israel.

I looked about the room. The five facing me were typical junior high youth—three chubbies, an average and a taller one who had grown too fast. Kenny was the lone boy who occasionally tried to get a word in while four girls chatted about female interests.

This was the situation I faced for a few weeks. I often wondered whether we would get out of the desert or die there with Moses. In looking at the roll book I learned that there were eight junior high youth on record, but the five I met the first Sunday were the regulars. These pupils represented different parts of our county and attended several different schools, so that they were not a closely knit group. They were very likable even though interests were varied. Each had his own problems and each his talents. The superintendent of the adult division asked us to take the devotions at the end of December. Two of this group did a fine bit of acting in dialogue and a violin solo completed the presentation.

As time passed we became friends and the group desired more fellowship than the class period could offer. We planned a Valentine party for February which was held in my home. During March the junior and junior high groups had a spring banquet. At this banquet we acted as the hosts and gave the entire program. Shortly after this we became greeting card salesmen and started a class treasury. Interest was growing and so was our class attendance.

The Sunday school conducted a vacation church school during the summer and as an activity we planned a hike along the Appalachian Trail. On this hike I discovered that within my group were some nature lovers. So as a small group we planned a few more hikes, had some cookouts and sleep-outs. Camping together is an excellent way to get to know one another and learn the rules of living together.

The fall months came upon us and we decided to carry our enthusiasm into a club program—meeting twice a month. Our periods included recreation, worship and crafts. We studied the nature Psalms and through the use of slides endeavored to create an appreciation for God's great handiwork which is expressed in nature round about us. God Who Touchest Earth With Beauty seemed to become our theme song. And through our fellowship God seemed to be "making us lovely, too."

The second year in our club periods we studied the history of the Church of the Brethren. The climax of our study occurred when twenty-five of our group made the trip to Germantown to see the mother church, to visit Brother Alexander Mack's grave and to eat lunch along the Wissahickon. En route home we visited the Cloisters, which are located at Ephrata.

As time progressed more activities were being demanded by the group. It took more of my time to work with them on their program. Additional hikes were planned into the surrounding mountain areas, more cook-outs and sleep-outs seemed to be the cry of the gang. The group was now welded together and there were thirty active and loyal junior high youth attending.

The growth meant only one thing for us; we were now ready to be established as a department. No longer are the junior highs something that is tacked on to the children's department or an additive to the youth program. It was most interesting to find that the newly promoted seventh graders want only to belong to the junior high department—"We want to do the things you do in the junior high class."

Probably the high experience in

Harmon

Successful leaders of junior highs give freely of time and self these first three years occurred when we took the ninth graders on a two-day camp-out into the mountain area. We slept on the ground, cooked our own meals over open fires and shared some intimate ideas with one another. The group that went with us became completely united and though they have been promoted to the senior high youth class, they have kept a solid loyalty interest to the class and to one another.

I think the secret of the success within our group is the giving of our own time and becoming identified with the group. I have only my week ends at home, so I do not give as much time to the work as I sometimes wish I could. In looking over the 1954 program I found that there were twenty-one activities for our junior high group in addition to the regular Sunday morning classes and their sixteen club periods. And there were also times when some individual members need extra companionship.

If you are a junior high teacher or leader, show a genuine interest in each of them. Spend time to work and plan their program with them. Things will happen so fast that you probably will not be able to keep up with your gang. And you will be thrilled just to pause occasionally and view the activity from a greater perspective. No, things do not always run smoothly. Parents sometimes object to too much activity and to their getting home a little late. And when the junior high youth make too much noise on Sunday morning during the worship hour, you're the first to hear about it. But all of these heartaches vanish and are forgotten when you see your group do some worth-while production and the grownups laud their work.

The way to success is giving time and yourself.

Make your church membership class meaningful to children by placing a book in their hands which they can read with pleasure and understanding. Learning the Brethren Way With Jim and Jane was written for this purpose. Church practices and ordinances come alive with meaning as children identify themselves with the children in these stories.

One boy told his grandfather, who took him a copy of this book at the time of his baptism, "I have already read it. Why, that's where I got the idea that I would like to be baptized."

Evening Vacation Church School

Mrs. Fred Hollingshead
Harrisburg, Pennsylvania

ON MONDAY evening after Annual Conference, the doors of the First Church of the Brethren, Harrisburg, Pa., opened for vacation church school with the policy of serving whoever would come. Consequently, there were white children, our Negro neighbors and our Mexican family. Children of various denominations and the Catholic Church were a part of our school, thus concluding ten years of an evening church school.

In an effort for the church to minister to the immediate community as well as the church constituency, it was necessary to have a house-to-house survey in the vicinity of the church. The purpose of the survey was twofold: to invite children to our vacation church school and to discover any unchurched children. Six youth accomplished this project during some very hot days. It was gratifying to find that most of the children near by are affiliated with some church. A few went to morning school and attended our evening school. Approximately one fifth of the total enrollment was from the community. A follow-up plan in the interest of Sunday school and church was instituted.

To reach the total church constituency, voluntary secretarial help prepared a double postcard addressed to all church families with children of vacation church school age. The one card included an invitation addressed to the parents to enroll their children. This card stated the time, date, theme and purpose of this year's school. The enrollment card to be returned included space to list children's names, ages, grade the past year and name and address of parents. Also, there were listed in a transportation section all the main sections of Harrisburg with their drivers. By a simple check, needed transportation could be indicated. When the cards were returned, another secretary made transportation lists according to areas and prepared complete lists for the transportation chairman. Enrollment information was transferred to attendance cards.

The evening time from 7:00 to 8:45 p.m. was chosen for our school because of the fact that our leaders are too involved during the day with work responsibilities.

On the first night of the school, a message to parents, explaining the concepts of the church was sent to each home. Since this was the year that The Church was the theme designated by our children's leaders of co-operating protestantism, we used the available graded texts in the Judson and the Co-operative Series as recommended by our national children's work leaders. It was certainly interesting to note how the boys and girls quizzed the adults about the history and maintenance of our local church as well as churches.

Various means of interesting the children were used. Departmentalized worship contributed to children's understanding and participation. Six audio-visuals were used in graded presentations: Bobby and Jane's Discovery, Bill's Decision, The Church at Work Today, Sunday School Around the World, The Story of the Christian Church and United in Christ. Correlated activities were helpful in their range from the simple expressions of love and art of the small four-year-olds to the more extensive work of creativity in making churches, a panorama of the Christian church, a time line of the church from the time of Christ, the exterior of a catacomb and a replica of our own church building. Catholic children seemed most interested in this project.

One of our members, eighty years old, from the Brethren Home told of the beginning of this church. In her vivacious manner she reminisced so well the children loved her. One Negro boy, at the close of her talk, took her by both arms and said, "My, you told us such nice stories."

The children were indeed happy at the end of two weeks to discover their offering for the Ten Dollar Club fund for new churches had amounted to $93.24 after the sharing program (later raised to $100).

It meant a great deal of sacrifice for many of the twenty-nine leaders to take their part on the faculty, to be secretaries and playground help; others to be on the transportation committee of fifteen. Some teachers drove sixteen to twenty miles each evening. Parents of the 107 enrolled children were co-operative. The co-directors felt a definite spirit of co-operation as they worked together in the name of Christ for the extension of his kingdom at this place.

The Church Abroad

Interviewing the Foreign Mission Secretary

Kenneth Morse, editor of the Gospel Messenger, interviews Leland S. Brubaker, secretary of the Foreign Mission Commission of the General Brotherhood Board, concerning the deputation trip to our work in Nigeria, W. Africa. Norman J. Baugher, general secretary of the Board, and W. Clayton Bershire, secretary of the Missionary Board of the Brethren Church, were also members of the deputation party. To eliminate repetition of names in the interview, the questions asked by Bro. Morse are given in italics.

What was the purpose of your visit to Nigeria?

First, we wanted a chance to talk to all the missionaries, to see them at work at their stations and to find out just how they feel about their work. Second, we wanted to be able to see for ourselves exactly what is happening over there and to try to understand the trends of their present work. Third, we might be able to give them encouragement. Fourth, if we felt any policies should be changed or modified we could call that to their attention. One of the greatest benefits that can come from such a visit, I believe, is in the administrative area. Constantly the board faces decisions on problems that arise over there.

Did you try to see every missionary, every station and every village in which we have work?

We saw every missionary. We were in every major mission station except Wandali. This station was closed for over a year and the Robert Hesses were moving in just about a day before our schedule called for us to visit there. But we did see every missionary. We were in some villages where we have CRI's or other Christian work.

What are CRI's?

CRI's are classes of religious instruction. We have about a hundred of them. They are held right out in the villages. We might call them literacy classes, because one of the ideas is to teach the people of the villages to read, but at the same time the major purpose is to teach the Christian religion. They might be called the cutting edge of the church in Nigeria.

Would the district meeting correspond to our district meetings here at home?

We had a district meeting there the first part of December. All the organized churches sent their representatives. They had their moderator. They had their business sessions and they decided items of interest and of importance to the church, much as we do in our district meetings.

Were there delegates from each church?

Right.

The moderator would be a missionary?

The moderator was a missionary.

The delegates would be nationals?

There were some missionaries as delegates, but the major part of them were nationals.

Then the decisions affecting the district in Africa were made largely by Africans?

The majority by far of the delegates at district meeting were Nigerians.

That leads to another question. Are we developing an indigenous church in Nigeria? Are the Africans taking responsibility also in the local churches?

Local churches there are organized similarly to the way they are organized here. Every church has its elder and its church board but not all the committees and boards we have here. One of the committees that has a great deal of weight is called the Church Discipline Committee. In almost every church most of the discipline problems are handled by that committee on which, as I understand it, the majority are Nigerians. Some of the missionaries told me that they have very little to do with the discipline problem, unless it comes to the point of expelling a person from the church; then the elder, at the present time a missionary, is always present.

Do we have any elders who are Nigerians?

We do not.

Are there any Nigerian Christians who are ministers?

We have one minister, Bassey Minso. We had a class of six men who took a pastors' training course for two years at Chibuk under the direction of Ira Petre. It is likely that four of these men will be licensed to the ministry.

What is the chief discipline problem?

The main problem that faces the church in Nigeria and one that gives no end of trouble is that of polygamy. You are dealing with a cultural pattern that has been ingrained in their very nature.

In one of your letters you called attention to a Christian leader who ate his meals with his wife and children. Is that an indication of a definite break with the former pattern?

Very much so. Over there a woman never eats with her husband. In fact, at communion time everybody brings his own food. The wife prepares the food for her husband but she always kneels when she presents it to him because he is lord and master and she is the servant. Among the Christians this concept is gradually breaking down through the influence of the gospel.

Are there any national leaders, such as the chief of a local tribe or some other person with responsibility, who have become active in the church?

A number of our fine Christians are now assuming roles in the political area. I'd like to mention Madu, one of our fine deacons at Marama. He is employed as the dispenser and is well trained. He is one of the best Christian men we have in the church at Marama. He took a training course under Ira Petre for two years and made excellent progress in it. Madu was running for a position on the intercouncil of the emir at Biu, which would put him on the intercouncil of the main chief of that whole area. I have not heard whether he was elected or not. Another is Risku, a member of this emir's council up north, not at Biu. When we were staying with the governor, he said that Risku is one of the finest men he had in the whole council and he respects what Risku has to say.

Then the resident, who is equal to a governor here, told of another instance when he went out to see a chief, a national who was a district officer, and said to him, "It would be so much easier if you had a person on your council who could read and write. I could send you these bulletins and you could discuss them among yourselves, and then when I come you could ask questions. As it is, I have to come and read it to you, discuss it with you, leave it with you and then come back again." The district officer said, "Well, it is true that nobody on our council can read and write." Then the resident asked, "Why don't you find somebody that can read and write? It would be so much easier." The district officer did not hesitate very long; he said, "We can take care of that. Right down the road is a Christian, a very fine man; he can read and write. We'll invite him to be a member of the council." In a short time, the resident told us, they had a Christian man on their council who would be a real asset. Of course, the greatest asset, as we see it, is the influence that he will bring to the council as a Christian.

Charles and Rozella Lunkley make an observation on "dead wood" in local churches — "In talking over the problems of the church it was mentioned that one of the major problems was the 'dead wood' in the church. Mr. Amos Sule, one of the deacons, made a significant observation when he said that as we look at it we may think that there is much dead wood. However, he went on, we all know that the master of a farm must water his trees if he wants them to produce. This wood may not all be dead and if it were watered carefully and frequently much of it would revive and could soon be producing the richest of fruits. I think this comment from an African Christian, who is hardly literate, is good advice to any church that is concerned about the 'dead wood' of its congregation."

"The seven weeks that we were in language study we were living in a mud hut with grass roof and cement floor twelve feet in diameter. We tried to spend six hours a day in language study. One hour with our teacher, one hour in translation work, two hours in the Nigerian junior primary school listening to the teachers teach in Bura and listening to the pupils talk and also observing their methods of running a school. Sometimes we would come home so tired from trying so hard to hear what was being said. Learning a foreign language, we find, is truly difficult. One must learn the habits and the thinking of the people before one can speak the language in such a way that the Bura understands what you are trying to say."

A hopeful sign for the Chinese work is the number of small children coming to the Sunday school

Chinese Work in Chicago

Mr. and Mrs. Elgin S. Moyer

IN FEBRUARY the Chinese Sunday school and church of the First Church of the Brethren in Chicago celebrated its forty-seventh anniversary. The Chinese Sunday school was started in February 1908 by Bethany Bible School, when Bethany was on Hastings Street. Bro. George W. Hilton, one of our pioneer missionaries to China, was a leading factor in starting our mission.

The Sunday school was moved to 3435 Van Buren Street, when the Bible School was moved to the west side. For many years the Sunday school continued on the Bethany premises and was largely supervised by Bethany. In more recent years, however, the Chinese Sunday school and church has been under the supervision of First church and has held its meetings and services at the church. The Seminary, however, has maintained a definite interest in the work, and has continuously provided teachers from the student body. Thus the work for years has been conducted through the cooperation of members of First church, both American and Chinese members, and of students of Bethany Biblical Seminary.

Through the years the attendance has varied considerably. The highest average attendance of Chinese pupils for any one year was more than forty, which was perhaps thirty or thirty-five years ago. At other times the attendance has been very low. The average attendance through the years has been somewhat below thirty. At present the attendance is above the general average and is increasing at an encouraging rate.

With a newly developed interest among our Chinese young people, and the good response we are getting from the smaller children, we hope to see our attendance and interest further increasing.

For a long time some of us leaders have been hoping and praying for a development of leadership and consecration to the Lord's work among our young Chinese Christians. Recently our prayers have been partially answered as a new interest has developed among our young people. Two or three of our young Christians last fall called for a special meeting of the few young people who were attending Sunday school. They planned for some special young people's meetings and activities. Within a few weeks several young people returned to Sunday school and some new people entered the fellowship. Now an active organization has been effected and is being carried on by themselves with one of the teachers, a young married man from the Seminary as advisor. We are praying for and expecting further growth and developments from this young people's fellowship.

Another bright and hopeful sign of our work is the hearty response we are receiving from a goodly number of smaller children. It is a heartening experience and pleasing sight to see from ten to fifteen little Chinese children present at Sunday school. In the earlier years we had no children in Sunday school. In fact, there were but few Chinese women and children in the city.

Now one of the important activities of our work is that which is being done in the homes. A full-time missionary is being supported by our Chinese people and by present and former teachers of the Chinese Sunday school. Also a part-time missionary is receiving some support from the church. Almost from the beginning of our Brethren Volunteer Service program we have been allotted a B.V.S. worker to assist in this work of teaching in the Chinese homes.

Our weekly program at the church comprises a triple session each Sunday afternoon. From two to three is the period for young people's activities; from three to four, Sunday-school session; and from four to five, worship hour. The worship period is quite like any other church worship hour, with songs, prayer, offering and message. Sometimes the sermon is in Chinese and sometimes in English. Since our Chinese church has no regular pastor or minister, the messages are brought by various individuals, sometimes by

Mr. and Mrs. Elgin Moyer

Chinese Christians and sometimes by teachers or missionaries. Occasionally the pastor of the First church preaches for us. Our elder, Bro. Chalmer Faw, on the first Sunday of the year, conducted the installation service for our Sunday school and church.

Although the Chinese church in Chicago is a part of the First church and the members are members of First church, because of language barriers and because of their peculiar work program, it has been impossible to blend the Chinese church service with the regular Sunday morning worship service of the church. So all through the years our Chinese Sunday school and church have been conducted on Sunday afternoon.

The work of the Chinese Sunday school and church continues with a marked loyalty on the part of both the Chinese members and the other members of the First church in Chicago. A good work has been done and is being done by the church for our Chinese friends in our city.

Church News

Oregon

Albany—We were host church to the district ministers' meeting in December. Bro. Harl Russell of Elgin, Ill., and Bro. I. V. Funderburgh of La Verne, Calif., were with us to help plan our financial program. After this meeting an every-member canvass was made by the lay members of the church. We now have an organized church choir.—Miss Lorrene Freerkson, Albany, Oregon.

Portland—Our church building has been sold and we are now holding services in a hall at 635 North Killingsworth Court. A sign has been placed on the church property stating that a new community church will be erected at this location. At Christmas time the junior aid group made and donated a number of stuffed dolls to the home for the mentally retarded children at Fairview. The children's program was given on Sunday, Dec. 19. The choir presented the cantata, Star in the Sky, following the children's program. Instead of having a gift exchange at Christmas, each person gave a donation of money to the heifer fund. In the absence of our pastor, Bro. Norcross delivered a morning message on the subject of heifers for relief. Several members have been received into our fellowship by letter.—Marion Etta David, Portland, Oregon.

Washington

Sunnyslope—At the fall council meeting our pastor, Noble Deardorff asked to be relieved of pastoral duties effective Jan. 1. Jay Eller took over the duties of the church until Sept. 1 or until the church secures a regular pastor. Early in December we purchased a new organ to help in our worship services. Our Sunday-school attendance for last year has grown to the point where we will soon need more classroom space. The ladies' Dorcas circle has chosen as its year's project sewing and rolling of bandages for the hospital in Africa. — Mrs. Stanley Deardorff, Soap Lake, Wash.

Middle Iowa

Iowa River—Since our last report nine persons have been received into our church fellowship by letter. One young person from our church attended the National Youth Conference. Six of our women attended the sectional women's rally meeting at the Des Moines valley church. Our church was host to the sectional youth rally in November. A fellowship supper in the church basement preceded the Christmas program on Sunday evening, Dec. 19. The children of the Sunday-school department gave a program which was followed by the pageant, Adoration of the Kings and Shepherds, presented by the young people. Two of our young people and our pastor were in attendance at the state youth rally in the Panther Creek church. During the month of January a school of mission using India as the theme was conducted under the direction of Miss Elizabeth Mohler. Our new parsonage has been completed and we are looking forward to the dedication service in the near future. During the past year a steady increase has been noted in our church and Sunday-school attendance.—Mrs. Fern Miller, Marshalltown, Iowa.

Northeastern Kansas

Sabetha—Five new members were added to our church by baptism. A two-week revival was conducted in our church by Archie Patrick of Garden City, Kansas. Our women's work group is collecting funds for remodeling the floor of our auditorium. This group is also collecting bedding and clothing for relief. The men's organization meets once a month. One of the men's projects has been a fish fry. Our Christmas program was given by the children and the young people. —Delta Livengood, Sabetha, Kansas.

Southwestern Kansas

Wichita, First—At the beginning of the new year our church began a school of missions which was held each Sunday evening during the month of January. Our Christmas program was given Dec. 17 with all ages participating in it. The CBYF served its annual chili supper on New Year's Eve followed by a talent show and a watch night party. During the Christmas season white gift baskets were distributed and a cash offering was presented to the Share Our Surplus program. Our church co-operated with neighboring city churches in the Thanksgiving service at the Calvary Presbyterian church. At a potluck supper the men's work voted to organize a credit union. In a hymn-writing contest our pastor's wife, Patricia Kennedy Helman, received first place with her hymn, O Gracious Father, Loving Lord. Music for the hymn was provided by Mrs. Marlys Blough Swinger. Kenneth Brown was relicensed to the ministry. As a result of Bro. Helman's pre-Christmas evangelistic sermons, four were received into our church, two by letter and two by baptism.—A. B. McAuley, Wichita, Kansas.

Oklahoma, Panhandle of Texas and New Mexico

Waka—We co-operated in the community vacation Bible school which was held in the near-by school building and in our church. Junior church services reconvened on Oct. 10, with Mrs. H. N. Elledge and Mrs. G. A. Burger as leaders. Bro. Harl Russell, Brotherhood Fund secretary, talked at two services in our church. Brother and Sister X. L. Coppock conducted a week of evangelistic meetings. Our Christmas program was presented on Dec. 19. Our church co-operated in the interchurch choir of the Perryton area which presented the cantata, Followers of the Star. Some of our women attended the women's Christian Alliance meeting in the Baptist church. Women's work meetings are held once each month under the leadership of Mrs. LeRoy Reeves. The men's work chairman is Marvin Groves. These groups plan to re-decorate the sanctuary in the coming months. Two of our young men are attending McPherson College.—Maud Stump, Waka, Texas.

Southern Illinois

La Place—Four of our number attended regional conference. A district stewardship team was with us for an evening service. An evangelism team was with us for a morning and afternoon service. In the evening of the same day, we used the film, Love Thy Neighbor. The Thanksgiving program was given by the young people. Two temperance films, It's the Brain That Counts and No Smoking, were shown at our service on Nov. 28. The young adult class presented the Christmas drama, Christmas in a Cobbler Shop, preceding the white gift offering. The week preceding Christmas carols were heard each evening over our public address system. The attendance in our Sunday-school and worship services has made a decided increase.—Mrs. Estella Emmert, La Place, Ill.

Middle Indiana

West Manchester—Bro. R. H. Miller was speaker at our all-day harvest meeting. Bro. Miller also led our church workers' retreat at Camp Mack. At our fall council meeting Bro. Howard H. Keim, our pastor, was re-elected elder. Bro. Charles Gibbs was relicensed to the ministry at our December council. We held our revival meeting with Bro. Mark Schrock as the evangelist. Our 100% Messenger Club is in effect again this year. During the month of January we studied the book, Face to Face with India, by Roland E. Wolseley. A birthday banquet ended our school on Jan. 30, with Rex Reahard speaking and showing slides on the American Indians. Our church participated in the stewardship meeting at the Manchester church with Bro. Harl Russell as leader each evening of Feb. 22, March 1 and 8. This was followed by visitation. World Day of Prayer was sponsored by the churches of the township on Feb. 25 in the Christian church. Our district pulpit exchange was Feb. 27.—Mrs. Frank O. Ulery, North Manchester, Ind.

Southern Indiana

Nettle Creek, Brick—At a special called council of the Nettle Creek congregation it was voted to divide the congregation into three separate churches. This is to be completed by Oct. 1, 1955. Bro. R. G. West of Wiley, Colo., conducted our revival meetings Nov. 29—Dec. 12. As a result eleven persons were baptized into the church. We had mission study each Sunday during the month of January. The parsonage is now ready for Brother and Sister Fike to move into it.—Mrs. O. D. Werking, Hagerstown, Ind.

Northeastern Ohio

East Nimishillen—An offering taken on Thanksgiving morning was used by the men's work to purchase two heifers which were then dedicated to Brethren Service work. The men and young people have been helping with the Painsville project of building a parsonage and chapel. A Christmas play, The Contrite Spirit, and a Christmas Eve candlelight service were presented in our church. A social evening concluding with worship was held on New Year's Eve. Three babies have been dedicated at special services. The women's work group has made relief garments and sent Christmas gifts to the Columbus State School.—Mrs. B. E. Shoemaker, Canton, Ohio.

Northwestern Ohio

Bellefontaine—Since our last report four adults have been baptized, two reclaimed, two have renewed their fellowship and six have been received by letter into our church. Church and Sunday-school officers were elected at the fall council meeting with Bro. C. W. Warstler as elder. We observed communion services on Nov. 3, with Pastor Warstler officiating. The same evening Brother and Sister Frank Linkenhoker and Brother and Sister Stanley Easton were elected to the office of deacon. Installation services were conducted by the elder for the new deacons. The morning worship attendance has doubled during the last few months.—Mrs. Ethel Davis, Bellefontaine, Ohio.

Sugar Creek—Brother and Sister Ralph Barick of Michigan City, Ind., held a two-week revival meeting in our church. During this meeting seven were baptized into our fellowship. The women's work group is sewing for Bethany and local hospitals. The men's work group has been busy putting a gas line into the church and parsonage.—Mrs. William Houston, Lima, Ohio.

BOOKS for the Minister

Great Preaching Today
Edited by Alton M. Motter

A collection of 25 sermons delivered at the Chicago Sunday Evening Club. Included in the collection is a sermon by Dr. Paul M. Robinson, President of Bethany Biblical Seminary. They speak from every major denomination, from every corner of the nation, and from many viewpoints of religious concerns. Laubach, Fosdick, Kennedy, Trueblood, Weatherhead, Shoemaker and many others are represented in this volume. A picture of each speaker is carried on the jacket. 256 pages. Cloth. $3.00

The Preacher and His Audience
Webb B. Garrison

Many valuable books are available on preaching. This one directs more attention on the total preacher-to-congregation communication. Special attention is given to the role of the listener. Tested methods on gaining and holding attention of the listener are given. This is a book of principles and methods that you will find most helpful. Bibliography is complete. 288 pages. Cloth. $3.00

why preach what to preach how to preach
For the student and active minister, here is guidance and inspiration from a master preacher. A book for close study, for reference, for enrichment and renewal. To help you week after week—year after year—prepare vigorous sermons without "going stale." Indexed. 224 pages. Cloth. $2.75

The Book of Revelation Speaks to Us
Herbert H. Wernecke

"One of the neglected areas of Brethren preaching and teaching is the apocalyptic literature, particularly as represented by the Book of Revelation. Dr. Wernecke's book is one of the most useful treatments of this dramatic material it has been my pleasure to review."—Chalmer E. Faw. 176 pages. Cloth. $3.00

Communicating the Gospel
Halford E. Luccock

"Only once in a dozen years there comes a book so true, so stimulating to the imagination, so superbly done that it becomes a classic. This book will certainly be a candidate for that classification." Luccock deals with the vital issue of getting the Gospel across into the minds and wills of men. Written in the best tradition of the distinguished Lyman Beecher lectures. 184 pages. $2.50 in charge of the service. A deputation team from Juniata College was in charge of a Sunday morning service. In the evening of the same day, Sister Grace Clapper, returned missionary, gave a talk. Our church united with the other churches of the town in Reformation Day services. Our district meeting delegates were our pastor, Dale Detwiler, Mrs. Bulah Replogle, Mrs. Charles Brown and Mrs. Howard Long. We observed our third annual Older Servants Day with a special message, entitled Growing Old Gracefully, by our pastor. Our evangelistic services were conducted by Bro. Earl M. Bowman. As a result of these meetings, three were received into the church by baptism and three by letter. Miss Else Peterson of Denmark, a B.V.S. worker, is now working in our church. Union Thanksgiving services were held in our church. The children of the Sunday school shared in a special Christmas program the afternoon of Dec. 18. At the evening vesper service on Dec. 26, the youth fellowship group presented the play, A Stranger in Bethlehem. Our church co-operated with the other churches in the town in the annual Week of Prayer services. Our church has been engaged in a remodeling program which is almost completed. Seven babies were consecrated at a special service.—Mrs. Lena M. Hoover, Roaring Spring, Pa.

Tennessee

Bakers Cross Roads—Elder B. F. Long was elected as our pastor in March 1954. Sisters Etta Webber and Ada Long served as delegates to district conference. We participated in the Share Our Surplus project. Since we had no Brethren hymnals, we received books from the Salem church, Ohio. Our church has placed several religious signs along the highway. Four members have recently been received by letter into our fellowship. Our Christmas program was given on Dec. 25. A piano was purchased for the Sunday-school and church services. The women of our church met each week in January to Study Brethren missions in India and to make a quilt for relief. Evangelistic services were held with Bro. Paul Shrider of Chicago as speaker. We have preaching services each Saturday night and Sunday morning.—Mrs. Luther Griffin, Crossville, Tenn.

First Virginia

Hopewell—On Dec. 8 our women's fellowship group had a Christmas party at their monthly meeting. Our pastor, Bro. Shallenbarger, conducts a study hour each Sunday evening. On Dec. 22 our Christmas party was held in the church fellowship hall. On Christmas Eve the junior and senior choirs shared in the special service with Charles Bibbey, radio announcer, as guest narrator for the service. Our Christmas offering was used for the building fund. The women of the sewing circle meet every Wednesday for sewing and quilting.—Mrs. E. D. Green, Hopewell, Va.

Second Virginia

Middle River—Bro. Earnest Cline of La Verne, Calif., recently showed pictures of his trip to Europe and the Holy Lands. We have a 100% Messenger Club again this year. We are much in need of Sunday-school rooms and a committee has been appointed to study a long-range plan of building. Delegates to district conference were Louise Moore, Arlie Cline and Byron Wampler. Twenty of our men attended the district meeting of men's work. One of our families is supporting a Korean orphan; an individual from our church is also supporting one. Another family sent CARE packages instead of giving each other Christmas gifts. The Sunshine class is supporting a missionary's child for the second year. Bro. Warren Groff of Bridgewater College spoke to us on peace one Sunday morning. As a Hallowe'en project the junior high group collected funds for the United Nation's Children's Fund. The World Community Day service was held in our church. We are participating in the basketball league. Our church co-operated in the union Thanksgiving services. The children's Christmas party was held on Dec. 18 with a mitten tree as their project. The CBYF group gave the play, Seeing the Star, on Dec. 19.—Mrs. Raymond F. Moore, Fort Defiance, Va.

Staunton—Dr. Charles Templeton held a two-week revival in our city. Evangelistic services were held in our church with Bro. Glen Weimer of Arlington, Va., as evangelist. Eleven were baptized and seven received by letter into our church fellowship. During a Sunday morning service, the mortgage was burned on the church parsonage. A projector was recently purchased for the church by the women's work group, primary class and gifts from individuals. The father and son banquet was held on Nov. 30. On Dec. 19 the adult choir presented a special program at the evening service. The children's sharing project at Christmas time was a mitten tree for children overseas. The Sunday-school classes distributed a number of Christmas baskets. —Mrs. Cline E. Rodeffer, Staunton, Va.

First West Virginia

Sandy Creek, Canaan—Since our last report we have completed the new addition to the church. The women's work group sent friendship packets to New Windsor for distribution overseas. The women served two suppers to help with the financial work of the church. We are making comforters for relief. The Christmas program was presented by the children, young people and older folks of the church. The pageant, No Room in the Inn, was also given at Christmas time. —Mrs. Ina J. Seese, Gibbon Glade, Pa.

Tear Coat—Installation services for our women's work officers were in charge of our vice-president, Sister Shirley Shingleton. The women's group has made comforters for overseas relief and packed friendship packages. The CBYF group remembered the boys in service at Christmas time with the local paper and the Upper Room. On Dec. 19 the CBYF group presented two Christmas plays, The Two Christmas Boxes and White Christmas. The entire CBYF attended the district roundtable at Morgantown and brought back the banner for perfect attendance. We have purchased a new electric organ for the sanctuary. At our regular council meeting, Bro. Spaid was re-elected elder for the coming year. On May 15 our church will celebrate its fiftieth anniversary with an all-day program.—Mrs. Ralph R. Combs, Augusta, W. Va.

MEDITATIONS ON THE GOSPEL OF ST. JOHN

by EDWARD N. WEST

Lenten Meditations. While this book is the first by this author his experience in writing had been tested by his contributions to the Encyclopedia Americana. At present he is Canon of the Cathedral Church of St. John the Divine, New York.

The Gospel of St. John contains a large number of spiritual facts. This book is designed to be read by every man. It is a remarkably provocative personal commentary on the life of Jesus. These and many other facts commend this book for your reading. 192 pages. Cloth. $2.00

Conference Reflections

Now that items of business for the Annual Conference at Grand Rapids are appearing in the Gospel Messenger, I have been thinking of the past Conference at Ocean Grove. There are several comments I want to make about some phases of the Conference which I hope will be helpful to the program committee, the speakers and to those attending.

1. Many of us feel that the inspirational sessions were too crowded, too many items for a single session. It is true that Conference lasts less than a week for most people and as much as possible must be included in the program in order to give all interests a place. I confess that I do not have a satisfactory solution for this situation. Take the Sunday sessions for example: morning session, 9:00 to 12:00; afternoon, 2:00 to 4:30 or 5:00; and evening 7:00 to 9:30. (How could one appreciate the masterful message of Bro. Stover Kulp?)

Since the whole Conference is a worship experience, do the formal "worship services" need to be so lengthy? Maybe we need to rethink the purpose to be accomplished in these sessions. If the sessions were not so lengthy, fewer people would leave before the session is over.

2. Would it be possible for the speakers to keep their messages within the understanding of the average person who attends? Many of the addresses are heavy even for many ministers and do not have an appeal for many of our folks who attend the Conference. Jesus spoke and taught as his listeners were able to understand, not as he was able to speak and teach. Many speakers speak as they are well able to do but what value is there in their messages if folks will not listen to them?

3. The Ocean Grove resolutions were excellent in content and showed scholarly preparation, but in the attempt to cover so many areas and to such great detail, they were so long that no doubt many folks never took time to read them after they got home. I agree with the item for the Grand Rapids Conference that something should be done to make them more usable. Assuming that it is necessary to go into such detail for the record, could not the Resolutions Committee condense them so that the main points could be lifted out and emphasized? These points could then be taken back to our people in such a form that they could be studied and acted upon.

4. A word about the dinner and luncheon meetings. Some folks are raising a question about the propriety of so many of the rather expensive dinner and luncheon meetings. Just one suggestion: if there is value in these meetings, then the number of tickets should be definitely limited to the accommodations available. What I mean is this: Last year at least one of these meetings ran past the time scheduled for the afternoon session to begin and then the speaker's time was cut so short that it was hardly worth while for him to start. The reason was principally because it took so long for the folks to be served.—A. Jay Replogle, Windber, Pa.

Education in the Church School

Working with the youngsters of our church school brings to mind the necessities of bringing the teachings of Christ to the little ones in a manner they can understand and in which they can be interested.

The whole church will in due time be upheld by the children now in our school and it is for us to cooperate wholeheartedly to bring to these the teachings of our Savior in such a way as to give them the incentive and spirit to remain in Sunday school and try to bring others to these teachings.

We sometimes wonder if Christ, in his earthly life, had the adversities and trials that we have in the teaching of our classes. Undoubtedly, he had more of the trials and tribulations than we have today.

Therefore, it is for us to give the most of our abilities to the progressive teaching of our children and young people.

With this in our minds constantly, we can be assured of a successful and serving church.—Ralph and Lois Brechbill, Burnettsville, Ind.

Comfort for "Troubled Parents"

I read the article of the troubled parents in Jan. 22 Messenger. As I read it I recalled the incident of Jesus healing the man born blind and felt led to write hoping they might find comfort in these words.

"Master, who did sin, this man or his parents, that he was born blind? Jesus answered, 'Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents.'" (John 9:2-3).—Minerva Strauss, Richlandtown, Pa.

Example of Service . . . . . Witness for Peace

Jacob T. Dick

DURING the One Great Hour of Sharing when the church makes one fine effort in the spiritual and financial support of Brethren Service there is a two-way sharing. It is a time when Brethren Service has the opportunity to share some of the deep messages of the Spirit which come in far-away places to dedicated people, and it is a time for renewed sharing of the resources of the church to undergird this program of love and peacemaking.

Brethren Service in Europe offers the church one proved opportunity for continued sharing. Every one of us needs to do something with his hands for others. Paul told the Ephesians: ". . . but rather let him labor, working with his hands the thing which is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth." A retired woman said, "I read my Bible every day, I pray every day, and I also do something with my hands every day to help those in need."

Paul was reminding us all that one requirement in a community of love is to express our devotion to Christ by working with our hands, so as to have something to give to the world's need.

In one year alone your offerings supported forty-eight volunteer workers serving in eight different countries from London to Linz, and from Ioannina to Istanbul. These volunteers have served with enthusiasm and goodwill. Their peace witness is strong for in it human life expresses opposition to war as a means of settling disputes and they exemplify Christian love in constructive action. In Eph. 6:7 Paul reminds us that it is important not only to serve, but "with goodwill doing service, as to the Lord, . . ." The Brethren Service Commission in Europe is serving with goodwill as an example in both word and deed.

One volunteer who worked among the refugees of Italy met with months of frustration as he tried to awaken their slumbering hopes and waning initiative. He worked against all sorts of handicaps including the very barbed-wire which contained them in encampment. Finally, his English class prepared a worship service of song and Bible verse to celebrate Christmas, to which the entire camp was invited. The rehearsals were only sporadically attended and the refugees expressed the feeling that they would be laughed and hooted off the stage.

On the evening of the final rehearsal he was left waiting at a bus station and as the hour passed, his spirit gave over into a feeling of complete hopelessness. Sitting down on a bench he realized that there was nothing more he could do; so with tears in his eyes he gave everything over to God. As he finally entered the barrack he could see that the drab room was in unusual activity. With a brightness and energy never before shown his students were decorating the room with vines and crepe paper. They never mentioned his being late, gathered for a quick rehearsal, then sang and recited in such a way as to hold an audience of children, who had come to jeer and make fun, in respectful silence until the loud applause at the end. The camp officials were astounded at the reception and the students have yet to lose their glow over the activity. But the volunteer was most pleased when one adult refugee said to another, "I want to take on the religion of the teacher."

Dekan (Deacon) Sinning, German pastor and supervisor over eighteen other parish pastors tells of the Christian influence the giving of the Brethren has meant to his church members. The material aid program has helped his refugee-crowded community until now, after years of sharing, Brethren Service no longer gives 100 per cent of the clothing, but the entire church community itself gives twenty per cent of the clothing now distributed. Each year they give more. Dekan Sining said, "Without the example of Brethren Service giving this could never have happened."

Brethren Service in Europe is striking hard at the prejudice and jealousy and hatred and revenge which divide people. There is enough peace education work to be done on the continent to keep us busy for two generations and more. There are many periods of both victory and defeat, of terrifying loneliness and gratifying fellowship. Each summer in the international work camps advances are made in building this world of brothers. One Egyptian boy expressed it this way, "Thanks for letting me be a part of your immortal peace seminar." Another writes, "Sorry I can't be a camper this summer, but I'm praying for you that your beautiful idea will be kept alive." A Greek girl said, "I had never known what living was until I attended your work camps and found that lowering myself to serve others in need made living worth while. For the first time in my life I became a Christian." From country after country on both sides of the "Iron Curtain" letters such as these keep coming in, testifying to the value of the work camp program in building international friendships and tearing down walls which divide.

Rachel Garner checks over food items that are to be distributed

When the Danube flooded her banks last summer Brethren Service sent a mobile team to the hardest hit town in Upper Austria. One of the volunteers on the team reports this incident. "We had been working with several different families in a small community. One home was going quite slowly towards completion. The owner was a middle-aged widow, sick with worry, but brave. As most other families there, she was forced to rely on government aid to restore her flood-damaged home. The loan would take years to repay. But not once during our stay there did we hear a complaint of her bad luck or her hardships. When she was not busy in the garden or with the housework, she handled the wheelbarrow or mixed cement with the best. She managed time to pay attention to her grandchildren while her daughter pitched in with all her frailty. She boasted to visitors about our help with a sincerity that could not be misunderstood. Before we left the area for work in the Russian Zone, we visited her. As we sat in the living room of her temporary shelter and munched on a farewell tidbit, I breathed a prayer for hard places in life and for brave souls who conquer them."

It is true that those who receive help from Brethren Service react in many different ways. Some take it for granted; some express a brief thanks; but some grasp the opportunity to help others as they have been helped. Frau Schroeder of the Fuerstenhagen refugee settlement is such a person. She came from the East Zone as one of the early refugees. She lost her home, her

"Blessed Are the Meek"

OUR WORLD moves ahead on the assumption that the powerful inherit the earth.
We talk as if the exercise of power with responsibility is the chief duty of our leaders.
For this purpose we stockpile our weapons:
the old-fashioned A-bomb,
the devastating H-bomb,
the annihilating C-bomb.
We talk as if we can operate only from "situations of strength."
We are proud of our massive retaliation as a deterrent to aggression.
We act as if we believed the contrary of the simple beatitude,
As if the meek can expect only to die,
And only the strong shall live.

But our strength is mocked by its own image:
Force begets counter-force;
Fire is met with fire;
Threats respond to threats;
And fear reigns.
Who will inherit the earth for which we risk so much?
Let the strong have their way and there will be no place to hide.
No one can survive a "victory" in which everyone loses.
If the strong and the fearful have their way, what will be left for anyone to inherit?

The way of the strong is the way of death—what of the way of the meek?
Think of a young man in the sunlit morning of his manhood—
Jesus of Nazareth, carpenter, teacher, comforter, healer,
Friend of all common folk who hear him gladly,
A natural leader, speaking as one with innate authority—
Think of the young man, strong in power of the Spirit,
Who stands up to read on the Sabbath
In his home church and in his home town.
Listen to his platform:
"To preach good news to the poor, to proclaim release to the captives and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty the oppressed,
to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord."
Think of the young man who stands unarmed,
Without a company at his command,
Without a voting constituency in his district,
Without a decree from the governor or a citation from the mayor or a fund subscribed by his neighbors,
Without the blessing of priest or rabbi or even the support of the council of churches.
He has only a few ragged disciples, but he has a program of action.
He has a passion for righteousness and a love for people.
There is forgiveness in his heart
And a cross in his future.

Think of the young man who sought nothing but God's kingdom,
Who believed that the meek, the unarmed, the loving and forgiving would inherit the earth.
Our world moves ahead on the assumption that Jesus was wrong,
That only the powerful inherit the earth.
But there are a few who take Christ's way, the way of the cross, the way of the meek.
It is costly to join his revolution,
To become a fool for Christ's sake,
To say with Paul:
"When reviled, we bless;
When persecuted, we endure;
When slandered, we try to conciliate."
But where now is Pilate? Where is Caesar? Where are all the tyrants, the commanders of legions, the Hitlers, the Stalins?
Dictators die—but Jesus Christ lives. And he said,
"Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth."—K.M.

"For This Child I Prayed"

ONE answer to the problem of juvenile delinquency can be found in 1 Sam. 1:27. Hannah, who was childless, had prayed for a son. Samuel was an answer to her prayer. While he was still young, she presented him to Eli for service in the temple. She explained who she was, saying, "For this child I prayed."

Eli the priest soon had some problems of delinquency to deal with in his own household. Perhaps he too had prayed for sons. But evidently he failed to dedicate them to God as wholeheartedly as did Hannah.

Many mothers can report that God has answered their prayer for a son or daughter. But do they continue to pray for them, setting such an example of devotion and dedication that in due time their children dedicate themselves?—K.M.

"And the Lord God Planted a Garden"

Theodore B. Pratt

THE sun was beating down unmercifully. A few villagers were sitting on the vine-shaded terrace in front of the general store. Two black-clad women stood by, chatting while they spun yarn from spools of raw wool. The villagers nodded to a familiar figure approaching atop a plodding donkey.

"Who's that?" I asked my interpreter. "He's the mailman," the answer came. "He comes here once a week."

As I watched this nonmechanized civil servant empty the battered mailbox nailed to the side of the store, I mused: "Is this 1954? Is this really the country that in classical times was unsurpassed in civilization and culture?"

Yes, this simple way of life is modern-day Greece—at least, one side of it. But it is the little-known side of it, the part few tourists see, the poorest part physically and financially, and the part which, with help from American churches is literally being brought back to life.

I visited this area—called Epirus—in northwestern Greece last summer. My mission: to see what the American churches had done to help the refugee farmers and to see what needs remain. This is what I found out.

At the invitation of Archbishop Spyridon of Greece in 1950, the Brethren Service Commission in co-operation with the World Council of Churches undertook to organize a team of young Christians with farming experience.

Publicity secretary, Department Inter-Church Aid and Service to Refugees of the World Council of Churches

Church World Service

Don Lesh and his interpreter talk to one of the villagers in a garden at Riziani. Some of the seeds were provided by the Brethren Service Commission's seeds of hope project

This team (known as Inter-Church Service in Greek Villages), with representatives from churches in America, England, Sweden, Holland and Greece, was sent into the isolated province of Epirus to assist the Greek government and the Greek Church in re-establishing farmers in an area laid waste by various occupational forces. In many villages the houses had been sacked or destroyed, the livestock long lost, and the farmland allowed to deteriorate.

Writing to the team three years later, Archbishop Spyridon said, "The people of Epirus, where you are working, saw and recognized in your faces the Christian faith. They will remember forever your work and they will never forget your pains. It is the only thing they can do for you with their own poorness."

Church World Service came into the picture early. The Church of the Brethren, the Disciples of Christ, the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., the Evangelical and Reformed Church, and the Evangelical United Brethren Church are all active in support of this self-help project. The Lutheran World Federation, as well as Dutch, British, Canadian, Australian, German and Swedish churches also participate.

During 1951, for instance, the team helped to distribute 25 tons of dried milk, 17½ tons of cheese, 500 cartons of soap and more than 34 tons of clothing in a score of villages. CROP, the Christian Rural Overseas Program of Church World Service, in these early days sent thirty tons of hybrid seed corn and fifty tons of concentrated fertilizer. Churches offered seeds, grafting buds for fruit trees, hand cultivators, a tractor and a jeep, in addition to money.

Why this help for these isolated and backward people? What has the team done to help them?

The story begins during World War II and the bandit wars which raged along the Greek-Albanian border. It was during this period that the land and farms were deserted and destroyed. After the wars, Greek villagers began to return to their homes, but many did not want to go back to their ransacked farms in Epirus. They looked too unproductive.

The Greek government stepped in. If it could reconstruct one village in Epirus and re-establish Greek-Albanian farmers there, other refugee farmers might begin to return to rebuild their villages.

Riziani, a tiny village at the foot of the Paramythia Mountain (about three miles from the Adriatic Sea) was chosen as this experimental village. Forty farm families were resettled in new stone houses at Riziani in co-operation with the Greek government, the World Council of Churches' Service to Refugees' staff in Athens, and with the help of Ford Foundation funds administered through the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

The World Council of Churches, through its Inter-Church Service in Greek Villages, sent in team members to help. They distributed food, tools and clothing, helped the new settlers apply new cultivation methods and use better seed. They shared the villagers' disappointments and joys and did their best with the means they had at their disposal to help in any way they could.

A tractor was brought to Riziani and the village's 2,500 stremmas of land (about 785 acres) were plowed and cultivated in a fraction of the time previously required. In addition to onions, beans, squash and tomatoes, the team introduced carrots, beets, sweet corn and other vegetables.

They brought in new fertilizers and hybrid seed and through demonstrations and down-to-earth conversation won the confidence of the villagers in attempting new and improved methods of farming. They introduced canning and food preservation, a revolutionary concept to these humble villagers. Two water pumps were purchased with Ford Foundation funds to raise water from the river for irrigation.

The difference in the crop yield here is spectacular. Villagers are happy with more and better crops. They have started a school. Don Lesh of California, current WCC team member assigned to this village, has now introduced beehives and has begun a girls' club and a boys' club. More than crops are growing in Riziani. Village morale and comradeship are growing daily.

A member of the Interchurch Service to Greek Villages team distributes hybrid corn seed sent from the United States

Efforts for the rehabilitation of Riziani and similar villages continue and although only a few short years have elasped since this refugee community was re-established, it is clear that the project is bearing fruit. In just this one village, forty families uprooted from their homes have found a place to establish themselves again. They have pioneered in this desolate area and have found new hope for the future. They have discovered that an effort shared with others is easier—and is worthwhile. They have learned that much can be accomplished by working together.

I visited other villages like Riziani, some of which had been helped by Inter-Church Service in Greek Villages, and some which had not. The difference was striking. Not only has the standard of farming in project communities been raised to a remarkable degree; the vitality and resourcefulness of villages and villagers have been increased tremendously.

Headquarters for this thriving team project is Ioannina, capital city of Epirus. Here team members return from their village outposts each week end for corporate worship, discussion and planning. They exchange experiences from the past week and share with one another their problems and successes.

Hazel Peters

In four years, this church supported work in northwestern Greece has spread into at least seven villages. Refugee farmers in each of these villages have felt the impact of a young Christian at work in their midst. The famed tunnel project at Pontikates, which took the combined efforts of team members and villagers three years to complete, now has opened up more than 200 acres of fertile farmland, food-producing acres that have long lain fallow.

C. Kitsidis, Nomark of Ionnina, expressed the sentiments of the Greek officials in a letter to Harley Kline, leader of the team: "Your help was not only essential and valuable but it was very timely, corresponding to an imperative and agonizing appeal. You came from foreign countries, noble, willing and as good friends. You did not only give the material help and your personal work. You gave us something more: your soul. The mutual help you gave us after a terrible war for the life of our nation gives a joyful feeling for life and trust for the love and a hope for the future."

Is there still need? Yes.

The government prevents starvation and has a large-scale program of land reclamation and village resettlement but, by its own admission, cannot get down to the level of these outlying villages. They need the knowledge and experience of team members. After thirty years of strife and increasing depression, hundreds of villages have not the means or technical knowledge to help themselves, and do not produce enough to feed themselves.

This interchurch witness, the agricultural improvement, tunnel achievement, resettlement of refugee farmers, day-by-day work in the villages, and the heart-felt expressions of appreciation all serve as proof that great spiritual and economic gains can and have been achieved through united efforts.

And the ongoing work of this small Christian band in these remote villages is a further challenge to American churches and to Christians throughout the world who heed the injunction of Jesus Christ: "Inasmuch as ye have done it to the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me" (Matt. 25).

Example of Service

husband, and the possessions she had were only those she could grab in the few minutes before she fled. Immediately she was immersed in poverty. It was material aid which gave her a new start in life. Piece by piece, by needle and thread she improved her lot with a rare determination. she has remarried and lives now in a four-room apartment. But she has not forgotten the help she received. Her home is open to help supply newly arrived refugees with available materials. She is now the key person in her village to help in material aid distributions for she knows the people and their deepest needs.

The Brethren Service Commission has also found that in actual demonstration love is stronger than hate. In the notorious west side of London at Kingsley Hall one of the volunteers was put to the test as he worked with a rough gang of fellows proud of their name, The Curb-Side Gang. Because our volunteer was a foreigner and a conscientious objector he became the scapegoat for some of their amusement. Since they could not get many reports, the taunting decreased. Soon members of the gang became fifteen years of age and eligible for Youth Club membership and owing to the influence of the volunteer these boys did join the club. They were given things to do and a chance to learn to know the volunteer. Through this experience their attitude toward life changed.

Paul reminds the Ephesians that there are some people "past feeling" who have given themselves over to evil works and greediness. One Great Hour of Sharing is the heartthrob of the entire Brotherhood saying that we are not "past feeling," but that we are kind to one another in a world of suffering and confusion. Brethren Service in Europe has a "Story to Tell to the Nations" of how the material aid gift led a woman to Christ; of how an interview with a refugee family encouraged them to develop the spiritual life; of how a returned exchange student became the active head of his local church youth group serving the community.

We who are serving in faraway places like to feel that One Great Hour of Sharing is just one sample hour in the life of Christian people. Many people used to wonder what they would be doing when Christ came again. Some people were restrained from certain actions because they would not want to be doing that when they met their Master. One Great Hour of Sharing is really only one sample hour in the life of the church. It is like the single piece of luggage that a customs man at a country border will examine to see if what one said is consistent with what he possessed. Just so any one hour cut into the life of a Christian ought to find him sharing and serving his fellow man in love. Brethren Service in Europe provides the world with an example in loving service and a strong witness for peace with persons and parcels. It is also striking hard at the roots of ill-will and hatred which divide people. It is helping to develop Christian leaders

WORSHIP IN THE INVISIBLE CHURCH

John Barwick

IT WAS early dawn up in the northwest corner of Kurdistan, whither I had gone to visit my son working in the villages. Rose-tinted ice caps on the black silhouette of the mountains along the Iranian border to the east glittered while the ranges in Turkey to the north glowed in reflection of the riot of color overhead. It was impossible not to worship. In that complete silence the antiphonal song of praise from heaven to earth and back again was a deafening roar that compelled all that had voice to join in the anthem that "drowns all music but its own."

From my childhood memories came the hymns and psalms to frame and carry the service in my language. Just as the Hebrew worshipers found expression in the songs of their poets for overflowing adoration, penitence, anxiety and hope so I drew on the Christian's treasury in the heritage of praise, joy in salvation, nearness in communion and fellowship we all possess in our hymnals, far too great a wealth to be used on Sunday only.

My first fellow-worshiper was some ancient saint who wrote in Greek for one of the early congregations,

"O gladsome light,
O grace of God the Father's face,
The eternal splendor wearing,
Celestial, holy, blest . . . .
Father of might unknown,
Thee, his incarnate Son,
And Holy Spirit, adoring . . . .
The world doth glorify
And shall exalt forever."

I suddenly realized that I was not worshiping alone or with even nature only. One by one the believers of all ages joined the service and led in prayers indescribably beautiful, born of experiences, sacrifices and pleasures far beyond mine. With Isaiah of old, I felt

"Woe is me,
For I am undone . . ."

The "holy, holy, holy" of that tremendous choir gave one a sense of microscopic littleness in such a Presence, such beauty of holiness. But with that shattering feeling of unworthiness and insignificance came the consciousness that, however small and unworthy I was, I was a part of that blessed company and I could sing with St. Bernard,

"Thou savest them that on thee call,
To them that seek thee thou art good,
To them that find thee, All in all."

As the rising sun bathed us in its warmth, we caught a new vision of

"Immortal Love, forever full, Forever flowing free, Forever shared, forever whole, A never-ebbing sea!"
"Jesu, joy of man's desiring, Holy wisdom, Love most bright, Drawn by thee, our souls, aspiring, Soar to uncreated light."

The sun slowly picked out the realities of the world in which I lived and worked: the ancient Chaldean church on the hill, preserving the form of the earliest Christian worship, but quite indifferent to the misery around it, the Moslem bowing to his Allah and posturing before him but completely intolerant of those who did not join him. I thought of the mission on which I had been sent, to plead the cause of homeless little folk who had no state to protect them. Could my illustrious fellow-worshipers help me relieve some of the ocean of distress around us? They can and will.

"We share our mutual woes, Our mutual burdens bear;
And often for each other flows The sympathizing tear."

Among them are those of all faiths, from apostolic times until now. None of our divisive impulses have any effect on them, for on that mountaintop we were one and the gates of Hell cannot make more of it, the church, the holy bride.

"For all the saints Who from their labors rest,
"Who him before the world confessed, Thy Name, O Jesus, be forever blessed. Hallelujah."

in many fields of activity. Brethren Service is still alleviating suffering through the material aid program to refugees from the East. And it has demonstrated again the truth that love wins in a universe which is moral. "Now abideth faith, hope, love, but the greatest of these is love."

Brethren Service Commission is in the process of sending a four- or five-person rehabilitation team to Korea in co-operation with UNKRA (United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency). The Brethren team will be working closely with selected South Koreans in village improvement programs involving housing, sanitation, agriculture and material aid. Both UNKRA and the South Korean government will provide technical assistance in addition to equipment and financial assistance to the project. The General Brotherhood Board approved the project last November with the expectation that the team operations could begin in Korea by March. The team is recruited and actual sailing awaits final confirmation of contract between Brethren Service and UNKRA.

Mrs. Sibley, who with her husband — the chairman of Church World Service — was invited to study the desperate needs in the Far East a year ago, reports on the highly practical and effective applications of our churches' co-operative ministries of overseas relief and reconstruction.

LOVE THY NEIGHBOR

Mrs. Harper Sibley

I CAN NEVER forget what I saw in South Korea a year ago. With my husband, who has served for many years as the chairman of the Department of Church World Service, I was invited by UNKRA—United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency—to come to Korea to study the desperate needs of the million homeless Korean refugees and to assist the representatives of Church World Service already in the field to enlarge their relief programs and to make them more effective.

I have heard that there are four million orphans in Korea who have lost their fathers, as village after village was wiped out in the dreadful civil war that surged across the length and breadth of the Korean peninsula. This, of course, can be only an estimate, but in Pusan alone I personally saw thousands of piteous little waifs, gathered into temporary orphan asylums, wearing the strangest assortment of children's clothing taken out of refugee consignments from the United States and elsewhere. Babies were lying in rows like books on a shelf. Older children were crawling or toddling around in roomfuls of humanity. Still older children were being given primitive instruction by devoted teachers.

As you can be sure, Church World Service was giving every possible help to the men and women who had taken these orphan children in, by supplying medicines, powdered milk, vitamins, clothing and other supplies and, above all, understanding and sympathy.

But it was doing other service even more appealing and much more constructive. The late and beloved Dr. Appenzeller and his associates, many of them volunteers, had gathered together hundreds of destitute widows with small children.

The first essential was to provide some kind of employment for these distracted women, so that they might earn money to buy enough food for themselves and their children to keep alive. In a city overwhelmed by countless refugees sleeping under bridges, in packing boxes or on the streets, a few rooms were found in which sewing and weaving groups could be established. Materials and patterns were imported from Japan. In these crowded rooms, opportunity and hope came into the lives of human beings.

Still these women and children had no place to live. The relief workers found an open piece of ground and built there a group of homes for widows. The homes consisted of one small room and a tiny kitchen. But that room and that kitchen belonged exclusively to a widow and her children. A hundred such homes were constructed in that tract at a cost of a few hundred dollars each and into each moved the widow of a Protestant pastor, killed or missing.

On this tract was also provided a nursery building where the children could be gathered during the days, so the widows could be free to work and earn what they could. The workers also built a sizable shed in which were established looms and weaving machines brought over from Japan, so that the widows might find work near at hand.

Then the agency of our churches, church World Service, had the problem of discovering markets for the production of these women. Here the church people of the United States have helped and will continue to help, but the problem is a major one for the Church World Service staff in Korea.

I have never seen women more thankful for the help or more completely appreciative for what is being done for them. Nor have I seen a more appealing group of women, even under these desperate conditions. My husband says that he thinks the Korean people, as a whole, are perhaps the best looking people of any land. Certainly these widows of pastors were amazingly neat, clean and attractive. But my heart grieves constantly when I stop to think of their future and the future of these little children.

The homeless and hungry are not confined to Korea. In the small British protectorate of Hong Kong there are over one million refugees consisting of hundreds of thousands of families escaped from the tyranny of Chinese Communist dictatorship.

Here again human beings sleep under bridges or on the streets. But happily, here again Church World Service, representing the concern of Christian America, has helped by providing funds and equipment for embroidery and other handcraft projects, and in setting up cooperatives for the making of rattan furniture and other articles by the refugee Chinese men.

As in Korea, the workers, with great difficulty obtaining vacant land from Hong Kong municipal government, have built homes for homeless refugee women and children. Each home may be small, but it is theirs.

Sad as it is to face facts, the homeless and hungry are not limited to Korea or Hong Kong or the Far East. The churches through their agency are working among the 500,000 largely Christian refugee homeless in Indo-China, among the still larger number of Arab refugees in the Near East and among the vast number of refugees in West Germany and Austria who have escaped from Poland or Czechoslovakia or Yugoslavia or the other satellite communist areas. Under the Refugee Relief Act passed by the United States Congress in 1953, 214,000 homeless refugees may be brought to the United States to find refuge and freedom and opportunity here.

What can you and I do about it? Well, we can surely help to bring in a family under the terms of this act. We can sponsor a family, providing a home and a job for these despairing homeless men and women, with their children, or we can find jobs or homes for them.

Mr. Sibley and I have had the joy of bringing in one such family—and on our table at this moment are the applications of four refugee families, each eagerly hoping for a sponsor. One of these families was originally from Yugoslavia, one from the Bulgarian border of Greece, one from Silesia, now East Germany, and one from the flood-devastated area in Holland. Small individual photographs of each man, woman and child are attached to each appli-

THE CHURCH SERVES IN THE FAR EAST

The author who recently visited Korea and Hong Kong describes here his firsthand impressions of the continuing need in these areas of distress and the value of the work of relief and rehabilitation being done there by the churches

LAST summer I visited two areas where large sums of Church World Service funds are being used to meet human needs. The first area was Korea. There have been times since the war when I wondered whether we would ever come to the place where we would have some sense of accomplishment in meeting human need in Korea. It seemed that every person whom one met was the neediest person; the lines of refugees were literally endless.

The program, of necessity, had to be concentrated upon direct relief to those who were reached most easily. There not only did not seem to be any end to such relief, but one was not able to take enough time to really accomplish a rehabilitation of those whom we were helping.

But last summer, for the first time, I had the sense that the voluntary agencies in Korea were much more adequately meeting human need and that the possibility of an adequate program for those most in need was upon us. The most striking feature that brings this home to us is that there are now only one million refugees in Korea. There were nine millions at one time, so that this is a drastic reduction.

It is the result of three things: first, the resiliency of the Korean people who have moved back into their farming areas and have produced bumper rice and barley crops; second, the relief and rehabilitation aid of the government and of the United Nations; and, third, the wonderful contributions of voluntary agencies, principally of thousands of church groups that have faithfully contributed, across these last years, such generous amounts of clothing and funds for Korea.

I have said that there are now only one million refugees in Korea. Relatively that is good news, but actually a million refugees present a tremendous challenge to the continued relief program of the government and of the voluntary agencies. We shall need to maintain our program on at least the level of the past and to plan carefully, now that what we do can be selective in character for those who are most in need of our help.

I was greatly impressed with the Church World Service amputee project about which we have all heard. More than nine hundred civilian amputees have been serviced by it, and we remain the only agency that not only provides artificial arms and legs but trains people in the use of them and in earning a living. I saw amputees who had lost both arms working as farmers and as carpenters and playing ping-pong together after their work was over.

I was impressed with the possibilities of the antituberculosis project now in its early stages in Seoul. This, patterned after the project in Toronto, Canada, ministers to hundreds of patients

Associate general secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions, Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. and the board's executive secretary for Japan and Korea

With no place for a shelter, this destitute mother in Korea tries to keep her children warm in their own homes across the city. Both the amputee and antituberculosis projects have caught the imagination of our own American forces in Korea and have received generous contributions from them. This should encourage us to continue their ample support.

In Hong Kong, the homes of refugees remind one of the "cardboard shacks" of Korea. At the end of World War II, Hong Kong had a population of approximately one-half million, which was somewhat below its normal prewar population. In nine years, two million people have come as refugees into Hong Kong. Only about half of them brought anything with them in the way of material possessions and few were able to start small businesses. Now, many who brought some possessions are destitute as well as the million who have been destitute from the time they entered the city.

Of course, this vast influx overwhelmed the Hong Kong housing facilities. Hundreds of thousands of people camped out on arrival and have continued to camp out. At first the government made little or no provision for them, lest by so doing they encourage additional refugees to come. Now a government program is providing housing for some.

More than three hundred thousand people still live in the scantiest of shacks and the housing for at least seven hundred thousand provides only the barest necessities. Children in such families have little or no opportunity for schooling, and there are no government welfare agencies of any kind for them or their parents.

For the most part, the churches in Hong Kong are affiliates of the major denominations that long had centers in China. There are some refugee churches and there are many missionaries who now work in Hong Kong who were not formerly related to the churches there.

In Korea temporary churches like this replace those destroyed in war

In the beginning no organizational structure seemed necessary for what was regarded as a temporary situation, but an organization of Protestant churches is now emerging and Church World Service is increasingly becoming the agency of the churches to meet the great relief and rehabilitation needs. Under this direction, there is a housing project somewhat better than the government maintains, there is careful distribution of material aid, and there is increasing opportunity for sound planning and administration in the rehabilitation of families.

The future of Hong Kong, of course, is uncertain. Whatever this may be, the present situation with its grave human needs will continue to demand all of our available help. What the churches are doing to ease the tragedy of these stricken peoples is a great and wonderful example of Christian witness and compassion.

May we not falter in our recognition of our continuing responsibility for this ministry to these lowliest, perhaps "the least" of all our needy brethren.

cation. Altogether there are pictures of fourteen children—the youngest born last January.

Mr. Sibley and I, after much indecision, have finally chosen the Yugoslavian family with three handsome little boys. But how can we refuse to help the others?

Our Church World Service representatives in West Germany who interviewed these families and obtained the detailed facts and the pictures, write: "These refugees are living under very difficult conditions, each family crowded into one or two rooms. But the mothers are wonderful. Notwithstanding everything, the children are neat and clean and happy. All live, however, in eager hope of a new home in America, and opportunity for their children."

We can do something for these homeless mothers and children in Korea, in Hong Kong, in Indo-China, in Jordan, and for the escapees in Europe. If you and I cannot do it directly ourselves, we can always extend the helping hand of love and helpfulness and brotherhood through the cooperative works of the churches.

Death by starvation claims a tiny victim in India

LAST year the floods came to East Pakistan beyond measure. An old woman of 105 could not remember anything like it. Till mid-July all had looked well. The early rice crop would be cut within a week's time. The December crop was a promising green.

Suddenly the waters rose, a foot or more a day, and the rice could not keep pace. We could see it struggling vainly under the surface to reach the top of the flowing current, like a drowning swimmer. In some places it made it—only to be smothered by the water hyacinth, a prolific floating plant. Driven by the wind, it left behind it stretches of open water.

Of course floods — normal floods, that is—are just what we need in this part of the world,—a great fertile rice-growing bowl in the districts of Bakarganj and Faridpur with perhaps a million people at a density of one thousand to the square mile.

Every year after the sowing, the melting snows in the far-off Himalayas and the monsoon storms fill the rivers and spill over all the land to depths varying from three to twelve feet. There is not a dry spot except where the people have built their small houses. In these waters grows the rice, rising with the floods and bearing the good harvest that is needed for so dense a population. Yes—we need floods. But not like the floods which came last year. The courtyards of houses were submerged. Here and there one island homestead, higher than the rest, kept above the surface. The water swirled around the plinths of houses, which are just hard-beaten mud. Gradually the mud fell away in lumps.

The wooden posts of houses were exposed or loosened, and the wavelets on the open water beat against the bamboo-woven walls. No longer could people husk their rice, for their dhenkis (used for husking rice) need a firm earth base. They had to go miles to find a rice-mill or a dry courtyard where they would be allowed to place their dhenkis.

The water went on rising. Now they had to live on their beds. Later not even these were high enough. They made platforms in the houses, and then again had to make them higher.

And the cows? They could not be put on platforms indoors! So the people made floating islands of straw and water-hyacinth and here the cows stayed—or in some cases, floated away. And so the waters rose for weeks—four, five, six. And then at last as in the days of Noah, it began to recede.

During all this time I was constantly among the people in my houseboat. What could I give them? Hope, only—drawing on the Word of God.

On three Sundays my houseboat was a center for worship, surrounded by other boats, for the churches were flooded. Amid all their troubles the folk maintained a simple trust. As I sat

Representative of the East Pakistan Council who supervised the distribution of relief in the flood areas on the platforms in their houses with wavelets splashing up underneath, or remained in my dinghy since it was not practical for me to crawl inside lest the platform should break under my weight, I would ask them, "What special matters shall we pray for?" Again and again they said, "Thanksgiving. God has kept us very well." Theirs was a faith that stood firm amid the floods.

In Amgram, a group of four houses had eaves which were touching water, yet each was still inhabited. From my little dinghy I had to stoop down even to see inside one of them to minister to a woman who was sitting on her tiny platform, hardly able to move for weeks.

In another house lay the only earning member of the family, ill with malaria, and the water had already risen over one corner of the platform and was still rising. In still another the mother and two boys had eaten nothing all day, hoping that the father might catch a fish or two which he could sell for a handful of rice that evening. His average daily earnings were five annas (about 10 cents.)

I felt I must do something for them—a little rice, a bit of vegetable marrow. We had some dried milk from the Roman Catholics sent from the U.S.A. You should have seen how the children drank it down. But there were so many other needy families, and what can one missionary do out of his own salary for so many?

Then news reached me that Church World Service, hearing of the floods in East Pakistan, had cabled relief. I had no idea of the amount available, so I had to be cautious. But I gave immediately an advance of more money for the most needy to the secretary of the church.

We soon heard that the relief promised was more generous than we had dared to hope. Yet, when we came back to organize its distribution and received fuller reports of the needs over our wide area, what we thought would last for eight weeks was almost exhausted in two. Only the most distressed families, with no reserves and little opportunity to earn, received help. Even so there were 1,300 such families whom we could not refuse.

Church World Service rightly seeks to serve all needy persons irrespective of their religion. It seeks to enable Christians in other countries to serve non-Christians. But when relief is available we have a special responsibility to our needy brethren in Christ.

The Church World Service clothes arrived and were sent out at once to our village centers. Thirty bales of them. They were eagerly received. But with so many people in need we have been unable to spin out our resources to reach all of them and some have felt bitter.

On the other hand, one poor woman received a frock. She came back to say, "Thank you, but my child is naked. Please take this frock back and, if possible, let me have something for my child instead."

Another said, "You gave me two garments for my children, but a neighbor has had none. Take one of these for them."

As this is written, it is time to plan the plowing and sowing for next year. But there is not enough rice to feed the family for the year, and certainly none to cover the cost of seed. We hope that since Church World Service has helped so generously in the first shock of the floods, it will come to our aid now in this necessary and costly rehabilitation for the coming season.

Reviews of Recent Books

 The Old Testament and the Fine Arts. Cynthia Pearl Maus. Harper, 1954. $5.95.

The Old Testament and the Fine Arts is a huge compilation, drawn from treasures old and new, of pictures, hymns, poems and stories. It is a big book of over 800 pages, with 100 full-page pictures, 77 hymns, 244 poems and 63 stories. Divided into six parts, each with several subdivisions, the book is carefully arranged and thoroughly indexed, so that in spite of its size, it is a usable reference work. There is a scholarly appendix giving a brief statement of the origin and content of the Old Testament. Much of the content is of a very high order.

Perhaps the greatest fault of the book is that it is really too big. A third of the material could have been left out and it would not have suffered at all. Some pictures are singularly uninspired, the kind of cheap pictures which were once used to illustrate Bible storybooks, while one searches in vain for the works of such a truly great modern Bible interpreter as Guy Rowe. Many of the stories are but dry and uninspired retellings of Bible stories. And some of the hymns are of indifferent quality and doubtful revelance. Thus a book of 600 pages or less using the cream of the material here presented, and with the inclusion of some of the best new pictures of the Old Testament characters and scenes, would have been much more attractive. Miss Maus might well assume, too, that the Bible is in the hands of her readers and give more space to penetrating interpretations of the Bible pictures instead of using three fourths of her space in art interpretations to the retelling of the story. At this point she could well learn much from the work of the late Albert E. Bailey.

The reviewer would highly recommend the book for ministers, Sunday school teachers, and for homes. It is a worthy companion to Christ and the Fine Arts and, though overgrown, so well indexed and arranged that it is easy to use.—Edward K. Ziegler.

KINGDOM GLEANINGS

The General Brotherhood Board has authorized and formed a new Brethren Placement Service and placed a full-time man on the job. It will include the present Placement and Relocation column in the Gospel Messenger and also act as a referral agency to help locate and place interested persons in available jobs. This will continue to be a free service and therefore we can take no responsibility for guaranteeing jobs or persons for jobs. We want to be of service to you and to the church. If you are attempting to locate work or are trying to find a person to do a certain job please contact us. This in no way obligates you. Please let us hear from you. Ambler church, Pa., has seventy-five used Brethren Hymnals in fair condition that they are willing to dispose of. Anyone interested in acquiring them write: Paul Norris, 310 Forrest Ave., Ambler, Pa.

Charles E. Dumond, Jr., pastor of the Hutchinson church, Kansas, was named by the Junior Chamber of Commerce of that city as "young man of the year." Bro. Dumond is also juvenile officer of the Hutchinson police department. In nominating him Chief of Police Carl Spriggs praised not only his leadership and vision but his unfailing helpful attitude in all ways.

Scheduled for the TV series, Frontiers of Faith, for March 13 is a discussion of Education in Protestantism. Dr. Liston Pope, dean of Yale Divinity School; Dr. Ralph W. Sockman of Christ church, Methodist; Dr. Nathan Marsh Pusey, president of Harvard University; and possibly John D. Rockefeller, Jr., will participate. The program comes over NBC at 1:30-2:00 p.m. (E.S.T.).

During March the following material aid projects are being emphasized: food for foreign work campers who need help to enable them to attend work camps; layettes (cut garments); medical kits; pharmaceutical samples; garden and hand tools. These items are needed for distribution during the spring months. Groups or individuals interested in these projects should contact W. Ray Kyle, Brethren Service Center, New Windsor, Md.

The Rural Life Association will hold its annual meeting at Earlham College, Richmond, Ind., on March 19. The business meeting will begin at 10:00; new members of the board will be elected. In the afternoon, beginning at 1:45, Robert S. Zigler will speak and show slides of his trip to Afghanistan for Heifer Project, Inc., and Dr. James Thorp, director of soils research at Earlham, will show slides and discuss his work in Australia from June 1954 to January 1955. An informal discussion will follow in which Dr. Thorp and Mr. Zigler will share their observations on agriculture, rural problems and technical assistance.

The TV program, Bless This House, produced cooperatively by theWLW-D station and the Church Federation of Greater Dayton, is reaching approximately seventy-five thousand viewers each Sunday afternoon from 1:30 to 2:00 o'clock (E.S.T.). The program begins with a six-minute skit setting forth some pertinent problem of family life and is then followed by a discussion period in which a leader and four others participate.

Valley of the Sun is a recently produced Brethren sound film on foreign missions in India. It answers the question, "What can a small Christian church and school accomplish for Christ in India's small villages?" Color, 16mm sound, 25 minutes. Rental, $7.00. Reserve dates now for spring and summer use on Sunday evenings, in Bible school and camps. Order from the Visual Education Service, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

As congregations plan to elect delegates to Annual Conference they should note that representation is based on membership as follows: "Each congregation having a membership of 200 or fewer may send one delegate. Each congregation having more than 200 may send one additional for each 200 or fraction thereof." Congregations should have credential blanks well in advance of Annual Conference and have them properly signed for their delegates to take with them.

The Brethren Service Commission announces the addition of a new film to the film library, The Sound of a Stone. This film shows how gossip and rumors can grow until they affect the lives of innocent persons. A parent becomes certain that a young teacher is a Communist when his son brings home a book that is on a surversive literature list. Without reason or thought he passes the word along about this teacher who has been well known to all the people for many years. Various situations develop which leave the audience with much to think about. Good for high school age and above. Color, 26 minutes. Rental, $10.50. Order from Visual Education Service, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Brotherhood Theme: Seek First His Kingdom

Women's work of Michigan is using the new folder, Your Dollars at Work in His Kingdom, as a total program interpretation "quickie." Their goal is to give $873.30 to support the Brotherhood program for six hours, from three to nine o'clock, the afternoon of April 24.

La Verne College

Enrollment for second semester has held up to the first semester and is above the second semester a year ago. Total enrollment is 311, with 214 full-time. Slightly over 50% of the full-time students are members of the Church of the Brethren; men and women are almost evenly divided.

The chapel choir will tour Northern California, Oregon and Washington from March 25 to April 10, appearing in churches and high schools in some twenty communities.

Student elections for the coming year have just resulted in the following officers: Student body president, Gorman Miller, Indiana; commissioner of publications, George Camp, Wenatchee; commisisoner of forensics, David Hurlbut, Laton; commissioner of finance, Mark Coffman, Glendale, Ariz.; commissioner of athletics, Maurice Flora, Los Angeles; and commissioner of welfare, Peggy Zimmerman, Pomona.

Dick Coffman, son of Rev. and Mrs. John I. Coffman of Van Nuys, Calif., has been elected editor of the Campus Times, student newspaper, for the second semester of this year.

A La Verne College banquet will be held in connection with the Pacific Coast regional conference at Wenatchee. The banquet date is April 23, 6:00 p.m.; the speaker, President Harold D. Fasnacht.

Baccalaureate and commencement dates for this year are Sunday, May 29, and Thursday, June 2, respectively.

La Verne College was host on Feb. 22 to the San Gabriel Hi-Y and Y-Teen conference, sponsored by the Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. The theme of the conference was Matters That Affect You Today. Members of the faculty were leaders.

The Claremont Colleges artists course in which La Verne College students participate during the 1954-1955 academic year has included Robert Weede, baritone; the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra; Rudolph Firkusny, pianist; and Jascha Heifetz, violinist.

Church Council Plans Religious Education Buildings Near Schools

The Virginia Council of Churches approved plans for the construction of religious education buildings adjacent to public schools throughout the state over the next twenty-five years. Under the plans, religious instruction would be given to public school pupils in these buildings as part of the released-time program. Council leaders said the special religious courses to be taught in each community would be those approved by local church authorities and would be keyed for the instruction of pupils in each of the elementary grades as well as for high school students.

Churches Asked to Increase Work Among Servicemen

The air Force Chief of Chaplains says people of other countries are more influenced by the behavior of American service personnel than by mission programs, the Voice of America or state speeches. He called on churches to give increased attention to providing religious resources for servicemen. He said religious groups should reach those about to be inducted as well as members of the armed forces. He suggested that churches inform their members serving overseas about mission stations and native churches. In this way, the servicemen will be able to keep in touch with religious activities and get to know a better class of people.

Oratorical Contests Sponsored by WCTU

An intercollegiate oratorical contest with state and national awards to encourage study of the alcohol problem by young people has been announced by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. State contests will be sponsored by state W.C.T.U.'s and state winners will be eligible to enter the national competition. Mrs. Glenn G. Hays, president of the W.C.T.U., said, "The contests are to encourage and promote research among young people on the harmful effects of drink in the areas of health, safety, home and social welfare, crime, juvenile delinquency, and economic and industrial security, as well as on individual happiness and capacity for progress and achievement." State contests must be completed by June 1. Rules for the contest may be obtained from the National W.C.T.U. in Evanston or from state organizations.

Lutherans Plan Million-Dollar Refugee Program

The National Lutheran Council voted to contribute $600,000 towards a $1,000,000 three-year program designed to expedite the resettlement of refugees in this country. During the same period, the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod will contribute $400,000. Approval of the program followed a plea for speeding up admission of refugees to the United States under the 1953 Refugee Relief Act.

Bulk of CO's From Mennonite, Amish Groups

Two thirds of the country's conscientious objectors are Mennonites and Amish, according to the National Service Board for Religous Objectors. At the beginning of 1955, there were 2,612 men in alternative civilian service who listed Mennonite or Amish churches as their denominational preference. The next largest group, 343, comes from the Church of the Brethren. Jehovah's Witnesses rank third with 163.

John R. Mott Dies at Eighty-nine

Dr. John R. Mott, often called the elder statesman of Christianity, died in January at the age of eighty-nine. He had been an honorary president of the World Council of Churches since its founding, after having been a leader in all its preliminary conferences. He helped to found the Student Volunteer Movement and for thirty years was its guiding spirit. In 1946 he was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize for his participation in church and mission work.

Report Increased Service to the Blind

Increased service to blind persons around the world was offered during 1954 by the John Milton Society. Dr. Dwight C. Smith, general secretary, told the society's annual meeting that widespread use had been made of the recorded Sunday-school lessons and long-playing records inaugurated by the society a year ago. A series of records containing Sunday-school lessons for a thirteen-week period was issued each quarter during the past year. The records were primarily planned for the more than 1,000 blind teachers of Sunday-school classes in the United States and Canada. The John Milton Society is sponsored by more than fifty Protestant denominations in the United States and Canada in order to render Christian service to the blind through Braille literature and other methods.

Christian Youth Group Opposes UMT

Opposition to any system of peacetime universal military training was voiced by the United Christian Youth Movement in a letter sent to all members of the U. S. Senate and House. The UCYM is the official youth agency of the National Council of Churches. The letter which was signed by the UCYM chairman said, "Universal military training is neither a democratic nor a Christian answer to the problems confronting our nation. Our young people want you to be aware of their convictions."

Lutherans Ask Revision of Immigration Act

A resolution urging Congress to revise the McCarran-Walter Immigration Act was adopted by the National Lutheran Council at its thirty-seventh meeting. The resolution noted that President Eisenhower had expressed concern over "inequities" in the act in his State of the Union message. The council urged members of Congress to correct these undesirable provisions by enacting legislation which establishes a just and workable substitute for or modification of the national origins quota system and which gives to citizens who have in good faith acquired U. S. citizenship the rights and protection enjoyed by American-born citizens.

In another action, the council voiced concern over serious moral problems prevailing at some military bases. Dr. Carl F. Yaeger, associate secretary of the Lutheran Service Commission, said, "The church can no longer put off coming to closer grips with the problems of our youth facing military service as our nation settles down to a garrison life of long duration."

Need for Missionaries to Train Villagers

Missionaries trained to teach better methods of farming, nutrition and child care to villagers of the Middle and Far East are the most urgent need of those areas, according to John H. Reisner, agricultural specialist. Dr. Reisner recently returned from four months in Asia and the Near East and reported on village extension programs being carried on in many countries. He said, "Most of the people of the Middle and Far East live in rural areas. We urgently need missionaries who can go out to the villages and help rural people meet their basic needs in health, farming and family life."

Warns New Literates Must Get Christian Literature

A warning that teaching the world's "silent billion" illiterates to read and write is dangerous business unless they are provided with Christian literature was sounded by Dr. Floyd Shacklock, new executive secretary of the Committee on World Literacy and Christian Literature. He said, "Millions in the world are on the march for the things we take for granted. The hungry want food; the sick want health; and the illiterate want to learn how to read and write. Meeting this greatest hunger of all—the hunger of the mind—is the irresistible opportunity facing the churches today. It is the open door which no man can close."

Publish Hymnal for Use in Institutions

A new hymnal has been published especially for use in hospitals, psychiatric institutions, homes for the aged, penal centers and other agencies. It contains 167 selections and was prepared by a special committee of institutional leaders. Selections include some of the better known hymns as well as new ones. Hymns were chosen for the "positive contribution they will make to the sound mental health of persons in various types of institutions."

Australian Opinion Divided on Treatment of Aborigines

Australian opinion is still divided over equal rights and opportunities for the aborigines but, more and more, voices of influence are raised in their behalf. A well-known professor of anthropology at Sydney University, A. P. Elkin, recently asserted that although the training of the aborigines should be related to their background and regions, "aborigines do a white man's work and therefore must be educated to understand our economy."

Congregationalists Approve New Mission Program

The Congregational Christian Churches will seek to raise $6,280,000 annually for a new world missionary program. The new program will combine the missionary functions of the denomination's general boards and agencies with those of its state conferences. The American Board in the past has conducted evangelistic, educational and medical work in Africa, India, Ceylon, Japan, the Philippines, Turkey, Syria, Lebanon, Greece, France and the Pacific islands.

News Briefs

Lutheran World Relief, material aid arm of the National Lutheran Council, set a new record in 1954, when it shipped overseas 20,000,000 pounds of relief supplies. The food, clothing, medicines and other supplies were distributed to refugees and other needy in thirteen countries.

American Lutheran groups sent a total of 284 missionaries—the largest number in eight years—to 18 countries during 1954. The missionaries represent nine Lutheran church bodies and two church-related agencies in North America. The total number of Lutheran missionaries from North America is now 1,687.

A total of 171 television stations presented the one-minute daily Bible readings prepared by the American Bible Society for use between Thanksgiving and Christmas. This was part of the observance of the world-wide Bible reading program. The society is giving consideration to the production of films for daily use throughout the year.

In Mexico, several translations of the entire New Testament are undergoing final polishing before publication by the American Bible Society. Among them are the Chol, the Tzeltal, the Tarascan and the Totonac. Many other Indian groups in Mexico live in areas where they have little or no use of Spanish and can be reached only through their own tongues.

Enrollment in theological seminaries last fall was five per cent greater than in 1953. Official figures on students in colleges, universities and graduate schools showed that seminaries of all faiths reported a fall enrollment of 28,760. The number of freshmen represented an increase of 7.6 per cent over the former enrollment.

Village libraries, which include a tin trunk carrier, a lantern and literature generously supported by groups of women especially in America, have been placed in two hundred villages in Egypt, Pakistan and India.

Your Service Outreach through Relief and Rehabilitation

Church World Service

Christian love at a Pusan orphanage softens war's tragedy for these two Korean boy amputees. Brethren Service will begin work in Korea this spring

The fourth in a series of five interpretative articles in preparation for One Great Hour of Sharing.

WHEN Brethren Service became one of the major general boards of the Church of the Brethren by action of the 1941 Annual Conference, one of its functions was indicated as that of personal rehabilitation and social reconstruction in the name of and spirit of Christ. Relief and rehabilitation were among the most important goals listed in its charter.

Since 1946 relief and rehabilitation have remained the largest segment of Brethren Service activity. In its plans for this phase of its work the Brethren Service Commission early determined that it should be as much as possible work of rehabilitation rather than merely direct relief.

Europe has been the principal field of Brethren Service relief and rehabilitation work. Among the first countries which Brethren Service entered at the close of World War II were Belgium and Holland.

Work in France involved the distribution of material aid and a shipment of heifers. This work was done largely in co-operation with other agencies. At Dunkerque, work was carried on for approximately a year involving material aid, especially for school children, and craft and recreational programs.

A unit consisting of five men was sent to Italy in 1946. One of the most interesting features of the project there was a children's club, through which the children learned games, crafts, personal hygiene and healthy group living.

Late in 1946 Brethren activities were undertaken in Poland. Besides distribution of food, clothing and equipment, this project undertook to help with rehabilitation of Polish agriculture, and sewing and domestic arts were taught.

Projects in these countries had closed by the end of 1949. However, work in Germany and Austria, which started in 1947, has continued. In Germany, the Christopher Sauer workshops which were established near Bremen have expanded to give vocational guidance to many handicapped persons.

The first work camp in Germany, with American young people working side by side with European youth, was held in 1948. This program has increased to six work camps and a peace seminar planned for the summer of 1955.

The new Brethren Volunteer Service program for the first time assigned volunteers to Europe in 1949. This program has widened to include a variety of duties and service in many more countries. Volunteers and alternative service workers are presently participating in responsible positions in the regular Brethren Service program in Germany, Austria and Greece, as well as in isolated projects in refugee camps, children's homes, hospitals, settlement houses, etc., in these countries and in Turkey, England and Italy.

In 1949 Brethren Service had the opportunity to enter into an arrangement with the United States Department of State to bring German teenagers to the States to live for a year in American homes and attend American high schools. Although the size of this program has decreased in recent years, it is hoped that new possibilities might be found to increase the program and to extend it to other countries. The program in Germany now includes American students living in German homes and a vast program on continued contact with German students who have participated in the program in years past.

Through the efforts of Brethren workers and in co-operation with the International Refugee Organization and the World Council of Churches, many displaced persons living in Germany and Austria were able to emigrate and are now living in America. The present program of refugee resettlement, under the 1953 Refugee Relief Act, is administered through our Linz office and is active in both Germany and Austria.

In 1947 four workers were located in Vienna, Austria, their first assignments being the distribution of relief supplies, aid to agriculture and work with displaced persons. The Austrian program has a richly varied character. Besides the usual distribution of clothing, food and other relief supplies, the list of projects has included a shoe-repair shop, nursery and kindergarten schools for refugee children, a vocational school for refugee boys who were not eligible for such training in the regular Austrian schools, assistance in the establishment and ongoing program of tuberculosis hospital for refugees at Thalham, a general public health program for thousands of refugees living in overcrowded barrack camps in Upper Austria, work camps, student exchange and refugee resettlement. Brethren Volunteer Service volunteers and alternative service workers are active in the program in Austria, assisting in the administration of Brethren Service programs and participating in construction and agricultural rehabilitation.

At the invitation of Archbishop Spyridon of Greece in 1950, the Brethren Service Commission in cooperation with the World Council of Churches, organized a team which has distrubuted seed and assisted in improvement of agricultural methods, food conservation, village refugee rehabilitation and swamp drainage.

Brethren Service in Asia and Africa has been confined mainly to the providing of material aid. However, the General Brotherhood Board in its November meeting voted to begin Brethren Service work in Korea this spring. Hopes are still high to have this program under way in the near future.

In Latin America Brethren Service activities have reached to Mexico, Ecuador and Puerto Rico. The work in Puerto Rico began as a Civilian Public Service unit, but has continued as one of the Brethren Service relief and rehabilitation projects. The program includes the hospital and public health project. The recently established full-time dental service is still inadequate to meet the great need. The community service program continues to reach out into the area with clubs for boys and girls and activities for adults. The academy serves a much neglected area and material aid continues as a part of the program. While Puerto Rican help has been used to a great extent, mainland personnel has always been needed for certain types of skilled work and supervision.

Relief and rehabilitation activities in the United States help make these programs around the world possible—material aid collection and processing, providing homes and work in the refugee resettlement program, student exchange, Brethren Service centers at New Windsor and Nappanee and soon on the west coast.

In all of these programs you have shared through the years. One Great Hour of Sharing in 1955 provides another opportunity for you to share in the ongoing programs of Brethren Service relief and rehabilitation —in the name and spirit of Christ.

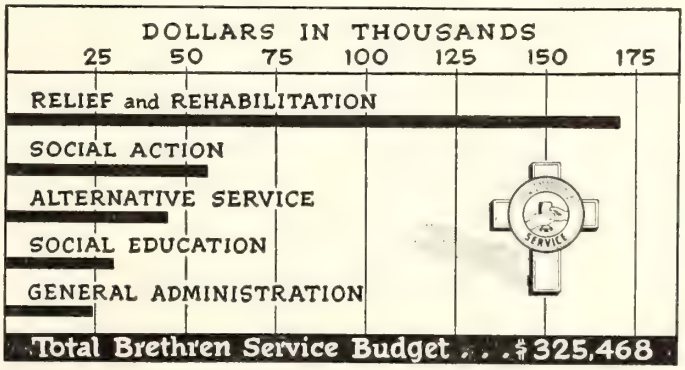
A personal note from a young Bulgarian refugee in Istanbul, Turkey, says, in part: "I have also some Bulgarian friends who work for Americans and we often go from one house to another to inspire each other, because without spirit it is difficult for a man to live. . . ."

He is another of the homeless thousands who look to America as the land of salvation. When he left his native Bulgaria three years ago for the freedom of the Western World, the gates slammed behind him. Turkey does not want him because he is a Christian, so he appeals to brother Christians for the chance he needs to start his life again.



This story is repeated from lonely throats in Germany, Austria, and other Western European nations. The statistics above show that we are beginning to listen and respond.

Will 1,000 families really learn to know us as their "brethren"?

Major Brethren Service Expenditures, 1954-55

General administraion comprises administration of relief and rehabilitation and of the Brethren Service Commission

Symbolism in Worship

Murray L. Wagner
Troy, Ohio

THERE is no escaping the presence and influence of symbols. The alert person can see in everything the symbol of reality which gives value to the visible. The photographs we cherish are not persons, but are symbols of invisible personalities; the words of this page are but symbols of intangible thoughts.

Our Brethren heritage is compounded of symbols even though our church walls and floors may be bare and the furnishings are scant and simple. The very scarcity of equipment is a symbol. Our father's beard and our mother's garb were symbols—but of what? Do we know?

Unless we seek to understand some elements of Christian symbolism many rich treasures escape us and appear as ancient and meaningless as beards and capes appear to people who do not know their significance. It becomes a part of our Christian education to search out the wealth imbedded in the visible aspects of our faith.

Worship Centers

One sees an increasing emphasis upon worship centers in the children's departments of our churches. It is to be hoped that these do not became simply so much ornamentation or modern equipment, but that the teachers and children are continually reminded of the significance of the table, the (empty) cross, the candles and the Bible. Let there be no extraneous matter lying on the table—no old hymnals, pencils, or a teacher's gloves. And when the offering is presented, let no empty plates be returned to the table—our gifts are small enough without symbolizing our withholding.

It is well for children to be guided through the church and shown various symbols with their explanations. Throughout the tour the leader should encourage the children's questions and observations. Why is there a steeple (or why not) on the church tower? Is there any real reason why the pulpit is placed in that location? Does the number of steps in the chancel mean anything? Why not have the baptistry downstairs? What does "narthex" mean? Tell us about the word nave and what it has to do with our salvation. Do you see any reason for the center aisle leading right up to the present terminus? Is there a scripture suggested by the route the aisle takes?

Young people must have an abundance of questions concerning the architecture of their church, the furnishings, the doctrines and the ordinances. They should be given the opportunity to express their questions and their doubts frequently. Too much of our preaching and teaching has been in an unknown tongue and our youth are following blindly ancient traditions rather than abundantly enjoying their Christian experience.

Meaning of Symbols

Let our people know in class, in discussion, in conversation, in visitation the meaning of our symbols —the anointing, the written Word, the cross (and the crucifix), the baptism, the pulpit, the rich symbolism of the Lord's Supper, the Brethren Service cup and the vast host of signs which have allowed us to enter into more and more of the "unsearchable riches of Christ."

Always in the meditation on symbols we stand in danger of ending our search with the art itself. Symbols are justified only as the means to an end—the channel that leads us to truth. Many an ancient brother was presumed saved because of his beard or lost by lack of it and many a modern brother is equally wide of the truth because of his defense of a holy table or lack of it, his adherence to feet washing or his abandonment of it. If we make these symbols of our faith an end in themselves we stand in need of a soul-searching review of the first and second commandments of the Decalogue.

Every Christian symbol—whether written in Latin, Hebrew, Greek or English, whether it is of wood or flame, whether it be the printed word or the action in washing of feet or baptizing the penitent—must point the soul upward to the Redeemer, Jesus Christ. If our spirits stop with our eyes on the spire we are still earth-bound.

It is a glorious privilege that Brethren have. If we search the Scriptures, delve into the history of Christianity, meditate on the works of the masters of our symbolism—we shall see emerging new worlds for our conquest, worlds not made with hands, if we wish the fruits of victory. Parents, teachers, ministers will grow as they search and as they accompany others in the quest.

Two excellent books dealing with the subject of Christian symbolism are: Our Christian Symbols, by Friedrich Rest, $2.50; The Church of Our Fathers, by Roland H. Bainton, $3.00. Copies may be ordered from the Brethren Publishing House, 16-24 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

A Church Meets Her Needs

Fred M. Bowman

SUNDAY-SCHOOL classroom facilities were greatly improved at the Keyser Church of the Brethren (First District of West Virginia) with the addition of a Sunday-school building three years ago. These additional classrooms were made possible by purchasing and remodeling a large two-apartment residence located on the lot adjoining the church property.

For a number of years preceding 1951, the members of the Keyser church had realized that something would have to be done to relieve a very serious classroom situation. All of the children's classes were crowded into the basement of the church. Most of these classes had no outside light. The basement was constantly damp, sometimes with water standing on the floor and sometimes flooded so that it could not be used at all. Two classes were crowded into the kitchen, while other classes were divided by folding partitions or curtains. Seven classes were meeting in the basement, two in the church sanctuary and three in individual rooms at the front of the church. Many of the children's classes were too large. In order to provide smaller working groups and better age group division, some of these classes needed to be divided. There was, almost literally, no room for growth in the Sunday school. Rooms could not be attractively arranged, blackboards (if available) were makeshift, and there was little room to arrange for a worship center. Sunday-school attendance, which has grown from an average of 101 in 1944 to about 140 in 1948, had reached a standstill.

Realizing the tragedy of these conditions, it was obvious that something must be done. Better facilities were needed for those who were already attending Sunday school, and there were still many children in the community who ought to be brought into the Sunday school. The church, if it was to fulfill its mission in the community, must continue to grow.

The problem was often discussed in the regular workers' conferences where the need for additional facilities was most urgently realized. The board of Christian education had grappled with this problem for a number of years. The parents whose children were crowded into the damp dark basement were quick to realize the need. As a result, the need was made known to the entire membership of the congregation.

Two possible ways of providing additional classrooms were suggested and considered. One was to buy a large, two-apartment building next to the church and convert it into a Sunday-school building. The other was to build an addition at the back of the church, using the space then used for a parking lot. There were two main objections to building. One, of course, was the cost, estimated at first at twenty-five to thirty thousand and then rising to forty thousand dollars or more with increasing building costs. Another objection was the fact that an addition to the church would take the only available parking space.

As a result, when it was learned in 1951 that the building next to the church (previously unavailable) could be secured by the church, it was decided to purchase and remodel this building. Incidentally, we doubled the parking space and cut the cost approximately in half. Possession of the building was secured in August of 1951 and the work of remodeling was begun later that fall. By early spring of 1952, the remodeling had been completed and the building was ready for use. The remodeling consisted of removing one wall and putting in one new wall; making three new doorways; building two "breezeways" between the Sunday-school building and the church; remodeling rooms by putting in bulletin boards, blackboards, etc.; completely painting the interior; installing a heating plant; rewiring the building; and putting walls, ceiling and floors in the attic to provide for a youth recreation and departmental worship room.

The building when remodeled, provided the church with two large rooms used for departmental assemblies for primaries and juniors, a room used as a Sunday-school office, nine additional Sunday-school classrooms, and rest rooms. Most of the rooms were furnished with new tables and chairs. All of the rooms are dry, well-heated and well-lighted.

The addition of this building has been a great blessing to the Keyser Church of the Brethren. The effectiveness of the church in its Sunday-school program has been greatly increased. Through the use of these better facilities, it has been possible for the Sunday-school teachers to do a more effective job of teaching. Sunday-school attendance has increased so that it averaged 172 for the past year. The indebtedness of $8,000 for the remodeling of the building has been liquidated in less than three years.

One of the great needs of Northern Nigeria is trained leaders for governmental offices when the country becomes independent in 1956. Here the senior teacher of the Garkida primary school is guiding the training of two young Nigerians

In some of the discussion about the future of Nigeria we hear a lot about the year 1956. I assume that is to be the year of independence. What will independence mean for Nigeria and especially for the Christians there?

Nigeria is divided geographically into two main areas—Northern and Southern Nigeria. We are working in Northern Nigeria. Southern Nigeria is much more developed in the way of education and in providing all kinds of facilities for its people. They've had schools and hospitals for a much longer period of time than the people of Northern Nigeria. Northern Nigeria is backward.

There is a real feeling of animosity between the two groups. The Southern Nigerians—the Eboes, the Effics and others—are aggressive people because of their education. They provide most of the leaders, the lawyers and the doctors and the teachers. The sectional animosity really comes to a head in this constitutional freedom that's supposed to be granted to all of Nigeria in 1956, because many of the Northerners are smart enough to know that if they get constitutional freedom they do not have the leaders in Northern Nigeria to carry on their work. Therefore, Northern Nigeria is doing everything she can to keep from getting it. They want to remain as a British protectorate. Southern Nigeria will, without a doubt, receive its constitutional freedom in 1956.

What will happen in Northern Nigeria if it does not receive constitutional freedom? According to all that we could find out from everybody we talked to—that is, Britishers and missionaries and Nigerians and church administrative committees—if Northern Nigeria does not receive her freedom in 1956, there will be very little change in our work. I mean there will be no governmental change in the way that it is controlled. There are certain changes that ought to take place very quickly and very rapidly, even if we do not have constitutional freedom. In Southern Nigeria, no one knows what's goin to happen there to Christian missions when they receive their constitutional freedom. The governor of Adamawa Province said that in cases where missions were doing what he could call a down-to-earth ministry, he doubted if there would be very much danger. Those groups who do nothing but preach without any educational or medical or agricultural work will probably have some difficulty.

If Northern Nigeria eventually gets its independence, will there be more of the Mohammedan influence in the general administration and government than there is now?

If all of Nigeria would go independent and receive its constitutional freedom, it would be a Mohammedan government. There are indications in many places that the government, however, even though it is Mohammedan, has not been adverse to the Christian faith, though there always has been some conflict because Mohammedanism is a religion that is not very congenial to other faiths.

Would it be fair to say that Mohammedanism is more of a problem, if not necessarily a threat, to the developing church in Nigeria than communism?

Mohammedanism at the present time presents a far greater problem to the Christian church in Nigeria than does communism. I do not mean that there are not the elements in Nigeria on which communism could thrive. They are there but so far they haven't developed.

Our Board sometime ago gave its approval to our entering into a united church, the Church of the Sudan. What is its present status?

At the present time, instead of becoming the United Church of the Sudan it has become more of a Council of Churches in the Sudan. In other words, and I think this is unfortunate, many of the home boards refused to go along with the idea that this is to become an indigenous church in the Sudan. The churches on the field—the Nigerian churches—would like to co-operate, as far as I know, but the home boards have not been willing to go along. They have that much of a hold on the churches over there that they have to give them their permission to go ahead. Stover Kulp says that the Lutheran Church has said to its churches in Nigeria that they may establish an independent church in Nigeria. As an independent church they may, if they want to, join the Church of the Sudan. Stover feels that once the independent church of the Lutherans is established in Nigeria it will only be a matter of a year or two until they will join the United Church.

Whona village chiefs, young and old, have come into a central place to pay their taxes. The beards indicate their maturing manhood

This woman is preparing food for a child who is ill in the hospital

One of the important items that has grown out of this whole discussion of the United Church of the Sudan is the forming of a Union Theological Training Center. I happened to be in Jos when about six or seven missions met together to discuss that, and there was a lot of enthusiasm for it. More than likely they will set it up in Gindiri, which is not too far from Jos; already they have decided to call a certain man belonging to the Reformed Church to be the first faculty member of this Union Theological Seninary. Though I use the word seminary it's more like a training school for ministers. It has been needed badly. Now it is moving forward. Most of the Nigerians are in favor of a united church. They can't understand why they are not in full fellowship when they move to another area where there is a Christian church.

Are they beginning to move?

More so than ever before—far more than ever before. Why, they have the problem there the same as we do here of moving from the country to the city.

In such a Council of Churches will the Brethren have representatives?

We are being represented in all the councils. We have two people representing us with this theological training group. Our group is known as a co-operative group in all of these enterprises, and I believe it has a real future.

We hear a good bit in mission circles and in discussions in the church about the changing role of the missionary in foreign mission work. Is the same thing happening in Africa?

It's happening in Nigeria the same as it's happening elsewhere; maybe not in as great a degree, but it's happening there. And it isn't going to be very long before the role of the missionary in Nigeria is going to be changed a great deal from what it was before. I mean that he must, more than ever before, turn his work over to the nationals. The missionary needs to push the nationals into positions of responsibility, even though he feels that the nationals are not ready for it. The missionary can be their counselor and trusted friend and adviser. He can help them grow in their jobs. I think it is still true the church in Nigeria is too much of a foreigner's church. The elder is a foreigner. The moderator of the district meeting is a foreigner. They do not have any national elders yet. Therefore, every elder of every local church is a foreigner. They haven't as yet introduced the new idea of the moderatorship. I think that really the

THE BEST IS NONE TOO GOOD FOR GOD

WHEN the Church of the Brethren in Garden City, Kansas, dedicated their beautiful new Spanish-mission style house of worship on May 2, 1954, they were offering their very best for the service of God. The story of this church is one of the inspiring stories of a church coming to vigorous new life and planning with wisdom and consecration to serve the present age "to the glory of God and my neighbor's good." These latter words, from the Sower press motto, are deeply carved in stone over the inviting entrance of the new church.

The building and dedication of the new church mark the beginning of the second half-century of our church in Garden City. When the district of Southwestern Kansas and Southeastern Colorado decided in 1904 to start a mission in Garden City, there were two Brethren families there, those of William Wise and George Wise. Elder S. E. Thompson of Fredonia began holding services in homes, later in a Baptist church on the site of the present building. The church was organized in 1906 with twenty-six charter members. Significant is the fact that the first person baptized in Garden City by Brother Thompson was R. L. Hill, a Negro, who was baptized on June 5, 1904, and was one of the charter members of the church.

The church had a steady growth across the years, sometimes with a resident pastor, sometimes served by visiting ministers or students from McPherson College. The congregation purchased the building at 8th and St. John Streets from the Baptists in 1907, for the sum of $3,000. It had been built in 1898 by the Friends. With some remodeling and the purchase of a parsonage adjoining, the church got along until the recent rapid growth made a new building imperative.

Bro. Archie L. Patrick, a licensed minister in the school supply business, was called in 1948 to be pastor. Soon after he began his ministry and was ordained, it became evident that the church must have a more commodious and worshipful building. A building fund was started in 1949. During the next four years, the church school completely over-ran the facilities, with classes being held in several other buildings nearby.

Bro. Forrest Groff, church building counselor, was called in to plan the new building. Ground was broken on April 5, 1953, after the parsonage was moved to a new location. The old church was dismantled and the material in it sold, as soon as the new building was far enough along in construction to be used for worship and classes.

Construction of the new brick building, with its graceful stone tower, was directed by Bro. Harold Johnson of Canton, Ill., with much volunteer labor by members and friends of the church.

The church sanctuary has a seating capacity of 210 with seats for 24 in the choir. The fellowship hall which adjoins the sanctuary can be opened as an auxiliary to the sanctuary, bringing total seating capacity to 366. There are adequate and well-lighted church school rooms in the basement, also assembly rooms and an office. The total cost of the building with furnishings was under $90,000.

At the dedication services on May 2, 1954, Bro. Desmond W. Bittinger, president of McPherson College, preached the dedicatory sermon. By this time, membership in the Garden City church had reached 229, and average church school attendance for the months preceding dedication was 173. Perhaps the spirit of the entire congregation as they face the new opportunities opened up by having a lovely new church building is best expressed in the words of the pastor in the dedication booklet:

"The chief attraction of the house of God is the Christ who comes to us through Word and sacrament. Christ has made the church a place where glad tidings shall be proclaimed. Because Christ is the head of the church it is a place where the love of God shines forth. It is a place where fear and despondency are dispelled. It is a place where through the preaching of the pure Word trust and confidence rest upon the soul.

"May our new church ever be a place of prayer, of pardon, peace and power for both young and old. May they who worship here ever remember to 'expect great things from God, and attempt great things for God.' " missionary wants the nationals to be in charge. The problem has been to put them into positions of responsibility in which they have had very little experience so far, because they seem to be quite different from us in their methods of working and accepting responsibility.

Is the need for missionary personnel as great as ever before?

Every one of our missionaries is working too hard. The opportunities for Christian service, the calls from surrounding villages for classes in religious instruction, the opportunity for village extension of the church, everything is just wide open, so that every missionary feels that he's just got to do more than he's ever done before. I felt that every one of them was doing more than he should be doing. Therefore, I think that the answer to your question is simply that there is more work there than the present staff can possibly get done.

I have one final question. What are the most urgent needs of the church in Nigeria?

One of the great needs at the present time is to become literate. The government is putting great stress on education. The church is looking to the educational system to produce literate and capable and trained leaders. Therefore, one of the great needs of the African church today is to become a literate church.

The second is materials. Frank Laubach says, "No need to have literate people unless you give them literature that they can read." Now when these people become literate, the literature which we have is not sufficient, and they need it desperately. They need literature in the language that they can understand and can read.

A third need is more Bible instruction. Take our classes of religious instruction. There are a hundred people, many of them lay people, who are out on the cutting edge of the church, but they're desperately in need of more Biblical training. If they are the cutting edge of the church, I think sometimes that edge has become rather dull, because of the lack of Biblical teaching. They need that desperately. Of course, the other thing the church needs is more leaders—adequate leaders, and this whole process of training leaders is a slow one.

Can we conclude that in Nigeria the church is definitely there to stay?

Very much so. You see, there isn't any church building in Nigeria that has been built by foreign money. There isn't any church in Nigeria that's built on Church of the Brethren property. We own no property in Nigeria at all. The property that we have is leased. But no church in Nigeria is built on leased property. I'm talking about churches, now, in villages. They're all built on village property and by the people themselves. There are many evidences that the church in Nigeria is growing and becoming stronger. The missionaries could leave Nigeria tomorrow and the church could carry on.

The Family Counselor

The Family Counselor welcomes letters of inquiry. They may be addressed: Family Life Department, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Dear Counselor,

Within a few months I am to marry a man who means much to me, both for his sterling qualities of life and for the home he now offers me. I look forward with great anticipation, and hope that I can contribute my full share to the making of a happy home. My deepest concern is that this is a "ready-made" family; the mother who did a beautiful job of starting a growing family was taken away by death.

What can you tell me about how to win the confidence of these children, how to make them feel that I truly love them (for I already do) and, most of all, how to keep from reminding myself constantly that I am filling a place in my future husband's love once held by another and perhaps not doing it so well? I feel confident now—but can I remain so?

Concerned

Dear Friend,

I have the feeling that you realize this task, this opportunity, which lies ahead of you calls for very special qualifications in order that it may work out successfully and happily. The fact that you realize this and have a wholesome concern are counts in your favor. It is not easy to be a good first wife and a worthy mother and it is even less easy to be a good second wife and a worthy stepmother. However, the harder the task, the greater the joys and satisfactions that go with its successful accomplishment.

The quality most needed to take with you into this situation is, of course, love, love for your companion and love for his children. If you and your future husband have real affection for each other, the children will sense it and appreciate it. If you have real love for the children evidenced by your respect for their needs and feelings, they will sense it too and be drawn by it.

I feel strongly that you will need to center your thoughts not on what you can get out of the new venture, but on what you can give to those concerned. Your ultimate happiness will depend upon the happiness of your husband and children. Christ's teachings prove their truth here as in all situations of life—in losing one's life for others, one finds it; in giving unselfishly, one receives.

Sometimes the friends of the family, the people of the church or community don't seem to know how to treat a second wife and stepmother. Unwittingly, they can aggravate the problem. So it will help if you can cultivate the quality of not being too sensitive to the reactions of people on the outside. Keep in mind it will take time to make your place in their hearts.

Take with you as you enter this new experience a generous portion of love, a stout heart, a sense of humor and the companionship of Christ and I will prophesy success. I have seen it work out beautifully.

room is being equipped with an automatic washer and dryer for the members to do their personal laundry if they so desire. —Mrs. Nettie Lumplin, Greenville, Ohio.

Prices Creek—We observed rally day at the beginning of our new Sunday-school year. Since our last report three have been baptized and one received by letter into our fellowship. During the past year sixteen members were received by baptism and six by letter. At an all-day Saturday meeting, Bro. J. Earl Hostetter, pastor of the Oakland church, and Bro. Herbert Richards of North Manchester, Ind., were guest speakers. Bro. Richards officiated at our communion service in the evening. Breakfast was served at the church on the following Sunday morning. During the Sunday-school hour the Waldo Emrick family of Richmond, Ind., presented a musical program, and Bro. Raymond Peters brought the morning message. Sisters Orpha Engle and Mary Richards and Bro. Earl Petry served as our delegates to district meeting.

One evening in November two junior classes gave a program with the filmstrip, Bill's Decision. The Homebuilders class conducted the chapel service at the Greenville Brethren Home on Dec. 19. Our Thanksgiving service was held in cooperation with the Castine church. A program on peace was held which included the filmstrip, Unto These My Brethren. The play, The Teen Club's Christmas, was presented by the young people's class.—Mrs. Verna Lee, Eldorado, Ohio.

Eastern Pennsylvania

Indian Creek—Bro. Jacob Miller of York held our evangelistic services. Bro. M. R. Zigler gave an interesting talk on Brethren Service work. Brethren Elmer Moyer and Joseph Moyer served as district meeting delegates. One Saturday Bro. Frank Carper of Palmyra gave an illustrated talk on his trip to the Holy Land and to the Brethren Service work in Europe. Two were added to the church by baptism. A group from our church held a service of hymns and a sermon at the Montgomery County prison at Norristown. The Sunday-school Christmas program was held on Sunday evening, Dec. 26. Our watch night service was held on New Year's Eve with Bro. Berkey Knavel bringing the message. The combined choirs of the Indian Creek and Hatfield churches presented a concert at the Hatfield church on Jan. 3. The student deputation team of Elizabethtown College gave a program in our church on Jan. 16. Our chorus presented a program at the old folks' home at Frederick on Jan. 20. We are sponsoring a seeds-for-relief project. On Feb. 6 Missionary Emma Ziegler was with us.—J. Wilford Price, Vernfield, Pa.

Middle Pennsylvania

Raven Run—Our officers were elected at our fall business meeting. Bro. Paul Dilling was elected elder. Our love feast services were held with Bro. Merle Detwiler of the Koontz congregation officiating. Dedication services were conducted for our new organ on Dec. 5. The organ was donated to the church by Brother and Sister Joe Long. Our Christmas program was held Dec. 24.—Mrs. Howard Graffious, Defiance, Pa.

Smithfield—Our evangelistic services were conducted by Bro. Charles Heltzel of Conemaugh. Brethren I. B. Kensinger and C. O. Berry preached for us while our pastor was away in revival services. Bro. Harrison Frantz was with us one Sunday in behalf of Bethany Hospital. At our last council meeting our pastor, Bro Frederick, was retained as elder for another year. We decided to undertake the support of a missionary. One Sunday afternoon four persons were baptized into our church. In the evening of the same day we held our love feast with Bro. Russell Snyder officiating, assisted by Bro. Frederick. The women of the church canned applesauce and pears and also quilted a quilt for the Morrison Cove Home. At Christmas time the women's group presented Christian Home calendars to each home represented in the church as well as to other homes in the community. The children and the young people presented Christmas programs and the women were in charge of the Thanksgiving and New Year's programs. Included in the New Year's program was the Marantha quartet from the Martinsburg church.—Mrs. Fred Hoover, Martinsburg, Pa.

Baker of Alum Bank, Pa. One was received into the church by baptism. Bro. Raymond R. Peters of Dayton, Ohio, held evangelical meetings in the Rummel church. Union Thanksgiving services were held in our church with Rev. John Gaus of the Lutheran church as speaker. The choirs were combined for this occasion. On Dec. 10, the young people presented the missionary play, White Christmas. The offering was used for the American Indians. On Dec. 19 the beginners sang at the morning service and the children's department and adult choir presented the cantata-pageant, The Christ Child, at the evening service. The young people sent toys to Falfurrias, Texas, at Christmas time. Two have been received by letter. In the absence of our pastor, Bro. I. C. Paul preached for us on Dec. 26. Beginning Jan. 9 we held a mission study on Sunday evenings. Bro. Clarence Rosenberger spent a week in our midst in the interest of Juniata College. He was also guest speaker one Sunday for both services.—Mrs. Warren Hoover, Windber, Pa.

Middle Maryland

Manor—On Nov. 14 Bro. Charles W. Green was ordained to the eldership. Elder Clarence Hunsberger was guest speaker for the morning service. Ordination services for Brother and Sister Green were conducted by Elders Hunsberger and S. Fred Spitzer, assisted by our pastor, Bro. J. Rowland Reichard. We particpated in the union Thanksgiving service which was held at the Downsville Christian church. The young people remembered the sick, aged and shut-ins with baskets of fruits, nuts and candy at the Thanksgiving season. On the evening of Dec. 19 the young people presented a cantata, The Other Wise Man. The Downsville Sunday school presented a Christmas program on Dec. 23; and the Manor Sunday school presented its program on Dec. 26. As an extra Christmas project this year, special offerings were received during December for the benefit of the Salvation Army. On Jan 1 union services were held at the Manor church with Rev. Ezra L. Dunnavant of the Downsville Christian church bringing the message. The Downsville church is being remodeled, redecorated and has had additional Sunday-school rooms added to it. They plan to have the project completed by April 17, when Bro. Roy K. Miller of Staunton, Va., will begin a week of evangelistic services. The meetings will conclude with the Sunday evening service on April 24. —Naomi H. Coffman, Hagerstown, Md.

Eastern Virginia

Midland—We held an all-day service at the church in connection with rally day. In the afternoon a program was presented by the Sunday school. Bro. Richard Grumbling held our fall revival meeting with three persons being baptized into the church. Our church was host church to the district CBYF rally on Dec. 5. During the past few months our women's work group has been making quilts. Some of the projects which the young adult class has undertaken during the past year includes the buying of Brethren Hymnals, repairing the old hymnals, buying new scarfs for the center table, pulpit and piano. This class is giving its class offerings each month to the Brotherhood Fund for missions. The CBYF group supported the Brotherhood program for five minutes, gave to the One Great Hour of Sharing and also contributed to the parsonage fund.—Mrs Thelma L. Dettra, Midland, Va.

First Virginia

Peters Creek—During the past quarter our church school and morning worship attendance has increased. Our fall revival was held by Bro. Harold Z. Bomberger of Westminster, Md. As a result of these meetings, three were received into the church by baptism and one by letter. During the absence of our pastor, guest ministers included Brethren Paul B. Sanger and John S. Showalter. A special Thanksgiving Day service was held with our pastor bringing the message. An offering was received for the building fund. A Christmas program was given by the children's department on Dec. 19. The Christmas Day service included a message by the pastor and the singing of Christmas carols. A school of missions was held during the month of February with classes for all age groups and a period of worship. Sunday evening services have included the films, Unto These My Brethren and A Christmas Carol. At another Sunday evening service Bro. H. C. Eller, district field representative, gave an illustrated lecture on the history and work of the churches in the district. We are making plans for the Lenten season. Bro. Clyde R. Shallenberger of the Hopewell church, Va., will be with us for a week of revival meetings following Easter. —Mary E. Naff, Roanoke, Va.

Northern Virginia

Cook's Creek—The choir presented the cantata, The Lord's Prayer, one Sunday evening. A two-week revival meeting was held at Garbers, with Bro. Carroll Ringgold as evangelist. At this time eight persons were received into the church by baptism. The annual men's work Thanksgiving service was held at Garbers with Bro. Elmer Early as guest speaker. The women's work joint Christmas social was held on Dec. 3. At the Dayton church on Dec. 19 the children had a program and presented a play called, Others. The young people gave the play, He Who Walks in Love. At the Garbers church on the following Sunday evening, the young people and children presented the pageant entitled O Worship Our King. The building at Dayton is progressing. India was the theme for our school of missions. Films were used at each session of the school.—Mrs. Eugene Erbaugh, Harrisonburg, Va.

A TIME for SHARPENING

LONG before the first day of spring a wise farmer, even one whose tools are as simple as this brother's scythe, will have checked to see that they are ready for busy days ahead. Perhaps his duties are no greater than keeping down weeds, cleaning out fence rows or making certain that houses and outbuildings are in shape. Even so he needs a sharp edge as well as a willing arm and a steady step. While his son checks on more complicated machinery and while his grandson learns about new tools for future harvests, this veteran will sharpen what he has in order to do what he knows best how to do.

So often the press of duties catches the Christian with his tools rusty, his barn in disorder and his yard threatened by weeds. Periodically we need days for sharpening —our wits, our sympathies, our perceptions of beauty, our tools for better service in the kingdom of God.

READERS WRITE . . . to the editor

The Gospel Messenger welcomes letters commenting on editorials, articles and news. Letters should be brief and brotherly.

Ministers and Social Security

I would like to comment on the letter to you by Margaret E. Bixler, New Windsor, Md., printed in the Jan. 22 issue, concerning the receiving of social security by ministers and its effects on the minister's freedom to speak his convictions on the inconsistency of the government with the teachings of Christ.

It should be recognized that social security is a fund into which one invests money and from which he later draws dividends. As such, the investors have a right to this income the same as anyone has a right to the dividends of an insurance policy. It is not unearned charity. There is no reason, then, why ministers should feel less free to speak their convictions.

It might be added, however, that speaking from the pulpit alone will not solve the world's ills. Mrs. Bixler calls our attention to the fact that "Christians [are] duty bound to do something about it." This does not mean only preachers; it also means those who sit in the pews.

I don't think ministers have ceased to speak against the ills of society but if they have it may be because their congregations no longer take them seriously. Ministers encourage stewardship and the Brotherhood continues a three per cent tithe; they preach love and brotherhood and still we have discrimination; they preach peace and still parents fail to see that their children know the teachings of Jesus on war; they preach temperance and church members continue to smoke and drink.

All the preachers in the world cannot by themselves save it. It will be saved only as church members, along with preachers, take up their crosses daily and follow him. —Lawrence E. Durr, Richmond, Va.

Act of Obedience

In the Dec. 11 issue there is a letter under the subject, "Misleading," by Glenn R. Coates. I feel he should back up and do some Bible study before criticising the other brother's article for he evidently failed to read the quotation in the other article, where he quotes Acts 2:38. Also read John 3:5 and Matt. 28:19. Here the Holy Spirit is mentioned three times in conjunction with baptism. And in Acts the promise is definite to any one who has sincerely repented, believed and is baptized. It does not say they may but they shall receive the Holy Ghost. Then if the person follows the leading he will be led into all truth, and grow in grace and the knowledge of the truth.... In Matt. 28:19 the Holy Ghost is in the third place or act, first God the Father, then the Son and last the Holy Ghost.

Water baptism is an act of obedience and for the remission of sins. It must be a great burden to the one that claims to accept Christ to go through life bearing the burden of his sins when Christ offered to forgive or remove the burden through the act of baptism, for no place do I find the promise of the remission of sin except by baptism....Let us all try to fit our lives to the New Testament teachings and not the Testament to our lives.—Harvey E. Miller, East Wenatchee, Wash.

Study of Communism

We are preparing a study on communism and the churches. Material from all parts of the country on this subject would be useful and welcome. Persons with information on any of the following three topics are invited to communicate with us at Union Theological Seminary, 3041 Broadway, New York 27, N. Y.: (1) Documented evidence of actual Communist attempts to infiltrate the churches or make use of clergymen—Protestant, Catholic, Eastern Orthodox or Jewish. (2) Examples of false and irresponsible charges of Communist influence on religion in America. (3) General data on the social gospel as it relates to either or both of these topics.—Ralph Lord Roy, Paul A. Carter.

Appreciation

I want to express my appreciation for the Gospel Messenger. It has been coming into my home each week for fifty-two years, and I couldn't get along without it. It is the best magazine I know of, and we can keep in touch with our church and her activities which means so very much to me. I thank you kindly.—Margaret A. Messamer, Glendale, Calif.

We value our Gospel Messenger a great deal as we keep track of CPS friends in its pages and of the constructive thinking of the Church of the Brethren.—Blanche and J. Lloyd Spaulding, Wichita, Kansas.

"For Their Sakes"

Leland A. Nelson

Religious News Service

THE kingdom of God will never be a present reality in our lives or in our world until we follow the example of Jesus Christ and "consecrate ourselves for their sakes." Most people seek selfishly for the kingdom of God and its fulfillment in their lives. These people have embarked in a futile and fruitless search. No man who seeks for the kingdom of God and its treasure for himself will ever find it. The kingdom which Christ proclaimed can never be experienced by any selfish person or attained by any selfish means. The challenge of Jesus, "If any man would come after me, let him deny himself, take up his cross and follow me," leaves no place for selfishness, self-seeking, or self-indulgence. If the statement of fact, "Others he saved, himself he cannot save," was true of our Lord, how much more it is true of our own lives. Not until with Christ we are able to "consecrate ourselves for their sakes" will the kingdom of God become a reality in our world and in our lives.

Once we discover that it is impossible for us to seek successfully the kingdom in a selfish way we are then in a position where through discipline and prayer we can arrive at that God-conscious state in which alone the kingdom and its goal become attainable. As we progress from the self-conscious stage of our existence to the God-conscious stage of our life we lose our self-concern and self-interest and are consumed by the love of God. Instead of our thoughts and actions being ego-centered and ego-controlled the love of God constrains us in all that we think or say or do.

Once we have matured to this place in our Christian growth and experience we see the world and the people in the world in a new light. We no longer see them as steppingstones or stumbling blocks to the attainment of our own selfish goals and desires. We see them as the supreme object of God's love and willingly yield our lives as a channel through which his love may reach them. Dominated and directed by this divine love one no longer feels the necessity to act out of self-interest and self-concern. Now, like Jesus who never once acted out of self-interest or performed one act for the benefit of his own needs, we too can achieve that state where all that we do and all that we think and all that we say is done for the sake of others.

Pastor of the Modesto church, California

How often our actions and even the program of our own church are an outgrowth of this self-interest and self-concern. Even our relief and missionary activity is often motivated by our feeling of self-importance and self-sufficiency. Our attitude toward the world, its problems and needs reflects our self-centered and self-satisfied feeling. Almost everything we do for those in need grows out of a feeling of sympathy and pity instead of being constrained by an all-consuming love like that revealed in Christ.

As we view the one hundred million homeless people and the one billion five hundred million hungry people of our world today, most people are moved to either a feeling of indifference and callousness or one of sympathy and pity. It is no wonder, concerned with ourselves as we are, that we have not done more to meet the needs of our world. Unless we are dominated by some force greater than ourselves we shall by our neglect and indifference contribute measurably to a third global catastrophe. What happens to these homeless, hungry people that comprise so large a portion of our world's population in the next few years will determine whether the world shall experience a lasting and durable peace or be engulfed in a tragic war of annihilation and destruction.

We, who pride ourselves on being a Christian nation, a nation that possesses greater wealth and has attained a higher standard of living than any other nation in the history of the world have failed to meet the needs of the homeless, hungry people of our day. In 1953 a bill was passed by the Congress of the United States permitting 200,000 displaced persons entrance into the United States, provided that adequate assurances for their housing and employment could be secured by interested and trustworthy persons. After one year less than 5,000 of these needy people have been admitted to the United States. The Church of the Brethren accepted a responsibility to relocate 1,000 of these displaced persons. After one year we succeeded in locating 29 of them in the 1,042 congregations of our Brotherhood.

It is not a matter of inadequate resources with which to do the job. All of us, if necessary, could manage to live and meet most of the required needs for our family on eighty per cent of our present salary, but, dominated as we are by a spirit of self-indulgence and self-sufficiency, we have grown calloused and indifferent and have not been constrained by a love that is greater than a love of self to do something about it. A few years ago one Brethren man in Ohio who experienced this constraining love of God resettled 1,400 of these displaced persons by his own efforts—more than any other individual or group has done within the United States. Ray Petersime stands as a living testimony to what God can do with an individual who is willing to seek first the kingdom of God and its righteousness. Strangely enough the necessary things such as adequate housing and employment were supplied to him just as the promise of Christ assures.

Living in a land of plenty but confronted with a world of need, our selfish practices as a nation have created for us a tremendous problem in knowing what to do with our surplus food. Many of our leading economists indicate that the number one problem facing our nation today is in disposing of the multi-billion dollar food surpluses which are now being stored within these United States at a cost of $700,000 a day. Some of the food is now more than ten years old and has begun to rot or decompose. To continue our present selfish practice of accumulating and storing all of our surplus products will only further threaten the economic stability of our nation. We have permitted our fears and ignorance and prejudices, which are an evidence of our selfishness, to deprive the hungry, starving millions of the world of this life-giving food which could both meet their great need and solve one of our greatest problems.

Government by Crisis or by Conscience?

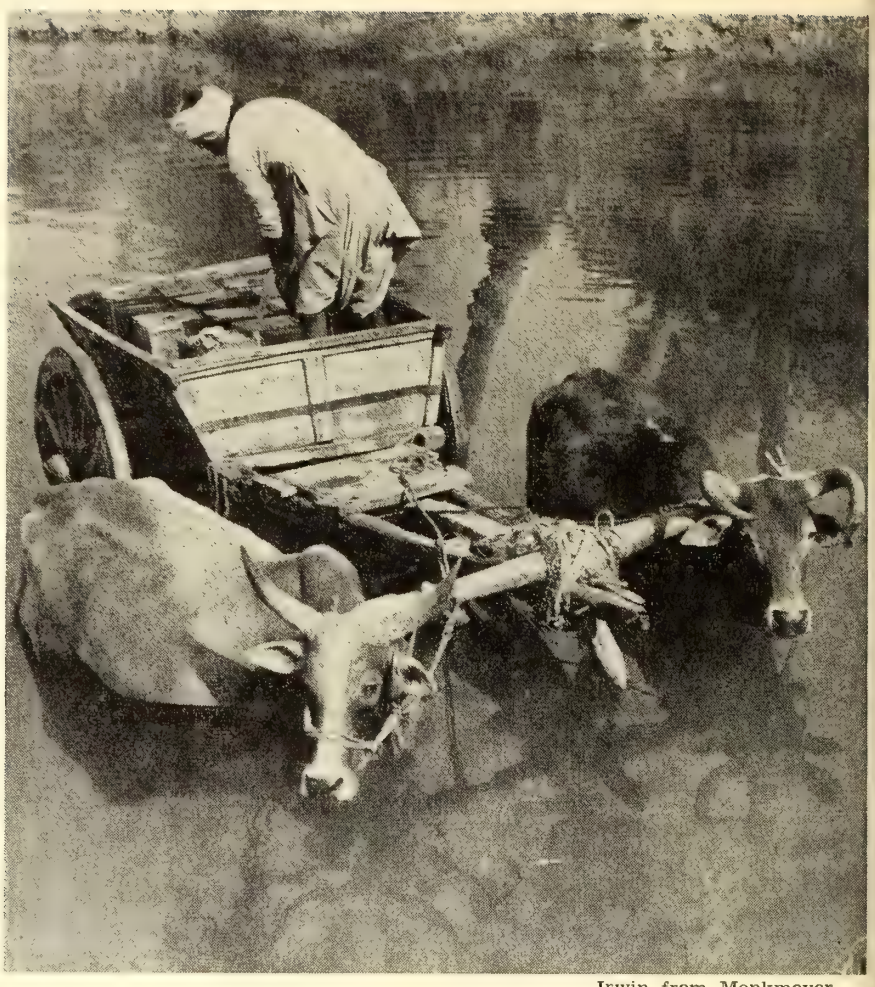
IT SHOULD be clear to everyone that the militarists in our government have used the Formosa crisis as an excuse for rushing through legislation for permanent conscription. The House of Representatives passed the draft extension act on February 8 with only four votes against it. This bill extends peacetime conscription for another four years. Its sponsors in the House Armed Services Committee planned to consider it with only one day of hearings and with only one side of the question to be presented. A short period was finally allowed for opponents of the bill to make their case. The nine witnesses speaking in opposition were allowed only ten minutes each, and there was no chance for questions from members of the committee.

This is obviously not the way to decide an issue affecting national policy for four years and touching the lives of so many young persons. We do not like steamroller tactics at any time, least of all when the question of the militarization of our nation is concerned. Why is there such a hurry to rush this legislation through, unless its sponsors feel that only when citizens are apprehensive about an explosive situation will they support what they would reject in calmer moments? One cannot escape the impression that some of our "crises" are just a little manufactured, or at least timed, so that they burst on us when renewed legislation for the draft is desired.

The Formosa situation is a complicated one but it is not really a new development. Some progress was made by the United Nations toward a cease fire, but unilateral action on the part of our government as well as on the part of Red China, brought things to a dangerous point. Whether the fist-shaking gestures of the last few months will lead to war we do not know. But it should be clear that there were peaceful and honorable alternatives available and that we seem to have put our trust in armed might above all, giving a quite secondary place to peacemaking efforts through the UN and hardly any place at all to the development of the spiritual resources that alone can bring a Christian peace.

If the draft is extended (the Senate has still to vote on it as this is written) and the same stampede continues to use a crisis for gaining a start on UMT, the militarists will be well on their way to clamping permanent peacetime conscription on the American people.

A democracy should always be on guard against government by crisis, for it is the method by which dictators obtain power and it is a method by which they extend their power. Its results, especially if we get even a sugar-coated form of UMT, will be totalitarian, even though we oppose such dictatorships abroad. If we want to maintain democracy we must use voluntary and democratic means toward that end. And if we want to preserve Christianity, we surely cannot do so by denying spiritual values.



There may yet be time to speak and write and vote against conscription. There is certainly time to speak and write and vote for the Christian conscience on matters like conscription. We can protest against "government by crisis." Better yet, we can become the kind of responsible Christian citizens who, by voice and vote and example, will help to develop "government by conscience." This should be our goal.—K.M.

Wheat for Russia?

THE United States has a two-year surplus of wheat, Russia has recently admitted the breakdown of her collectivized farm program. These two observations have prompted some administration leaders to suggest that President Eisenhower should write personally to Prime Minister Bulganin with an offer of surplus wheat to the Russian people.

If the offer can be made sincerely, without strings attached, with a real concern for the Russian people, and not merely as a gesture designed to embarass their leaders, its consequences could be beneficial. Our surpluses should be available for the relief of distress and famine anywhere in the world. They can become an effective force for peace, if wisely administered. But we need to be extremely careful that we do not make food a weapon of war.

We were late in sending wheat to India where the need was well established. We missed the opportunity last summer to offer food to Chinese flood-sufferers. In order to make our generosity Christian we need to learn how to share without sounding trumpets before us. In this regard church relief agencies and other voluntary service agencies have learned many lessons in discovering how to share. One obvious lesson is the importance of sending persons as well as packages. If the Russians need help, let's send some good civilian ambassadors of goodwill as well as sacks of wheat. Then we might set up the two-way lines of communication that could lead to ending the cold war.—K.M.

In the light of present problems and recent developments in those countries where there is foreign mission work A. Stauffer Curry, moderator of Annual Conference, asks

What Will Happen to Foreign

DURING the past several months I have thought many times of the present problems and developments in foreign missions. In a recent article of a leading denominational publication, a noted professor of foreign missions states: "So long as we [the United States] adhere to our present policy of resort to the threat of quick retaliation with atomic weapons, and so long as we make political weapons of our food, our economic aid and our technical assistance, we shall run the risk of losing the very things we seek. . . ." One of these "things" which we risk losing, it seems to me, is the opportunity to do effective missionary work. The article states further that the success of missions "will depend in part on what our churches do to influence America's political and economic life."

It seems clear that a major challenge to the churches, regarding foreign missions, is to urge our government to follow such policies as will create a world climate conducive to the growth of foreign missions. What such policies should be is not easy to determine. It seems to me the churches need to study carefully the problem of foreign relations, if indeed our missions are to survive. In turn, the church needs to express to government continually its best thought on the Christian approach to international relations —toward the objective of effective missions, to say nothing of the objective of world peace itself.

Missions also face a new national self-consciousness on the part of countries where missions are located. In 1776 the United States wanted to be independent of Britain. While yet a young nation we propounded the Monroe doctrine, no foreign interference! Just so, "young" nations in the Middle and Far East today want no foreign domination or interference. Mistakenly, some of them tend to look on missions as "foreign" interference. Therefore, foreign missions must accept the burden of proof that their activities are not under the influence of the government of countries from which the missionaries come. Missions must demonstrate its deep interest in the total welfare—moral, economic, physical, social, political, and spiritual—of the countries in which missions operate. The greater the extent of misunderstanding of missions by foreign countries at this point, the greater is the risk that missions will be banned by some countries. The recent refusals of visas to missionaries by some countries are somber evidence of this possibility. More effective liaison between the church in mission lands and the governments of those countries may provide a partial answer to this situation.

A bitter fact in the current missions picture is that of closed missions in some lands, with the threat of a similar fate in others. It seems impossible to believe that we no longer have access to the land where Frank Crumpacker inaugurated a mission program. It is reported that mission schools have been taken over by the government in Iran, with a threat to further curtailment. And good authorities report that, in spite of the principle of religious freedom, some officials of Pakistan regard conversion away from Mohammedanism as treason, since Muslim is the state religion. Can there be any good in such a situation? Conceivably it could lead the church behind such closed doors to greater devotion and courage. It certainly should, it seems to me, lead the church here at home to more sincere prayer for those who are cut off. How many of us pray daily for missions? It should lead the church to expand missions in other lands where the door is still open. It should lead to most serious prayer and thought about means to prevent future closings.

Another development in missions is the growing need for technical, medical and scientific development. A caption of a missionary picture in a national religious magazine read: "Throughout India today evangelistic missionaries are not as welcome as missionaries engaged in education and agriculture." Since this is true, it seems obvious the church should supply the types of missionary service the recipient countries can best use. The chances are we shall win just as many, or even more, souls in the end. The desire for agricultural and technical help indicates all the more, it seems to this writer, that the work of service and relief agencies must go hand in hand with missions. More and more I wonder if missions may not perish unless they are supported by spiritually motivated service, rehabilitation and technical assistance programs. On the other hand, the latter must always have as their ultimate objective the redemption of the souls of men, as well as the improvement of men's physical welfare. To use our organizational terminology, Foreign Missions and Brethren Service, need each other if either is to survive. They must work hand in hand toward a common end.

Another situation facing missions is the growth of other religious and social systems. Christianity is called upon to demonstrate its superior ethics, more effective love and deeper spirituality than other religions. To sharpen the problem: Does the average Christian congregation in Washington, D. C., live a better corporate life than the Mohammedan congregation which just completed a new mosque on Massachusetts Avenue? If not, a nonbeliever can logically ask why he should become a Christian rather than a Mohammedan. Similarly, the church must demonstrate to non-Christians its superior way of life to that of the other ten living religions.

An African leader at Evanston said: "The advance of Islam [presents] the churches with a twofold challenge: to witness so truly to the Lordship of Christ that pagans exposed to Islam and Christianity will be convinced . . . by Christianity and to witness so truly that Christ rather than Mohammed will lead them to God."

Likewise, Christianity must convince potential believers that it has more to offer than communism. Both communism and Mohammedanism, for example, are highly evangelistic and skilled in propaganda techniques. Can Christianity, to use a practical term, compete successfully with these forces? With God's help it can. But it may take a new consecration and devotion of millions of Christians.

A long recognized need of missions is for native leadership.

A Christian tailor makes bags for the tithers' fellowship

To dramatize this need, let us turn the tables. Suppose an Oriental came to any small community in the United States to propagate the Confucian system. He would get much further if he first converted, then trained, local native Americans to help him, and the more capable and devoted the better. Similarly, the more natives of ability and devotion who can be secured to carry on missionary work, the better it will be for the cause. Especially is this true if more countries close their doors to missionaries. Should not the colleges and seminaries of Protestant churches be overflowing with African, Asiatic, South American and other Christian youth brought here for the distinct purpose of training for church leadership? If visas continue to be denied missionaries, this may be the time to spend more money in bringing here for Christian study more capable youth from the mission fields.

We should never lose sight of the compelling motive for missions, as well as of all phases of the church program. This motive is rooted in two basic assumptions: (1) that Jesus Christ is Lord of all creation and (2) that men can be redeemed through the saving power of Jesus Christ and that all men should know about this power. When this is kept uppermost, missions will never die.

If we could fulfill the conditions of growth necessary for us to become God-conscious persons rather than self-conscious individuals we could view the world through the eyes of God. We would see each individual as the supreme object of God's love and every need as an opportunity for us to be a channel through which God's great love might flow to meet that need adequately. The resources of food which are sufficient to meet the needs of the entire human family could be shared in the spirit of the Good Samaritan.

No longer dominated by our fears and prejudices of how others might misappropriate and misuse our gifts, but dominated and constrained by a love which is stronger than evil we could use these resources which God has entrusted to us as his stewards to "give sight to the blind, freedom to the oppressed, food to the hungry. . ." It would eliminate the threat of a third world war, build the pathways of peace, provide the opportunity for nations and people that have been held down by ignorance and poverty to become self-supporting and respectable members of the family of nations, and create new markets and new sources for raw materials and our manufactured products that would strengthen and stabilize our whole world economy. In sharing our life and all that we have with others we would demonstrate anew the eternal truth of Jesus' words that "he that seeks to save his life shall lose it, but he who seeks to lose his life for my sake and the gospel shall find it."

Once again much is being said about One Great Hour of Sharing. Most of what we have done in previous years has grown out of sympathy and pity of self-centered individuals. Before there can be truly One Great Hour of Sharing there must be a great day of commitment. When we cease to seek the kingdom of God for the personal benefits or advantages which it may bring to us and seek it in the spirit of Jesus who consecrated himself for their sakes, then all of the necessary things will be supplied to make the life of man on this earth all that God intends it to be.

Who Is More Foolish

John B. Wieand

NOT long ago I read about a test that was made by a bank in Belleville, Illinois. They gave forty silver dollars to a radio announcer to sell at fifty cents a piece. At the end of the half hour he had sold only four silver dollars. He returned thirty-six to the bank.

Before we laugh at the people in Belleville, let us make sure we are not even more foolish than they were. Jesus found people indifferent to the wonderful bargains that were offered to them. He offered himself to his own home town folk. But those people who were well taught in spiritual matters were blind to the superlative opportunity he gave them to benefit by his presence. They cherished the hope that was offered by the prophet Isaiah. He declared himself to be the fulfillment of that hope. But they chose to destroy him rather than to believe.

Jesus incited them to greater fury by comparing their unbelief to that which existed in the times of Elijah and Elisha. There were many widows in Israel in Elijah's time, but he had to go into the enemy's territory to find shelter in a widow's home. There were also many lepers in Israel during Elisha's ministry. But they did not go to the man of God for help. But Naaman, the enemy general, came for help and got health.

We are people of privilege. We are offered the Creator's help. We have the Bible, which reveals the high purpose of our creation. It gives us light for living in a world that is darkened by sin and spiritual ignorance. We know of Jesus and his revelation of God. We have the church for which Christ gave his life. But we are very likely to ignore these precious possessions or treat them lightly. By our neglect we are likely to lose them as others have done. In order not to be foolishly worse than the people who would not take dollars at half price, we need to surrender our pride to the perfection of the Master. By yielding to him, we may become partners of his, sharing in his joy and victory.

Jesus said, "Take my yoke upon you and learn of me; and ye shall find rest unto your souls." "Peace I leave with you; my peace I give to you; let not your hearts be troubled, neither let them be afraid."

The Family Counselor

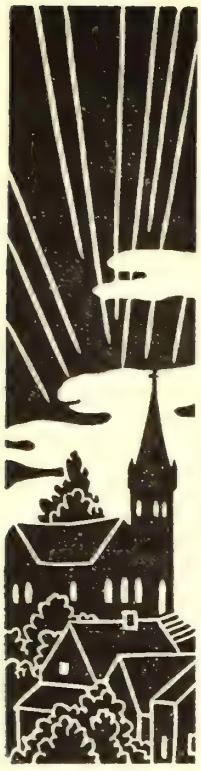
The Family Counselor welcomes letters of inquiry. They may be addressed: Family Life Department, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Dear Counselor,

What is the best way to break bad news?

There is no one best way to break bad news. Since each person is of different temperment no one approach to the problem will be best for all.



When breaking bad news to a person—bad news about himself—I rely upon two basic principles. First, people may not want to face the hard facts of life but they do desire to know them. Ignorance is regarded as darkness. All education is the search for knowledge into the mysterious and the unknown. The nature of life is to know both the good and the bad. Second, truth is its own best ally. If we believe that the universe works for truth under all conditions then even the harsh truth is better than a little white lie.

The knowledge that an incurable disease is present, or that disaster threatens, may occasionally be withheld for a short time. However, deception or untruthfulness is never satisfactory in the long run. Indeed, resentment will be engendered if information is denied. I do not know of one case in which a person learned the frighful truth about himself that he was not grateful for having learned it. Some people rally to the difficult and the impossible. They are like ships which drive the better the more heavily loaded they are in a storm. They are like Robert Browning who regarded the last fight as the best.

If the bad news is something which inheres in yourself, like incurable illness, then the question of whether or not to share this information with friends and relatives poses a different problem. You are not under obligation, especially if you think the information might not be helpful, to expose all your physical ills. Only when such a sharing of fateful facts will be helpful to all parties concerned should you feel a responsibility to tell all. Notice the last word!

If the bad news concerns an accident or misfortune which you must report to next of kin, there are a few rules of thumb which ought to be followed. You can soften the blow if you (1) do not attempt to slip the news quickly in a crowded place or in a situation where the recipient is not paying close attention to what you say. Get his full attention. It may be well for him to alert himself and get his guard up. (2) Do not force information on a person who does not want to hear it. Let him set the pace for your revelation. (3) Give your friend time to digest what you are saying. If you tell him quickly to get it over with you may cause damage to health and sanity. (4) Do not be surprised if the recipient of the bad news you bring acts strongly. Give him a chance to express his emotions. It is wholesome for him to express himself freely. These expressions may seem to you to exceed the bounds of good judgment, but you will be wise to understand that such attitudes will probably pass quickly if they are not suppressed.

Pastoral Letter

Howard H. Keim

I thank God for you, all my people—for your faith and your concern for the things of the kingdom of God.
My earnest intercession for you is that you may continue to grow in the knowledge and grace of our Lord, Jesus Christ.
The greatest need in our church today, is, I believe,
for a genuine spirit of evangelism.
This is not something we can buy or bring in from outside the congregation.
It is the spirit of warm concern for people—all people—
young and old rich and poor
good and bad.

This concern for people must reach across all barriers of race, class and nationality.
This concern for people can come only by close and constant companionship with Jesus Christ our Lord.
Often I have a feeling that we are like the priest and Levite, in the parable of the Good Samaritan.
We are good people,
active with the mechanics of our religion—
sometimes so busy with our good routines that we have no time or interest in ministering to our neighbors, who have been beaten by the ruthless materialism of our world, stripped of their precious raiment of peace, contentment and joy, and left to die of spiritual starvation.

A spirit of warm concern for all people—young and old

Religious News Service

A spirit of warm concern for all people—rich and dispossessed

In our haste to be about our own goodness we pass by on the other side and leave these for whom Christ died suffering by the wayside.
Here are young families, right at the doorstep of our church, who need Christian friendship, encouragement and guidance.
Here also, are older people still waiting for an invitation to the wedding feast of the Lamb—
still waiting for someone by the love of God to compel them to come!
People are crying to us from every roadside and from across the seas, for a helping hand.

Church World Service

Do we care enough for people to minister to their needs of body, mind and spirit?

Our world has grown small!
Have our hearts of compassion grown small also?
Where is our faith in Christ?
Where is our Christian imagination?
Have we, like the disciples of old, hurried off to buy bread, leaving the Christ alone at the well curb and the market place to give the bread of life and the water of life to a sin-sick humanity?
Evangelism is our business!
It is the business of every Christian!
The way of evangelism is the way of love for people.
We ought to love enough to forgo some personal convenience, pleasure and comfort.
Jesus said this will be our test in the last judgment.
Do we care enough for people to feed, clothe and visit them, ministering to their needs of body,
mind and spirit?
Let us then
not be satisfied to be good!
Let us be truly concerned for our neighbors' welfare, for time and eternity.
In Christian love,
Your Pastor.

Not for Ourselves Alone

Kirby Page

SELDOM has the grace of gratitude been more vividly illustrated than in the spirit of Albert Schweitzer, who has spent much of his life in fighting against disease and death, fighting pests and wild animals, fighting against superstition and indolence; fighting against sheer weariness of body and mind. His very being is a constant expression of appreciativeness. His decision to go as a medical missionary to the tropics of Africa was made in spite of protests from friends that he was simply throwing himself away.

The best comment on all this is found on the closing page of a book written by Dr. Schweitzer in 1927, fourteen years after he first landed at Lambarene, as he was departing on a furlough: "The boat pushes slowly out of the bay in bright sunshine . . . I gaze at the disappearing coast hardly able to realize that I am no longer in the hospital. All the needs and all the work of the past years sweep through my memory. I feel myself humbled, and ask myself how I earned the privilege of carrying on such work attaining to success. And there breaks through, time and again, a feeling of pain that I must leave it for a time, and tear myself loose from Africa, which has become for me a second home."

Long before Albert Schweitzer had written: "It became steadily clearer to me that I had not the inward right to take as a matter of course my happy youth, my good health and my powers of work. Out of the depth of my feeling of happiness there grew gradually within me an understanding of the saying of Jesus that we must not treat our lives as being for ourselves alone."

Concern for people can come only by close and constant companionship with Jesus Christ our Lord

A Christian Perspective for the Anticonscription Campaign

Ralph E. Smeltzer

OUR denomination is heavily engaged just now in an anticonscription campaign. This campaign will have at least eight critical stages: (1) House Armed Services Committee hearings on Draft extension (H. R. 3005); (2) House of Representatives vote on draft extension (H. R. 3005); (3) House Armed Services Committee hearings on UMT-compulsory reserves (H. R. 2967); (4) House of Representatives vote on UMT-compulsory reserves (H. R. 2967); (5) Senate Armed Services Committee hearings on draft extension; (6) Senate vote on draft extension; (7) Senate Armed Services Committee hearings on UMT-compulsory reserves; (8) Senate vote on UMT-Compulsory reserves.

At this writing (February 15) stages one and two have been passed and we are in stage three. Regular weekly anticonscription reports are being sent to pastors and church school superintendents providing the latest information on the progress of the campaign and giving suggestions for action.

We need to remember several principles while participating vigorously in a campaign of this sort. First, we need to remember that we must work hard at each stage of the campaign. Second, although we may lose at one stage there is usually another stage to come where we can work again. Third, our Christian conviction regarding the wrongness of conscription compels us to work hard against it at all stages even though our prospects of "success" may seem dim at some stages or even at all stages. Fourth, our faith in God and the ultimate rightness of our cause enables us to keep up our morale if we lose at one stage or even if we lose at all stages.

We need to remember that we must work hard at each and every stage of this campaign. This is the wisest strategy. We must realize that our political action must be continuous and unrelenting. We know that the proponents of draft extension and of the UMT-compulsory reserve plan have been, are and will be very persistent and continuous in their pressure for adoption. We have already seen how effectively they "steamrollered" draft extension through stages one and two.

The General Brotherhood Board presented testimony at stage one and is preparing to present testimony at stage three. Likely it will also present testimony at stages five and seven when they are reached.

The effective methods of political action for congregations and individuals are to visit or to write letters to appropriate political officials—your representative, your two senators and your local political party committeemen. Telegrams and telephone calls to legislators help to emphasize the depth and urgency of your concern. If our political action is to be effective it must be continuous and unrelenting. This means that we cannot be satisfied with contacting our respective political officials just once or merely at a single stage of the campaign; we must keep in regular contact with them and let them know that we are following their position at each stage.

Second, although we may lose

Director of Social education, Brethren Service Commission, General Brotherhood Board

An effective method of political action is a visit or a letter to your congressman or senators at one stage there is usually another stage to come where we can work again. To put the matter in military terms, although we may lose a battle now and again our ultimate objective is to win the war. Our opposition to draft extension and to a UMT-compulsory reserve plan must be a long-term and permanent strategy. When we win at some stages we must not become weary in well-doing; when we lose at other stages, we must resolve to try harder at the next opportunity.

Third, our Christian conviction regarding the wrongness of conscription compel us to work hard against it at all stages even though our prospects of "success" may seem dim at some stages or even at all stages. We must be true to our own convictions whether they be popular or not. Whether we be members of the majority or of the minority we must maintain our own integrity; we have to live with ourselves. The Church of the Brethren must remain true to its historic peace position and testify to it—or give it up. Unless we as members witness individually to our convictions we are either by conscious or unconscious default aiding the aggressive supporters of military conscription.

Fourth, our faith in God and the ultimate rightness of our cause enables us to keep up our morale if we lose at one stage or even if we lose at all stages. It is our faith that God is the God of all of life, including political life, and that his kingdom, the kingdom of God, will ultimately triumph and prevail. This is the Christian hope.

Although in this anticonscription campaign, in this life, in this world, in history, God's kingdom may be only partially or imperfectly realized and manifested, it is our faith that at the end of history, at the end of this world, God's kingdom and his purpose will be fully realized and manifested. This faith is our ground for hope in a dark world. It is this faith which gives us the courage to go forward, the energy to work diligently toward manifesting as much of God's kingdom as possible here on earth now. It is also this faith which bolsters us up when we fail. It is the faith that though we lose a battle against sin now and again, ultimately God, the Almighty, will win the war against sin.

Our duty, therefore, is to fight on—win, lose or draw—for we know that ultimately our cause will win. In political life, God expects us to do the best we can, to work hard for those Christian principles which are a manifestation of his kingdom. But at the same time we must not worry if we fail, must not be disillusioned, must not be too dependent upon our own political action. We must remember that this is also God's business, that he can be trusted to win in the long run.

"We know that in everything God works for good with those who love him, who are called according to his purposes" (Rom. 8:28). "If God is for us, who is against us? He who did not spare his own Son but gave him up for us all, will he not also give us all things with him."

Whatever is done in the way of political action must be undergirded by a faith in the ultimate triumph of the purposes of God

How Would Jesus Answer?

Don Snider

Muller-Munster Camera Clix

SEVERAL children stumped me the other day when they asked, simply and innocently, "What would you ask Jesus if he were here?" Using either psychology or self-defense, I don't know which, I turned the question back to them. What would they ask? They had not thought it through either but they studied a little. Then the boy said, "I'd ask how old is the world?" Not bad. The little girl, who was younger, said, "I'd ask how wide is the world." Then the boy said, "I'd ask if other planets had people on them." In the days of space ships and rockets and planned trips skyward that would be interesting to know.

Their conversation soon shifted but my thoughts had just started. What would I ask Jesus if he were here? The disciples on the Emmaus road were thrilled with his presence. He opened up new worlds to them. So that we read in Luke, "Did not our hearts burn within us while he talked to us on the road, while he opened to us the scriptures?"

Sometimes it is frightening to examine our lives and see what silly drivel we talk about and what nonsense we think. Our family lived in Germany as civilians the last three years. The German people could not get over the fact that we talk so much about the weather. So they learned, in dealing with Americans, to talk about the pleasant day or the rain, but for themselves they accepted the weather with little comment. Now the weather is not a bad subject but sometimes we never get off this subject or equally unimportant matters into things that really count. Or if we do get going on controversial subjects we get so emotionally aroused that we make enemies of others and make ourselves sick. A member of the planning board for the city of Dixon told me that less than seventy-five people turned out for an open meeting to discuss long-range plans that will affect the life of every citizen of this town in the next thirty years. We would rather just gripe about the weather.

What would you ask Jesus if he were here? Could you carry on a decent conversation with the Son of God?

I think I would ask him about eternal punishment. I believe in life after death. It is a Christian belief. But is there a point where God's love stops and man cannot be forgiven—eternity is a long time to suffer in hell. How does that square up with a God whose character is best revealed in the forgiving Jesus of Nazareth?

I would want to know why the righteous suffer—good people like the lady I now visit who is blind and has been bedfast for several years. She took more than a dozen orphans into her home during her life at different periods, but now at fifty she is helpless. At the same time other people who never helped another human being outside their families get rich easily and live a life of ease.

If Jesus were here I would want to ask him what he thinks of our attitude toward the Negroes. Is he pleased with our progress reports in America? What would he think of segregated churches or the treatment of any citizen as second class? Did the Supreme Court make a right decision on nonsegregated public schools and, if so, how, using Christ's method of love, do you persuade all people to follow this decision locally?

If Jesus could talk back to me I would want to know if he would put on the uniform of a soldier in any nation and go through specialized training learning how to operate machine guns, mass-bomb cities, liquidate populations.

If Jesus lived today I would be curious to know which group of Christians he would associate with and which of the many branches of the Christian church he would favor. Would he show partiality? Would he be pleased with the world-wide movement toward ecumenicity, that of the churches uniting on co-operative endeavors?

If Jesus came back today would his heart go out to the 70,000,000 refugees scattered on our planet? He was part of a refugee family once in Egypt. Would he urge his followers to take action? What would he say about immigration laws?

If Jesus could sit with me in my living room I would like him to tell me what he thought of our celebrations of his birthday—in 1954 in modern America—with beautiful music recorded and played on the streets in our cities while the people spent thousands and millions for gifts, honoring him. Certainly he would be impressed.

If Jesus could talk with authority as he did of old I would be filled with questions, wouldn't you? I would want to ask him if God has favored Americans with more food deliberately because we are superior to the Japanese and Chinese and the Italians. I want to know if he has any late word on divorce. Should mothers work in factories? Would he drink wine? Would he drive a car—a Cadillac or a Willys—or would he walk? Would he insist on going to church services once a week, or would he think you can be a Christian by listening to radio religious services? Would he spend money for advertising and would he stretch the truth? What would he think of Life Magazine? Would he like to see children playing war on every vacant lot? Would he be more critical of labor or of management? Would he express himself on communism, on party politics, on surplus foods? I'm sure he would have some wise comments.

Two things in conclusion: Jesus is living today. He is not dead. His spirit is alive. He spoke long ago in the flesh on principles that are as sound today as then and that give answers to every one of these questions if we should care to probe deep enough and stay by long enough. It is possible to put his words squarely on top of all of our questions.

Also he said, "Ask and ye shall receive, knock and it shall be opened unto you, seek and ye shall find." The Holy Spirit can guide us into all truth if we will it sufficiently. In the Old Testament we read, "Ye shall find me when ye search with your whole heart."

Let us not be satisfied with unimportant talk in a world filled with sorrow and need. May we have faith that answers will come to our problems if we seek and knock and ask. Let us have inquiring minds, pure hearts and a sincere desire to walk and talk with God.

> So they drew near to the village to which they were going; and he made as though he would go further, but they constrained him, saying, "Stay with us, for it is toward evening and the day is now far spent." So he went in to stay with them. When he was at the table with them, he took the bread and blessed it, and gave it to them. And their eyes were opened and they recognized him; and he vanished out of their sight. They said to each other, "Did not our hearts burn within us while he talked to us on the road, while he opened to us the scriptures?" And they rose that same hour and returned to Jerusalem; and they found the eleven gathered together and those who were with them, who said, "The Lord has risen indeed, and has appearerd to Simon!" Then they told what had happened on the road, and how he was known to them in the breaking of the bread.

Reviews of Recent Books

Books are reviewed here as a service to the church. A review does not necessarily constitute an unqualified recommendation. Purchase can be made through the Brethren Publishing House, Elgin, Illinois. Titles recommended for church libraries are marked with an asterisk (*).—Editor.

Making Money in Your Kitchen. Helen Stone Hovey. Funk, 1953. $3.95.

Many homemakers feel they would like to help with the expenses of a home and family, but cannot leave the home for employment. If there are even a few such women in your church or district, this book could be most valuable. The importance and universal enjoyment of good food is emphasized, with 1,600 suggestions of what sells and where, as well as many practical suggestions for marketing and the business end of food preparation.—Mrs. R. E. Mohler, McPherson, Kansas.

The Salty Tang. Frederick B. Speakman. Revell, 1954. 160 pages. $2.00.

Here is a book of great preaching. The messages are penetrating and keen. They trouble the mind and disturb the soul. Couched in unforgettable phrases that pierce the dullness of the mind, they carry a punch as well as a freshness that is virile and full of appeal.

Old texts are taken and treated in new and vigorous ways in a variety of style that is amazing.—Charles E. Zunkel.

KINGDOM GLEANINGS

James H. Beahm, pastor of the First church, Chicago, Ill., wishes to express his sincere gratitude for all the prayers and the cards and other expressions of concern during his recent experience of surgery and hospitalization.

The 1955 edition of the prayer calendar is available from the Brethren Publishing House, the Foreign Mission Commission is happy to announce. Titled Meet Your Missionaries, the attractive 132-page booklet gives brief biographies and prayer concerns for each of our missionaries. Price: 50c each.

One of our colleges is seeking to add four new teachers to the faculty next year in the following fields: English; phychology and education; business—retailing, salesmanship and advertising; and chemistry. The Church of the Brethren became the first denomination to reach its quota of delegates to the twenty-third International Sunday School Convention to be held at Cleveland, Ohio, July 27-31. Our original quota was sixty-nine. Already seventy-four delegates have completed their registration. We have now an extended quota of 100. Districts and individuals for whom places are being reserved should complete their registration as soon as possible through the office of C. Ernest Davis, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Questions for Congressmen is a set of eight pertinent questions on the UMT-Compulsory Bill now before Congress. Each set consists of eight small, attractive, colored leaflets giving a question on the outside, facts inside and suggestions for writing your congressman on the back. Brethren Service highly recommends this material which should be ordered directly from the National Council Against Conscription, 104 C St., N.E., Washington 2, D. C. Price: one set (eight leaflets), 10c; 10 sets, $1.00; 100 sets, $10.00.

A service of dedication will be held on Sunday afternoon, May 15, for the memorial plaque erected by the Eastern Region CBYF beside the Wissahickon River, where the first Brethren baptism in America took place. Vernard Eller, youth editor for the Church of the Brethren, will be the speaker. Following the service of dedication a love feast will be observed in the near-by Germantown church. If you wish to attend these services, please write to Stanley Davis, Jr., 239 E. Seventh St., Lansdale, Pa., before May 7, specifying which services you plan to attend.

The name of John H. Blough of 100 W. Adams St., Springfield, Ill., was omitted from the ministerial list of the 1955 Yearbook. Bro. Blough was formerly pastor of the Dixon church in Northern Illinois and is now serving as director of evangelism for the Illinois Council of Churches.

Brethren Service myrtlewood offering cups are available for use in homes or churches, giving special significance to offerings. These cups come in two sizes—$1.00 for small size suitable for Sunday school or family use and $10.00 for the large size—and are decorated with the Brethren Service symbol. You will find many uses in your home or church for these cups. Order from: General Brotherhood Board, Attention Brethren Service Commission, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

The 1955 edition of Register Christian Opinion is now available for distribution. Free copies have been sent to pastors, superintendents and Brethren Service representatives who are urged to share them with their congregations. This congressional directory lists names of members of Congress, congressional party leaders, committees, etc., and is very helpful, especially during the anticonscription campaign. Price: 10c per copy; 50c per dozen; $3.50 per hundred. Order today from the General Brotherhood Board, Attention Brethren Service Commission, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Anniversary, Home-coming and Dedication

Juniata Park church, Pa., home-coming in celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Sunday school, Sunday, March 27, beginning at 9:30 a.m. Ardie E. Wilt, H. Atlee Brumbaugh, George Ross and other former superintendents who are present will speak.

Blue River church, Ind., dedication of remodeled house of worship, Sunday, May 1. Bro. V. F. Schwalm, president of Manchester College, will bring the morning and afternoon messages; a musical program is being planned for the evening service.

Tear Coat church, W. Va., fiftieth anniversary of the dedication of the building. Bro. Emra T. Fike, who held a series of meetings following the dedication in 1905, will be the speaker for this occasion on Sunday, May 15. In the afternoon the women of the church will be in charge of a Mother's Day program.

Changes of Address

Donald Lesh, from Greece to Wilsonia Route, Box 250, Lancaster, Calif. Don has completed his alternative service in Europe, where he spent most of his time working with the Greek unit in agricultural rehabilitation. Churches should contact him directly for speaking engagements.

Clara Harper, from Shafa, Nigeria, W. Africa, to % Foreign Mission Commission, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill. Miss Harper returned to the States on Feb. 22 for her regular furlough.

Velva Jane Dick, from Waka Training School, Nigeria, to Garkida, via Jos, Nigeria, W. Africa.

A. D. Sollenberger, from Glendora, Calif., to 2736 Hillcrest Drive, Hillcrest Homes, La Verne, Calif.

Floyd N. Biddix, from Orlando, Fla., to 1028 Lincoln, Topeka, Kansas. Bro. Biddix has resigned the pastorate of the Orlando Highland Community church and on March 26 becomes pastor of the Topeka church.

Citizenship Training Institute

Grand Rapids, Mich., will be the site for the citizenship training institute sponsored by the youth department, Social education department, temperance department and the Grand Rapids Church of the Brethren. For four days, June 20 to 23, following Annual Conference, the group will make a study of the problems of a local community and how a local church can meet the needs of that given community. Persons invited include: youth counselors, local and district; youth citizenship chairmen, local, district and regional; Brethren Service workers responsible for citizenship, social education and action on the local and district level; women's work peace and citizenship directors, local and district; and temperance and moral welfare workers, local and district.

Program plans, costs and other pertinent facts will be released in a brochure within the near future. Begin plans now to get the proper persons to attend from your local church or district. This will be a good way to continue the work of Annual Conference.

Music Institute

Bethany Biblical Seminary announces a church music institute, June 9-13. Registration will take place Thursday morning, June 9. Instruction will begin after lunch and will continue through Monday evening, June 13. Lodging will be provided at the Seminary for five nights, Thursday through Monday. Meals will be served across the street at Bethany Hospital from luncheon on Thursday to breakfast on Tuesday. The Music and Worship Committee of the Christian Education Commission, General Brotherhood Board, will co-operate with the seminary in promoting the institute and Paul Halladay, chairman of the committee and professor of music at Manchester College, will serve as dean of the Institute. Alvin F. Brightbill of the seminary and Nevin W. Fisher, professor of music at Elizabethtown College, will also be members of the institute faculty. A flat fee of $20.00 will cover all expenses, including the registration fee and room and board for the five days. Because of the limitations of available facilities, only forty people can be accommodated and advance registration is necessary. Register now. Address Church Music Institute, Bethany Biblical Seminary, 3435 Van Buren St., Chicago 24, Ill., and enclose the $5.00 registration fee which will be credited against the total cost of $20.00. Registrants who wish to attend Annual Conference will have Tuesday for the journey from Chicago to Grand Rapids.

News and Comment From Around the World

WCTU Leader Protests Air Force "Liquor Clubs"

A Woman's Christian Temperance Union official has asked the House Armed Services Committee to investigate a complaint that air force officers are forcing enlisted men to belong to clubs where liquor is served. Miss Elizabeth Smart, Washington secretary of the WCTU, presented a letter from a noncommissioned air force officer, telling of pressure exerted on noncommissioned officers at his base to support the local Non-Com Club. He said that noncommissioned officers were expected automatically to become dues-paying members of the club, the principal feature of which, he said, is a bar and a dance floor.

Episcopalians Ask Abolition of Capital Punishment

Episcopalians of the Los Angeles Diocese have gone on record against capital punishment. Their resolution said, "The carrying out of the death penalty has very serious effects on the community, the judge, jury, attorneys, prison staff, other inmates and relatives of the principals... There are serious theological questions as to the right of human beings to deprive another of life, even through legal processes."

Predict Separation of Church and State in Norway

Present trends point towards separation of church and state in Norway, according to speakers who addressed the annual meeting of the Council of Organizations, the cooperative agency of eleven groups affiliated with the Lutheran Church of Norway. Some leaders believe that both the influence of the Bible and general adherence to Biblical teachings are "deteriorating" in Norway.

Disciples Approve New Mission Strategy

The United Christian Missionary Society, representing the Disciples of Christ, have adopted a new strategy of world missions. The program calls for adjustments in mission work to meet revolutionary changes on all fields, development of a stronger partnership between mission churches and churches on the home field, greater participation in the ecumenical movement and more flexibility in the expansion of missions. The Disciples will integrate their own treasuries with the field treasuries of the interboard groups in Japan and the Philippines. They have had missionaries in Japan since 1883 and in the Philippines since 1901.

Proposes Deputation of Asian Christians to Red China

Dr. Rajah B. Manikam, secretary in Asia for the World Council of Churches and the International Missionary Council, said that it may well be time for the churches to consider sending a deputation of Asian Christians to Red China to pledge fellowship and continued prayer. He told a meeting of the Malayan Christian Council that commercial and political groups already are visiting China and a team going in the name of Christ might be worth while.

New Selective Service Rules Improve Status of CO's

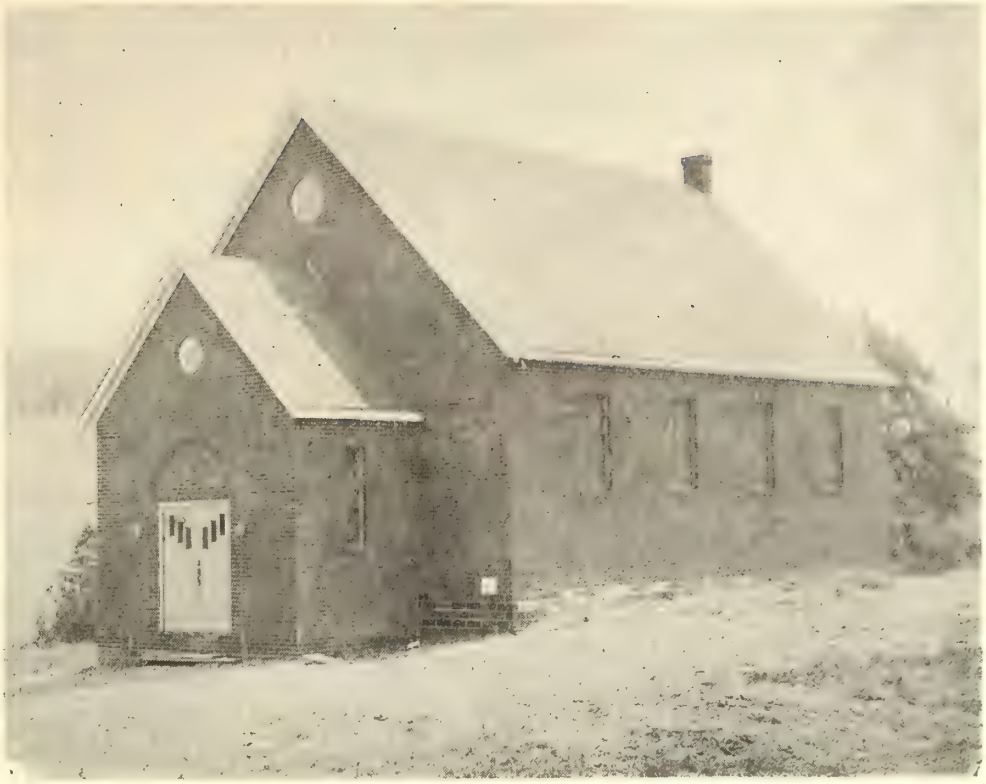
Two administrative changes improving the treatment of conscientious objectors under the draft law have been announced by Selective Service. One makes it impossible for local boards to keep a form of control over the lives of objectors after they have been assigned to civilian jobs as authorized by law. The second change equips CO's with an appropriate registration card after they have begun working on an assigned civilian job. Occasionally they have had difficulty in readily clarifying their status to inquiring police when traveling.

Million Abroad Got Christmas Food Parcels

Nearly 1,000,000 needy persons or families in Europe and South America received fifteen-pound food parcels shipped from the United States as a special Christmas gift of American Protestants. Distribution of the parcels was handled by local church agencies in all European countries except Yugoslavia, where it was supervised by that country's Red Cross.

John Metzler was the special Church World Service representative attached to the World Council staff who assisted local church authorities with the parcel distribution in Greece, Austria, Turkey, Yugoslavia and Italy. He said, "In each place, no matter who passed out the packages, recipients thanked God and were grateful to the people and churches of America for manifesting their Christian love in such a practical way."

Israel Acquires Ancient Bible Scrolls



The government of Israel has acquired the remaining four Dead Sea scrolls, oldest known Bible manuscripts, of seven found in a cave near Jericho in 1947. They were purchased, reportedly for more than $250,000, from Metropolitan Athanasius Yeshue Samuel of the Syrian Orthodox Monastery of St. Mark. The four scrolls are the oldest known manuscript of the Book of Isaiah; a commentary on the Old Testament Book of Habakkuk; a book called "The Manual of Discipline" containing regulations of the Essenes; and the Book of Lamech—an apocryphal work whose existence is referred to in several ancient texts.

The scrolls were discovered by Bedouin shepherds in cylindrical jars in a Judean wilderness cave near the northwestern end of the Dead Sea. Prime Minister Moshe Sharett said that the scrolls will be held in perpetual trust in Jerusalem and be accessible to the public. They will be housed in new buildings being erected at the Hebrew University.

Ask Protestants Expand Weekday Religious Education Programs

Protestant bodies affiliated with the National Council of Churches have been called upon to make greater use of and to expand weekday religious education programs. This call came in a statement signed by thirty-three members of the national denominational executives section of the National Council's Division of Christian Education. The executives said, "Weekday religious education teaches religion within the framework of the child's formal education and emphasizes the place which religion should have during the week as well as on Sunday."

Dr. Erwin L. Shaver, who is executive director of the council's department of weekday religous education, proposed that Protestants construct a Christian education building adjacent to every public school in the country. He said with classrooms next to public schools as many as five hours of the formal school week could be devoted to religious teaching. Children could be released from school to attend classes in religion in the near-by church school which would be staffed with trained teachers and provided with adequate curriculum materials.

Cherry Grove church in Western Maryland, dedicated its new house of worship last June. Though a congregation was organized at this place in 1847 a church house was not built until 1865. This was used until 1953, when it was torn down so that the lumber could be used in the new building. The church has been served by resident ministers, summer pastors and part-time workers. Arthur Scrogum has been elder for twenty-five years.

Last month the Virginia Council of Churches approved a plan to erect religious education buildings next to public schools in that state. The council set as its goal the erection of such buildings in the majority of Virginia communities over the next twenty-five years.

Senate Votes New Probe of Comics, TV Programs

The Senate voted recently to conduct a new probe into the influence of comic books and TV crime programs on juvenile delinquency. Senator Estes Kefauver, who headed the Senate Crime Investigating Committee in 1950, has been named chairman of an inquiry group which will function as a subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The first order of business for the subcommittee is to consider a report criticizing the television industry for putting a constant fare of crime and brutality before America's children. Staff members of a former committee monitored television programs of seven leading New York stations. They found an average of 6.2 acts of violence an hour on these telecasts. They also reported that children's television hours, 5-7 p.m., were "twice as saturated with violence as any other hours." The report charges that the trend is towards more crime and violence on TV shows.

Appointed to serve with Sen. Kefauver are Senators Hennings, Johnston, Langer and Wiley. All of the subcommittee members are active churchmen and several of them are Sunday-school teachers.

Gen. Wilfred Kitching, the world leader of the Salvation Army, said in London recently that there is a "much better chance of peace today," than within the past five years. He also said that the Salvation Army's biggest problem in America is recruiting young people for its officers.

An increase in the number of Protestants among the natives of Netherlands New Guinea from 80,000 to 140,000 since 1940 was reported by officials of the Missions Council of the Netherlands Reformed Church. The report was made at ceremonies marking the 100th anniversary of the launching of missionary work on New Guinea, the world's second largest island and its least explored area.

Chapel attendance in the army, navy and air force reached a total of more than 43,000,000 during the past year. In that time 146 preaching missions and 31 chaplains' retreats were held by the various branches of the military service, in addition to those sponsored by individual denominations.

During February more than 150 Methodist clergymen and laymen from 40 states toured the island of Cuba in a ten-day intensive "Cuba for Christ" campaign. An intensive house-to-house visitation was planned as part of the campaign.

Southern Baptist Convention membership rose to an all-time high of more than 8,000,000 in 1954. Giving to all causes by the denomination topped the $300,000,000 mark for the first time. Church membership represented a gain of 3.8 per cent over 1953.

Regarding Brethren Service in Europe

This is the fifth in a series of five interpretative articles in preparation for One Great Hour of Sharing

Dear Friends,

So far our letters of our work here have given you only part of the picture of Brethren Service work in Europe. Today I would like to give you a bird's-eye view of the whole work of Brethren Service in Europe. Many of our visitors after seeing the program have remarked, "We had no idea that the Brethren work was so large, or that Brethren Service was doing so much."

1. Material Aid Program: This program includes the giving of food, clothing and medicines, as well as bedding, seeds, artificial legs and arms, crutches and any other type of material help to the poor and needy and sick. Much is given to refugees. Much goes to old folks' homes, sanitoriums, orphanages and hospitals. Where it is possible in this program we try to get people to help themselves. To get people to do some type of work for help received requires skill and imagination. Through our gift shop, for example, we sell handwork, wood carvings and leather work made by refugees for the material aid they receive. Our material aid director is planning selfhelp mobile units to consist of treadle-model sewing machines, shoe-repair tools and equipment, a loom and other craft materials to go from one refugee camp to another in order to bring work and a sense of independence to the people in these camps.

We are now receiving U. S. government surplus dried milk, powdered eggs, cheese and butter to distribute.

Probably the greatest part of this program is the hope, joy and renewed faith it brings to those who are hungry, cold or sick when they know someone loves them or cares enough to supply some need.

2. The Heifer Program: In conjunction with the Heifer Project Committee, we give cows to refugee farmers in Germany and Austria. Plans are now being made to send cows to experimental stations in Greece. Many Greek farmers cannot support a cow on his land, with the present crop production. Therefore, cows must go first to these experimental farms. We have given hatching eggs, chickens, bees and turkeys to the Greek team through the Heifer Project Committee.

3. Refugee Resettlement Program: This program has been reopened since in 1953 President Eisenhower signed the Refugee Relief Act, which authorizes 214,000 refugees and escapees from communism to immigrate to the U. S. A. over a three-year period. Brethren Service hopes to process 1,000 families—that would be one family for each church across the Brotherhood. We know that those of you who are so richly blessed will want to do something to help these people who are in despair. Our offices in Linz, Austria, and Kassel, Germany, get the families ready, and aid them in getting through the red tape.

4. Student Exchange Program: The Brethren Service Commission has sponsored over 550 German students in the United States—each going to school, to church and being a part of an American family for a year. Our work on this side includes preparing them psychologically for their year in the U. S., visiting parents of students in America and following up after the student returns, encouraging him to introduce new ideas as he is able. Unfortunately, the State Department is cutting down this program. These young people are the future Germany and Austria. Once they learn to know Americans and are known by them, love and understanding replace much of the prejudice and propaganda spread during the last two wars.

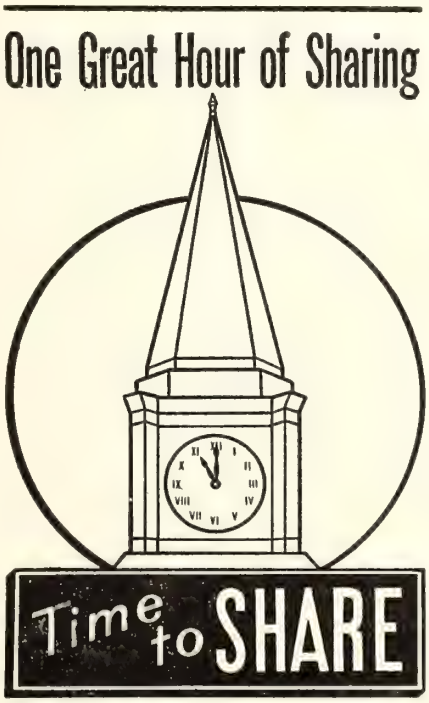
We are trying to make this truly an exchange program by getting American youth to live in Europe and go to school for one year. This year we have four American youth living in German homes and two others attending universities. We have also had pastoral exchange.

5. Brethren Volunteer Service and 1-W Service Work: This program includes both the regular Brethren volunteers and the I-W men working in alternative service. This is a great opportunity to spread Christian beliefs and pacifism through daily living. These volunteers are placed in various needy jobs all over Europe. They work in hospitals, sanitoriums, orphanages and old folks' homes. They work as counselors and spiritual advisers and recreational supervisors in refugee camps. Rebuilding projects, farm projects, land drainage projects, experimental farm projects and neighborhood work in slum areas are all included in the program. Home demonstrations in canning, gardening and child care challenge our young people in Greece.



Wherever the project the question is always asked, "Why are you, an American, here working for us?" A I-W man may explain that because he has been drafted and because he believes war is wrong, he is not willing to serve in the military system. When the "why" question comes to a BVS'er who may be either a young woman or young man, he explains that he is not drafted. However, his religion has inspired him to give two years in service for the church. This message of pacifism is startling and disturbing. For the Europeans to learn that the great American government provides alternative service for conscientious objectors is quite new and astounding to many people. France, for example, does not recognize C.O.'s but classifies them immediately as traitors and throws them into jail.

6. International Work Camp Program: This program has great possibilities in helping to create world peace through the building of international goodwill and understanding. More and more socially minded international leaders are stressing the importance of international work camps in areas of tension to help resolve these conflicts. The work projects are such as these: building refugee houses, hospitals, schools or water systems. Again it may be social work with children in a refugee camp or hospital ward. In the summer of 1954 we had 220 campers participating from 21 different nations in 10 work camps.

They have transcended language, nationalism, religions, color and food barriers. In one camp there were two Jewesses and three Arabs, in another camp there were Mohammedans, Jews, Protestants and Catholics.

7. Community Work: This program consists of sewing and language classes, supervised recreation for neighborhood children and social activities. In Linz a medical center is in operation as a community service.

In this work we realize that we are only a very small minority; we are only a grain of sand on the huge beach of the world; we are only a weak voice among the many loud voices. But we have the assurance that the "Right Man" is on our side. He started with only twelve. So when the opposing voices are shouting for armies, guns, bombs and more wars we continue quietly in our way of endeavoring to use the methods brought and taught by the Prince of Peace, knowing that it is a slow process. In God's own good time it will bear fruit. We have the promise that the church of Christ cannot fail and that good will ultimately triumph over evil.

Refugee Resettlement Notes

Just approved by the administrator of the Refugee Relief Act is a new procedure making job-assurances acceptable when endorsed by a recognized voluntary agency (such as Brethren Service Commission through Church World Service). This permits the elimination of the employment service job clearance order.

Beginning immediately the job-assurance may be for either:

1. A SPECIFIC JOB cleared by the local employment service as formerly, or

2. A SPECIFIC JOB endorsed by the Brethren Service Commission and Church World Service. Referral to the employment service is not required if all the specifications are clearly and completely written on the assurance forms, or

3. A JOB OFFER in a category of employment to be provided by the assurer in a particular locality after the refugee arrives—(e. g. a farmer in Boone County or a carpenter in Cleveland)—when endorsed by the Brethren Service Commission and Church World Service. Referral to the employment service is not required.

We advise sponsors to secure a specific job, if at all possible, at the time the assurance forms are filled out or, that is, to use alternative 2 and to use alternative 3 only in special cases. The assistance of the employment service is still available to us and in many cases it will be to your advantage to consult them regarding jobs about which you may have questions.

With the added help on job-assurances we should be enabled in the coming weeks to file many assurances. We now ought to redouble our efforts in behalf of the refugees who look to us for the only way to start life anew in the U.S.A.

It's a Split Vacation for John Smith

Philip C. Jones

ANY similarity between the imaginary character about to be described herewith and any actual person will be purely coincidental, as though anyone would care whether it were or not!

Our hero is John Smith from Tinytown, Texas. (He might be a native of Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, Ogden, Utah, Montgomery, Ala., or Rumford, Maine.) He is twenty-five years of age. Currently he is employed as an accountant in a wholesale grocery concern, but he spends a lot of his spare time and energy in working with boys. He teaches a class in the junior high department of the West Trail church, and is assistant scoutmaster of Troop 4, B.S.A. He is a deacon in his church (in fact, the youngest one).

John is one of those practical and energetic young fellows who not only dream about the future, especially about their coming vacations, but who also do something about making their dreams come true. Already, he has told his friends about his plans for the summer of 1955. The first part of his holidays he will spend in his car, "tires spinning and fancy free," visiting Williamsburg, Va., the Naval Academy in Annapolis and Washington. Then he will drive to Cleveland, Ohio, by way of Niagara Falls.

The last part of his time off will be more than a sight-seeing jaunt, though there will be a good bit of that in Cleveland-by-Lake-Erie. He plans to attend the Twenty-Third International Sunday School Convention to be held there July 27 to 31, under the auspices of the Division of Christian Education of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U.S.A., in co-operation with the Department of Christian Education of the Canadian Council of Churches. In fact, not only has he told his friends about his vacation plans; he has also been trying to persuade two of the other teachers in his church school to go along with him. (Perhaps they will share the travel expense, he may have been thinking from time to time!)

The minister of John's church, Rev. Alert Pastorius (any similarity between the imaginary character and any actual person will be purely coincidental) had told him about the convention in the first place and had suggested his attendance, assuring him that the officers of the church would pay his registration fee and help to meet his expenses while in Cleveland.

John kept reading over the folder describing the convention. It seemed more exciting every time he looked at it. He had one quandary, though, and that was about which interest group he should attend during the mornings. It was easy for him to see that he would not get much help from the sessions dealing with methods of guiding kindergarten children or from those considering the leadership of adult groups in the church. Finally he decided that the interest group, Adults Working With Youth 12-13 Years of Age, would be most helpful.

Of course, John looked forward eagerly to the Bible study sessions as well as the meetings with other junior high teachers. He knew, too, that he would enjoy the convocations planned for him and the others in his denomination, but he felt most excited when he thought of the wider fellowship he would have the opportunity to share. He had always liked interdenominational youth rallies and other similar interchurch affairs, and so he felt a quiver of delight as he anticipated meeting with ten thousand other church school leaders, not even knowing, in most cases, in what denominations they held their church memberships. It seemed to him something like a new crusade, though there would not be any long and hungry marches, hardships and fighting involved.

This particular part of the convention, in his thinking, fitted in somehow with the modern trends in the world, with all the new intimacies between people brought about by easier and swifter travel, faster communications and the new political activities of the nations. (He had often thought about the impossibility of telling Baptists from Lutherans or Methodists from Episcopalians or Presbyterians from Disciples, unless one went to church services with them or got to talking about denominational differences, church organizations and things like that.)

Elements of the convention about which he speaks most enthusiastically to his friends whom he is trying to persuade to accompany him to Cleveland are the assembly sessions to be held in the public auditorium, with the choir of hundreds of voices rendering stirring anthems, the congregational singing of the great hymns of the church, and the addresses by the noted speakers about whom he had often heard and whom he was eager to see in person. And he became really eloquent when he spoke about the great pageant to be held in connection with the opening assembly.

Harry and Paul (the two friends he hopes will take in the convention with him) are nearly hypnotized when John talks on and on about the mechanical arrangements for these huge meetings, with the amplification scheme and the air conditioning. Naturally, he keeps "letting himself go" as he tells about the big Sunday afternoon meeting which will deal with Christian education in other countries and in which, among leaders from all of the continents, there will be in attendance Mr. J. Arthur Rank of London (the noted motion picture producer) and Lord Mackintosh of Halifax. As he said to his friends, he feels that "there is something just right in stressing the world-wide character of our Christian faith in these days of fast changes in affairs of the world, and all we can do to increase the sense of our oneness in Christ is just that much more impetus given to the cause of universal peace and brotherhood."

John dreamed a bit also, from time to time, about the ways he might report on the convention when he returned to his church. He could see himself telling the church officers and Rev. Pastorius about the meetings, as he thanked them for helping him with his expenses. He was sure the boys in his class and the scouts in Troop 4 would want to hear about everything. (He was glad he planned to stay over an extra day in Cleveland to see the Indians play a league game in the municipal stadium, for they would surely want to hear all about that!) He would take pictures to show—of scenes in Cleveland and come close-ups of other delegates and some of the speakers, if he got a chance. Probably they would want him to speak to the other teachers of the church school at the organization dinner in the autumn. Perhaps they would even ask him to speak to the whole school on rally day.

John Smith is an imaginary character teaching in an imaginary church school, but the Cleveland convention is the "real thing," and the kinds of dreams John had are those of a great many of the ten thousand delegates-to-be. The experiences they think about expectantly are really going to come true.

P. S. (added later)—Harry and Paul have decided to go to the convention with John. In fact, they have already sent to their denominational headquarters to get registration blanks, and John is asking his pastor to see what he can do about getting them help toward their expenses. They will all have a "wonderful time," meeting a lot of new people from all over—from San Diego to Hartford, from Prince Ruppert to Miami, from Corpus Christi to Ottawa. When they get back to Tinytown they will be better teachers; they will have sharp and kindling memories of thrilling inspirational experiences; and their awareness of the inclusive and world wide character of the Christian church will be a source of constant stimulus and unfailing reassurance.

NEW MATERIALS

For youth leaders: Some Facts About Juvenile Delinquency, 10c. Prepared for the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Health, Education and Welfare by the special juvenile delinquency project, it contains summaries and pertinent facts about juvenile delinquency in the United States. E. g., "FBI reports show that more than half (51%) of all persons arrested for crimes against property in 1953 were people who had not yet reached their twenty-first birthday."

The Christian Home magazine is being used by many of our churches for study groups, family reading, family worship and other purposes. The Brethren Publishing House reports that the present circulation is around 1,100 copies. There is evidence that there is a wider usage of the magazine than this. The purport of this particular statement is to encourage you to send your subscriptions to the Brethren Publishing House, 22 S. State St., Elgin Ill. The Methodist Publishing House expects you to do this. Although published by the Methodists, this magazine has been officially adopted for the Church of the Brethren as our home and family life magazine. The annual subscription is $2; group subscriptions are $1.80. Encourage all families to subscribe.

Two new pieces of material in the field of marriage and family life education for high school students have been added to the Brethren Loan Library and approved for promotion jointly by the youth department and the family life department. They are: Your Marriage and Family Living, a textbook by Paul H. Landis, State Professor of Rural Sociology, State College of Washington, price, $3.20; and Teacher's Kit in Family Life Education in Secondary Schools, a packet set up by the National Council on Family Relations to help high school teachers who are planning to give a course in high school in the field of marriage and family life, price, $2.50. Order for examination from the Brethren Loan Library, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Concerning Laymen

The church's greatest single need today is not more machinery or better, not new organizations or more and novel methods, but men whom the Holy Spirit can use. Throughout the world a new awakening is coming to laymen as to the importance of their witness. This finds expression in their daily living, in business and in community service. Many laymen support their local churches with outstanding devotion; others seek wider fields as counselors of youth, leaders and preachers to pastorless churches. They use their talents in numerous projects for a better world. Let us remember that the Holy Spirit flows through men.

The International Christian University

A CHRISTIAN Japan could become the brightest hope in Asia today. The totalitarian forces which built up militarism and drove Japan into a disastrous war against the liberal forces of the West are today dormant. But they could be rebuilt. Also, Japan could succumb to the false and contaminating Communist propaganda which comes flooding across from Russia. China has already become engulfed. India remains in considerable uncertainty. Wave after wave of communism is sweeping across Indo-China; and if Indo-China falls, a direct pathway leads to Thailand, Burma and Indonesia. Already communism has captured a third of the entire population of the world. And it is strongly advancing.

Japan today in the long view is one of the most strategic and critical spots in the world. The concepts of democracy and human freedom are knocking insistently at Japan's gates, demanding revolutionary changes in her thinking, her ways of life, her international objectives. With her great industrial potentialities, with her hardworking, self-disciplined people, intensely loyal to the ideals implanted in their hearts, with her strategic geographic position on the Eastern seaboard, Japan could well turn the tide of history in Asia.

But Christianity in Japan has had an unhappy past. For over 200 years Christianity was held a capital offense and Japanese were taught to fear the "evil sect." Today only a fringe of Japanese are Christians —less than 400,000 out of a population of some 87 million. Can the mass of Japanese farmers and fishermen and city dwellers be brought, before it is too late, to understand and believe in the great teachings and concepts of Jesus Christ? This is the supreme question in the Asia of our generation.

One of the most effective ways to Veteran American diplomat and former chairman of the United Nations Trusteeship Council; recently returned from Japan where he served as the personal secretary of the presiding bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in this country.

weave Christianity into the thinking of a country is to impart Christian concepts to growing students, who will become the leaders of the coming generation. For this purpose men of high vision, in the years immediately following the disastrous war, founded in Japan the International Christian University.

Some of these were stalwart Christians in other countries. Some were Japanese, receptive and friendly to the conquering ideas of the West. Almost half a million dollars were contributed by the Japanese themselves.

The International Christian University is a new venture in Japan. organized only since the war, it has now some 350 students, coming from Japan, China, India, Korea, Siam and the United States, with an administrative and academic faculty of over 80 coming from Canada, Europe, Asia and the United States. Its faculty and trustees are 100% Christian, a standard to which few, if any other, Christian universities in Japan have been able to attain. Unlike most other Japanese universities, it is establishing a dormitory system so that faculty and students can live and study and work together on the campus as a large Christian family. Denominationalism and sectarianism have no place at I.C.U.; all try to be faithful followers of Jesus Christ as each understands what that means. The curriculum is built upon the humanities. The objective is a search for truth, based upon the reality of human brotherhood. The particular aim is to prepare men and women for teaching, for government work and for social work programs.

International Christian University in a venture of courage and faith. The outcome lies in the hands of God. The eyes of Christians all over the world are on I.C.U.

For the current year the Church of the Brethren, through the Brotherhood Fund, will contribute $2,000 toward the support of the Japan International Christian University. Bro. A. G. Breidenstine of Lancaster, Pa., is the Brethren representative on the board of directors of the university.

Japan was one of the first stops on the round-the-world tour of Dr. and Mrs. L. S. Shively of Muncie, Ind. While in Tokyo they paid a visit to the International Christian University. What follows is taken from their diary of Oct. 30, 1954.

At the International Christian University we were introduced to President Hachiro Yuasa and had a conference with him in which he told of the founding of the school and of its aims. President Yuasa was educated in the universities of Illinois, Chicago and Columbia.

The International Christian University is in its second year and so has only freshmen and sophomore classes with a total of something over 300 students. Their aim is to have 900 students and this, with a faculty and administration staff, will make a unit of about 1,000 persons. They have a farm which is to supply food.

The screening process for admission is very thorough. Only those in the upper fifteen percent of their high school classes may make application for admission. Students of any or no religious faith are admitted, but all faculty members must be Christian. They are building a strong faculty. Emil Brunner is a member of the faculty for a two- or three-year assignment. We were introduced to him.

Their academic building is large and well equipped. A chapel is partly completed and is in use. Dormitories and a dining hall soon will be ready for use. They have a dozen or more homes for faculty members.

A visitor on the campus of the University soon has the feeling that here is an institution that is not only Christian in name but also in fact. Every member of the faculty is a Christian as well as a scholar in his particular field. And the combining of these two requirements is very rare indeed among the institutions of higher learning throughout the world.

The International Christian University is the leading coeducational institution of higher learning in Japan. Twenty-eight per cent of the student body of the College of Liberal Arts are women

Out of the Mailbag

"This past Sunday three young men remained after our morning worship to enroll in a class which is studying for membership in the Church of the Brethren and the Church of Christ in Nigeria. All three of them were from a village in which several of our teacher trainee students have been going on evangelistic tours every Sunday for several years. These are the first men of that village to make the public break and take this step of faith leading to their salvation and, eventually we believe, to the salvation of many others in their village."

Ivan Eikenberry, Nigeria

"Maria Natividad, a sweet little Indian baby whose mother died in childbirth, came to keep me company when she was only four days old. The aged grandmother was giving her only sugar water because they really don't know how to feed a baby without a mother's milk. When the grandmother was asked what would have happened to the baby without my help, she replied, 'Oh, it would have died.' So I am enjoying taking care of a healthy baby for a few months."

COMPARATIVE STATISTICS FOR 1953 and 1954

For the Church of the Brethren in the United States and Canada as reported for the years ending Sept. 30, 1953, and Sept. 30, 1954

You will note some interesting items in these statistics for the year just closed. There was nearly a 2% gain in membership this year and only slightly over 1% gain last; however, we had only 408 more baptisms! Evangelism is taking hold, but needs far more attention. Inactive resident members decreased by nearly 10% of the last year's total. Twenty-eight more full-time pastors now serve our churches. There is a good gain in the number of congregations—eight. Can't we begin soon to double and triple this gain? Sunday-school enrollment went up by more than eight thousand and attendance by nearly five thousand. This is heartening. Financially good gains were made, also. Pastors' salaries increased; more churches need to do more at this point. Capital building expense held almost steady, while over-all giving increased by nearly $400,000. Let us take heart with these gains, study our weaknesses and press on. "Seek First His Kingdom."

Southern California and Arizona

La Verne—On Sunday evenings we are continuing some variation of our University of Life series. During January the emphasis was on mission work in India with special attention to the changing situation in this great field. Separate class groups enjoyed addresses by different speakers as when Dr. Bartlett of Claremont spoke on Old Tasks in a New Setting. On Jan. 16 Bro. Clarence Heckman of our Nigerian mission field brought the message. Our congregation met in regular quarterly council on Jan. 19, with Moderator Crawford Brubaker presiding. The pastor's report showed a net gain of sixteen in membership for the quarter. We are to join with the churches of Pomona Valley in an attendance crusade. Special plans are scheduled for the coming months which include a study of the life of Paul for the month of March, Easter services for April and a home and family emphasis for May. The plans and survey committee was authorized to have the architect prepare more detailed plans for the proposed addition to the church plant. The building fund committee recommended a special fund raising campaign to run from April 1 to May 15. Bro G. O. Stutsman presented the latest information about the newest district project, the Lynnhaven church now being built near Phoenix, Ariz. Our congregation has contributed more than $2,500 toward this project thus far.—H. A. Brandt, La Verne, Calif.

Northern California

McFarland—Our church was host to the district conference. Sharing was stressed at Christmas time. Many packets were sent overseas. Several weeks before Christmas toys were collected, repaired and painted by our young people. The needs of our local community had been presented and on the night of our Christmas program groceries and clothing were brought to the church. These gifts were distributed by the young people, their advisers and the pastor. The youth fellowship purchased eighteen new Bibles to be given with the material aids. In December Sara Shisler gave an address on her work in Nigeria. We gave special emphasis to missions during the month of January. Dr. Merlin Brubaker from the Africa mission showed pictures and told of his work in the leper colony. Jerry Davis, one of our local boys who with his family is on furlough, gave an illustrated lecture of the work in Puerto Rico. The church decided to sponsor a refugee family and plans are being carried through by the men's work organization. At a recent council meeting our pastor presented a challenging goal for our church in mission work and evangelism. Bro. Loren Bowman assisted in our evangelistic meetings Feb. 21-27. Recently Bro. C. C. Louder of North Canton, Ohio, was our guest speaker.—Mrs. A. R. Grober, McFarland, Calif.

Modesto—During the month of December the choir under the direction of Gordon Nutson received their new choir robes. The choir presented a Sunday evening musical program in February. In December the general church board appointed a committee to survey possible locations for a second church if and when it might seem advisable to begin work in another community. We are sponsoring two teams in the Y.M.C.A. basketball league. A full week of evangelism visitation was held during the third week of January. The week of March 20 to 27 has been set for our spring meetings with Claude Dadisman of Waterford as our evangelist. Our school of missions was held in January with Winona Harvey in charge of the school. A school of community living is planned for the month of March. In December the women's work group sponsored a family talent night. Eleven children were dedicated during December. A teacher's training course was conducted during January and February for all Sunday-school teachers, helpers and those interested in becoming teachers. Mrs. Robert Boucher is the editor for the Chimes, a monthly edition of church news.—Bertha Bailey, Modesto, Calif.

Washington

Seattle, Lakewood—Our men took charge of the morning service on Laymen's Sunday with Arthur E. Owley as speaker. Delegates to the district meeting in Yakima were K. D. Nelson and Mrs. Ted Schmidt. Our guest speaker on Nov. 21 was Bro. Harl Russell, Brotherhood Fund Secretary. The junior and senior choirs sang carols for shut-ins on two evenings prior to Christmas. On Sunday evening, Dec. 19, our Sunday-school children assisted by the combined choirs presented The City of David. —Mrs. J. W. Ralston, Seattle, Wash.

MAID OF ISRAEL

Tolbert R. Ingram

"Lord, open the eyes of these men." So prayed the indomitable prophet, Elisha, after he led into the capital city of Israel the five hundred fully armed Syrians who sought to take him prisoner.

This episode is a part of a much larger story, told in the Bible and vividly recreated in Maid of Israel. This is an exciting Old Testament novel, a love story as well as an account of corruption and intrigue in a nation that had turned from God.

The steadfast faith of the young girl in the story will stir your imagination.

Denver, First—Since our organization in August 1954, we have received two members by baptism and seven by letter into our fellowship. On the afternoon of Nov. 28, we entertained the McPherson College quintet. On the evening of Dec. 19 Comer Alden, our Christian educational director, and Mrs. Viola Turner, our minister of music, directed the youth choir and angel choir in presenting the Christmas program, Let Earth Rejoice. Our elder, Bro. H. M. Coppock, was with us in our recent council meeting. One tenth of our regular offerings and all birthday offerings and anniversary memorials are added to our building fund. The second Sunday of every month is fellowship Sunday and is observed by a dinner in the church. At our last dinner, we honored our senior deacon, Bro. Harvey Lilly, who is now eighty-one years old. We are enjoying a steady increase in attendance and interest. The women's work group sent a Christmas gift of money to the Lybrook Indian mission. We prepared and delivered good cheer boxes to shut-ins at Christmas time.—Emma Beckner Hamm, Denver, Colo.

First Grand Valley—The first of September our church welcomed our new pastor and his wife, Brother and Sister Lewis Naylor. Bro. Frank Weaver retired as our pastor having served us faithfully for ten years. Brother and Sister Weaver now make their home in Fruita and continue to have fellowship in our church. The men's group elected Paul Mitchel as president. The group's project was to remodel the parsonage. Our church schedule has been changed to Sunday school at 10:00 a.m. and morning worship at 11:00 o'clock. Our Sunday evening programs are as follows: first, family night; second, CBYF program; third, CB YF Bible study; fourth, all-church night; and fifth, CBYF recreation. In November open house was held at our newly remodeled parsonage. Our church is sponsoring a Cub Scout group. Our Sunday-school Christmas party was held Dec. 18 and the Christmas program was presented on Dec. 19. In January the men's group held a deerburger fry.—Mrs. Paul Mitchel, Grand Junction, Colo.

Northwestern Kansas

Quinter—Two carloads of young people from our church attended the National Youth Conference. During the pastor's vacation, Wayne Crist was with us. A local youth, Leon Neher, sailed in September for India, where he is an exchange student at the Anand College of Agriculture, Bombay State, India. The young people sponsored a lemonade social with the proceeds being used to put up a large church directory listing all the churches in town. These directories were placed by the highway on each side of town. At council meeting Floyd Crist was re-elected moderator for our local congregation and the church and Sunday-school officers were elected for the coming year.—Mrs. Melvin Reinecker, Quinter, Kansas.

Victor—Our church which is located near Covert, Kansas, has made a comeback both in interest and church attendance. The undersigned who is located more than one hundred miles from the church has been serving as part-time pastor. Five persons have been received into the church by baptism. In November a five-day series of meetings was held during the Thanksgiving vacation. At the conclusion of the meetings, we held our love feast services. At this time three were received by letter and one by baptism into our fellowship. The pastorate of our church has been assigned to Kenneth Fancher, a student minister from McPherson. A new altar setting has been created back of the pulpit. Bro. Fancher and the young people have painted signs which they are placing by two different highways leading Kearney—Friends and relatives of Lydia Evans presented dorsal drapes to the church in her memory. Our church has been redecorated on the interior, and the exterior also has been painted. The Boy Scouts assisted by their leaders landscaped our church grounds. A number of our youth attended family camp this year. The district conference was held in our church this year. Pastor Foster Myers will continue his work in our church. A fellowship supper is held once each month. The girls' quartet from McPherson College was with us in November. All the children and young people took part in the Christmas program. Brother and Sister Earle R. Bond have moved from our community to Freeport, Ill.—Mrs. Russell N. Johnson, Kearney, Nebr.

Northern Indiana

Cedar Creek—Our prayer group has been studying the Book of Matthew. Brother and Sister Charles Bloom were installed as deacon and deaconess with Bro. George in charge of the service. The guest speaker at our temperance program was the Rev. Eckerly. The children gave a Christmas program the evening of Dec. 23. Our junior boys and girls took gift baskets to and sang carols at the convalescent home. The young people presented a Christmas play on Dec. 26.—Lucile C. Riccius, Avilla, Ind.

Michigan City—Bro. Harper S. Will of South Bend is our presiding elder. He conducted the installation service for our new pastor and his wife, Brother and Sister Ralph G. Rarick. The Michigan City Ministerium was represented on this occasion by Rev. Wesley P. Hustad, pastor of the First Baptist church. The Rarick observed open house the first Sunday of the new year. Bro. Rarick, as a member of the city ministerial association, is assisting with devotional broadcasts on the radio. Our growing youth group participates in the entire church program. In a recent church service there was special recognition of the eighty-fifth birthday of Sister Minnie Gorden, who is the oldest member of our Michigan City parish. Brother and sister Robert R. Swank, formerly in pastoral charge of the Blissville church and now in training at Bethany Biblical Seminary for the mission field, have placed their letter with us. On Sunday, Jan. 16, they were with us in our services along with four other ministers and their wives from Bethany. They directed an inspirational service with the main pulpit message by Bro. Paul Hoffman.—Maude Mansfield, Michigan City, Mich.

West Goshen—Our church met in quarterly council Jan. 25, with Bro. M. D. Stutsman elder-in-charge. One member has been received into our church on former baptism. Our love feast will be held April 12. Delegates to Annual Conference will be M. D. Stutsman and Clair Kauffman. The improvement committee is planning to break ground soon for a two-story educational building. Several of our young people attended the National Youth Conference. Bro. Samuel Longnecker was with us in a series of meetings. Our school of missions began on Sunday evening Jan. 30, with the theme of India. Anna Warstler talked to all five classes during the first period and to the whole assembly on Feb. 13 and 20. We also showed the film, Valley of the Sun, during the school—Mrs. M. C. During November and December our ladies' aid sponsored a special drive for relief goods, not only for old clothes, but for new things and for canned goods. This group tied two comforters and has a number of boxes ready for the relief truck. On New Year's Eve the entire church enjoyed a party held at the home of Harry Roy. Following the recreation and refreshments, the evening was climaxed with a worship service.—Donna McCaman, Evart Mich.

Shepherd—A co-operative Bible school was held with the Evangelical United Brethren church. Our church is giving partial support to Brother and Sister Joseph Schechter, who are serving on the Indian mission field. At a special service conducted by Bro. Ernest Jehnsen of Beaverton, Mich., Brother and Sister Roy Spencer and Brother and Sister Allen Weihl were installed into the office of deacon and our pastor, Dean Rohrer, was ordained to the eldership. Bro. D. G. Berkebile held revival services in our church. Five new members were received into the church fellowship. The youth sectional meeting was held in our church. The young adult Sunday-school class recently presented the church with a new projector. Richard Foust of Dayton, Ohio, who recently returned from Europe after two years of alternative service, talked in our church on Sunday morning, Dec. 19. In the evening of the same day our Christmas program was held in the form of a candlelight service. Gloria and Phyllis David of Muskegon, Mich., who have been in Europe with the international work campers, talked and showed pictures of their experience. Eleven of our group attended a district workshop at the Rodney church on Jan. 15. The district ministers' retreat was held in our church on Feb. 11-12.—Mildred Spencer, Mt. Pleasant, Mich.

Woodland—At the home-coming services Rev. Fay Wing of the Church of Christ was guest speaker for the morning service. Russell Kantner, a Methodist layman of Hastings, led in the adult Sunday-school discussion. In the afternoon devotions were conducted by Rev. Frank Moxon of the United Brethren church and historical presentation of the local church was given by Susie Fisher and Arlie Spindler. Our women's work group prepared a number of friendship packets at Christmas time. This group also made contributions to the district women's work budget, alternative service, nurses' home at Bethany Hospital, Red Cross, Michigan Temperance Foundation, our district camp and a number of other projects. Bro. Wilbur Bantz of Decatur, Ill., conducted our evangelistic meetings. A Christmas program was presented on Dec. 19 followed by the receiving of one new member by baptism and one by letter into our church. District Meeting—Arthur H. Hess, Bernard N. King and Harold Steiner were elected Standing Committee delegates from our district. Officers elected for the 1955 district conference were Bernard N. King, moderator; Harlan C. Grubb, alternate moderator; E. G. Diehm, writing clerk; and Curtis Dubble, reading clerk. The delegates approved a goal of $44,000 for the Brotherhood Fund. They also approved the group insurance plan for ministers and the plan of the district mission board to establish a mission at Painsville, Ohio. Guest speakers for our district meeting were Edward K. Ziegler and David J. Wieand. The 1955 district conference will be held Aug. 30—Sept. 1, at Camp Zion.—E. G. Diehm, Youngstown, Ohio.

Canton, Maple Avenue—On Laymen Sunday, our deacon, Homer Hilty, gave the morning message. Bro. Arthur Hess conducted a week of evangelistic meetings for us. One Sunday evening Bro. Hess was in charge of a consecration service for three newly elected deacons and their wives. This year we held our Thanksgiving service around a fellowship table. On Dec. 19 we took gifts and were in charge of a program for the guests at the old folks' home. On Sunday evening prior to Christmas we had our candlelight service. On New Year's Eve we had a program in the reception room of the church followed by a worship service in the sanctuary. Thirty churches in Canton held evangelistic meetings Jan. 2-9. Elder J. D. Ziegler was our evangelist. Ethel Bruce gave a review of the book, In the Steps of Jesus, at the Dorcas society meeting at which the ladies of the First church were our guests. Our young people have been active under the leadership of George Doershuk. On three successive Sunday evenings they had filmstrips on boy-girl relationships. The young people also have a basketball team.—Plizzie Maust Meyers, Canton, Ohio.

Woodworth—Since August our church has been engaged in a building program involving a new addition. We plan to have it completed and to have dedication for it on April 17. Extra land has been purchased for church parking. A new heating system for the whole church has been installed. Two have been baptized into our fellowship since our last report. Midweek Bible and prayer services have continued through the winter months. Recently junior worship services have been started at the opening worship of Sunday school under the direction of Mrs. Ben Young. Mrs. J. Calvin Bright was with us for a week end. Our church again participated in a community Thanksgiving service with our pastor, Bro. Alvin C. Cook, as speaker. Christmas programs were presented by the Sunday-school children and an evening musical service by the young people. The CBYF distributed cheer boxes to shut-ins. The women's work has a planned program of relief sewing and study of a certain theme each month. They provided refreshments for the men at the church on work nights. Twelve young people from our church attended the winter rally at the Ashland church. The filmstrip, Unto These My Brethren, was shown recently in our church. On Feb. 9, the Billy Graham film, Mr. Texas, was shown to our congregation and community.—Mrs. Alvin C. Cook, Poland, Ohio.

LION AND LAMB

WHETHER March leaves us with the wild fury of a lion or the calm patience of a lamb, it should be appropriate at the beginning of spring to watch lambs in the barnyard where they seek the warm light of the sun. Sometimes the sheep is regarded as rather a foolish animal who is criticized simply for being "sheepish," as if he could be anything else. Yet the Bible gives a different cast to the foolishness of the sheep. They resemble persons who are "lost" without a Shepherd. They are so important to the Shepherd that he will seek for one that is lost even though he has ninety-nine safely in tow. Yet they keep getting lost from the Shepherd because they turn "each to his own way" and miss the careful guidance that would take each one through the valley of the shadow of death as well as in the paths of righteousness or beside still waters.

As Easter approaches we need to remember that our Lord is not only our Shepherd but he is also the Lamb of God who takes away the sins of the world. Because he chose the way of the lamb, and stood before his tormentors as a silent sheep before its shearers, he has prepared the way for the peaceable kingdom where both the lion and lamb shall dwell together.

READERS WRITE . . . to the editor

The Gospel Messenger welcomes letters commenting on editorials, articles and news. Letters should be brief and brotherly.

What Does Your Church Mean to You?

I believe our leaders and also the lay members take Christianity too lightly. The result is that our church is almost equally divided between the faithful Christians and the unfaithful and disinterested. I suspect if we would contact each member and ask him why he is a member of the Church of the Brethren we would get answers like this: because some minister had begged him to place his membership with them or some close friend or loved one wanted him to join and he couldn't say no. Actions speak louder than words. After two or three times in church he would be found in other places rather than in the house of the Lord.

I believe it would be much better to see one converted and truly repent of his sins than to see numbers put upon our church records who have been coaxed in. Until our church becomes more spiritual its going to become weaker and more worldly. My Bible teaches me that Christ is coming after a church without spot and blemish. . . .

I do agree with E. F. Sherfy that God loves one family as much as another but we love ours the best because they are ours. The same applies to our church. We should love the Church of the Brethren the best. I'm a firm believer in it and its teachings and believe it will exist until Christ's coming. I also love the Messenger and it is read many times before the daily paper. In conclusion, I would say we should have more doctrinal sermons and try to teach people the way, the truth and light. Instead of seeking numbers we should convert souls. —Margaret Hewitt, Tipton, Ind.

To Cover Up or Lift Up?

Why does your church want music—to cover up or lift up? If a stranger visited your church and sat unobtrusively in a corner at the beginning of the prelude, what would be his observation? As the organ plays, do people come in quietly and acknowledge the presence of God either in prayer or in thankful exultation? Or is this such a friendly informal church that God must wait for the introduction of the first hymn for mouths to close long enough for our hearts to acknowledge him?

It is good for people to enjoy each other, and to like to be together. But there is a strengthening for the fellowship that can approach its Maker reverently and cease worldly noises at the door of the sanctuary. Let us truly bow down together and come into his presence. If our hearts are still restive, let us keep silence for the sake of those who may be seeking their God. The Jews used to begin the observance of their Sabbath on Friday night. Let us begin it at least at the door of our church.

If you consider music truly as an act of worship, do you seat people at appropriate times during the service or are late-comers seated in the middle of a solo or anthem? The musician is offering his worship for the congregation and it should be respected as much as the minister's prayer. If the special music is man's reaching toward God, let us respect it as such, and not consider it for the people's amusement while we take up the offering and seat the late-comer.

In church there is a possibility of great soul stirring and soul searching. The postlude should be chosen with this possibility in mind. The postlude is not a "chaser" but the final moment of a common worship. The music should be fitting, and the people should not break the spirit of worship till they have left the sanctuary. We can never know the heart of another's experience. If God has touched your neighbor let him savor the moment a bit. In the outer hall and outside the world is waiting and will be with you for many hours—even days. Let us handle this one hour of worship with love and sensitiveness.—Helene Crill, Elgin, Ill.

Enjoy Front Covers

For some time I have wanted to let you know how much we enjoy the cover pictures on the Messenger and the accompanying comments which are very helpful and inspiring. The missionary news is challenging; I have used some of this material for a seventh grade geography class. My husband said I should also mention the articles on alcohol one of which he used in a recent talk to reformed drinkers.—Mrs. H. E. McKimmy, Midland, Mich.

I read it for more than fifty years. Would not be without it. Congratulations to the editor and his staff for the excellent material that they publish.—Mrs. Elizabeth Sollenberger, Williamsburg, Pa.

Paul emphasizes the sovereignty of God in his sermon to the Athenians: he is the Creator of everything; he is the Lord of heaven and earth; he gives to all men life and breath and everything.

Street scene in Athens, Greece; in the distance historic Mars Hill, where Paul delivered his address

PAUL was a prophetic preacher, not because he declared himself to be one, but because, out of his experience of reconciliation with God, he saw God in the true New Testament perspective as Creator and Judge and, through Christ, as Redeemer and Reconciler. That is to say, God was the Lord over all of life. Nowhere is this more clearly revealed than in the sermon to the dilettante philosophers of Athens, and this incident can instruct us mightily in two important matters. First, it gives us a valid example of prophetic preaching; secondly, it emphasizes the sovereignty of God, still an offense to our pride and pretense, as the Alpha and Omega of the gospel.
